Paul. There's time enough for that: Lest they desire, upon this push, to trouble Your joys with like relation.-Go together, You precious winners all; your exultation Partake to every one. I, an old turtle, Will wing me to some wither'd bough, and there My mate, that's never to be found again, Lament till I am lost.

Leon. O peace, Paulina! Thou shouldst a husband take by my consent, As I by thine a wife: this is a match, And made between'st by vows. Thou hast found mine;

But how, is to be question'd: for I saw her, As I thought, dead; and have, in vain, said many A prayer upon her grave. I'll not seek far,-For him, I partly know his mind,—to find thee An honourable husband .- Come, Camillo, And take her by the hand, whose worth and honesty

Is richly noted, and here justified By us, a pair of kings.—Let's from this place.-What! look upon my brother:-both your pardons,

That e'er I put between your holy looks My ill suspicion.—This your son-in-law, And son unto the king,—whom heavens directing, daughter.-Good Is troth-plight to your Paulina,

Lead us from hence; where we may leisurely Each one demand, and answer to his part Perform'd in this wide gap of time, since first We were dissever'd: hastily lead away! [Exeunt.

Fig. Old sir, I know
She prizes not such trifles as these are:
The gifts she looks from me are pack'd and lock'd

Up in my heart; which I have given already, But not deliver'd.—O; hear me breathe my life Before this ancient sir, who, it should seem, Hath sometime lov'd.—I take thy hand! this hand,

As soft as dove's down, and as white as it,
Or Ethiopian's tooth. or the fann'd snow that's
By the northern blasts twice o'er. [boited]

Pcl. What follows this?—
How prettily the young swain seems to wash
The hand was fair hefore!—Ihave put you out:
But to your protestation; let me hear

What you profess.

Flo. Do, and be witness to 't. Pol. And this my neighbour too?

Flo. And he, and more Than he, and men,—the earth, the heavens, and all:— [monerch,

That,—were I crown'd the most imperial

I shall have more than you can dream of yet;
Enough then for your wonder: hut come on,
Contract us 'fore these witnesses.

Shep. Come, your hand;-

And, danghter, yours.

Pol. Soft, swain, awhile, beseech you; Have you a father?

Flo. I have: but what of him?

Flo. I have; hut what of him? Pol. Knows he of this?

Flo. He neither does nor shell.

Pol. Methinks a father

Is, at the nnptial of his son, a guest [more; That best becomes the table. Pray you, once Is not your father grown incapable Of reasonable affairs? is he not stupid

With age and altering rheums? can he speak? hear?

Know man from man? dispute his own estate? Lies he not bed-rid? and again does nothing But what he did being childish?

Flo.

No, good sir;
He has his health, and ampler strength indeed
Than most have of his age.

Pol. By my white beard, You offer him, if this he so, a wrong Something unfilial: reason my son Should choose himself a wife; hut as good reason

The father,—all whose joy is nothing else
But fair postenty,—should hold some counsel
In such a business.

Flo. I yield all this;
But, for some other reasons, my grave sir,
Which 'lis not fit you know, I not acquaint
My father of this business.

Pol. Let him know't.

Flo. He shall not.
Pol. Prythee, let him.

Flo. Ro, he must not.

Shep. Let him, my son: he shall not need to grieve

At knowing of thy choice.

Flo. Come, come, he must not.—Mark our contract.

Pol. Mark your divorce, young sir, iDiscovering himself.

Per. Even here undone! I was not much sfeard; for once or twice I was about to speak, and tell him plainly. The self-same sun that shines upon his court Hides not his visage from our cottage, but Looks on alike.—Will't please you, sir, be gone? [To Florizel-I told you what would come of this! Beseech

you,
Of your own state take care: this dream of mine, Being now awake, I'll queen it no inch further, But milk my ewes, and weep.

Cam. Why, how now, father? Speak ere thon diest.

Ege. A heavier task could not have heen impos'd

Than I to speak my griefs unspeakable! Yet, that the world may witness that my end Was wrought hy nature, not by vile offence, I'll utter what my sorrow gives me leave. In Syracusa was I horn; and wed Unto a woman, happy hut for me, And hy me too, had not our hap been had. With her I liv'd in joy; our wealth increas'd By prosperous voyages I often made To Epidamnum, till my factor's death, And he, -great care of goods at random left, Drew me from kind emhracements of my spouse:

From whom my absence was not six months Before herself,—almost at fainting under The pleasing punishment that women hear, Had made provision for her following me, And soon and safe arrived where I was. There she had not heen long but she hecame A joyful mother of two goodly sons; And, which was strange, the one so like the other As could not he distinguish'd hat hy names. That very hour, and in the self-same inn, A poor mean woman was delivered Of such a burden, male twins, both elike: Those, -fortheir parents were exceeding poor, I hought, and brought up to attend my sons. My wife, not meanly proud of two such hoys, Made daily motions for our home return:

Unwilling I agreed; alas, too soon!

We came aboard: A league from Epidamnum had we sail'd Before the always-wind-obeying deep Gave any tragic instance of our harm; But longer did we not retain much hope: For what obscured light the heavens did grant Did but convey unto our fearful minds A doubtful warrant of immediate death; Which, though myself would gladly have embrec'd,

Yet the incessant weepings of my wife, Weeping hefore for what she saw must come, And piteous plainings of the pretty bahes, That mourn'd for fashion, ignorant what to fear, Forc'd me to seek delays for them and me. And this it was, -for other means was none. The sailors sought for safety hy our hoat And left the ship, then sinking-ripe, to us: My wife, more careful for the latter-horn, Had fasten'd him unto a small spare mast, Such as sea-faring men provide for storms: To him one of the other twins was hound, Whilst I had been like heedful of the other. The children thus dispos'd, my wife and 1. Fixing our eyes on whom our care was fix'd, Fasten'd ourselves at either end the mast; And floating straight, ohedient to the stream Were carried towards Corinth, as we thought. At length the sun, gazing upon the earth, Dispers'd those vapours that offended us; And, hy the henefit of his wish'd light, The seas war'd calm, and we discovered Two ships from far making amain to us,-Of Corinth that, of Epidaurus this: But ere they came, -O, let me say no morel Gather the sequel by that went hefore.

Duke. Ray; forward, old man, do not break off so;

For we may pity, though not pardon thee.

Egc. O, had the gods done so, I had not now Worthily term'd them merciless to us! For, ere the ships could meet by twice five leagues.

We were encounter'd hy a mighty rock, Which being violently borne upon, Our helpful ship was splitted in the midst; So that, in this unjust divorce of us, Fortune had left to both of us alike What to delight in, what to sorrow for. Her part, poor soull seeming as burdened With lesser weight, but not with lesser woe, Was carried with more speed before the wind; And in our sight they three were taken up By fishermen of Corinth, as we thought. At length another ship had seiz'd on us; And, knowing whom it was their hap to save, Gave helpful welcome to their shipwreck'd guests;

And would have reft the fishers of their prey, Had not their bark heen very slow of sail And therefore homeward did they bend their course .-

Thus have you heard me sever'd from my bliss: That hy misfortunes was my life prolong'd, To tell sad stories of my own mishaps. Duke. And, for the sake of them thou sor-rowest for, Do me the favour to dilate at full What hath befall'n of them and thee till now. Ege. My youngest boy, and yet my eldest At eighteen years hecame inquisitive care, After his brother, and importun'd me That his attendant,—for his case was like, Reft of his brother, but retain'd his name, Might hear him company in the quest of him: Whom whilst I lahour'd of a love to see, I hazarded the loss of whom I lov'd. Five summers have I spent in furthest Greece, Roaming clean through the bounds of Asia, And, coasting homeward, came to Ephesus; Hopeless to find, yet loath to leave unsought Or that of any place that harbours men. But here must end the story of my life; And happy were I in my timely death,

Could all my travels warrant me they live. Duke. Hapless Egeon, whom the fates have mark'd

To hear the extremity of dire mishap! Now, trust me, were it not against our laws, Against my crown, my oath, my dignity, Which princes, would they, may not disannul, My soul should sue as advocate for thee. But though thou art adjudged to the death, And passed sentence may not he recall'd But to our honour's great disparagement, Yet will I favour thee in what I can: Therefore, merchant, I'll limit thee this day To seek thy help hy beneficial help: Try all the friends thou hast in Ephesus: Beg thou, or horrow, to make up the sum, And live; if not, then thou art doom'd to die. Gaoler, take him to thy custody.

Gaol. I will, my lord. Ece. Hopeless and helpless doth Egeon wend.

But to procrastinate his lifeless end. [Exeunt.

Cam. Sent by the king your father To greet him and to give him comforts. Sir, The manner of your bearing towards him, with What you, as from your father, shall deliver, Things known betwirt us three, I'll write you down;

The which shall point you forth at every sitting, What you must say; that he shall not perceive But that you have your father's bosom there, And speak his very heart.

Aut. Ha, ha! what a fool Honesty isl and Trust, his sworn brother, a very simple gentle-man! I have sold all my trumpery; not a counterfeit stone, not a riband, glass, pomander, brooch, table-book, ballad, knife, tape, glove, shoe-tie, bracelet, horn-ring, to keep my pack from fasting;—they throng who should bny first, as if my trinkets had been hallowed, and brought a benediction to the buyer: by which means I saw whose purse was best in picture; and what I saw, to my good use I remembered. My clown (who wants but something to be a reasonable man) grew so in love with the wenches' song that he would not stir his pettitoes till he had both tune and words; which so drew the rest of the herd to me, that all their other senses stuck in ears: you might have pinched a placket,—it was senseless; 'twas nothing to geld a codpiece of a purse; I would have filed keys off that hnng in chains: no hearing, no feeling, but my sir's song, and admiring the nothing of it. So that, in this time of lethargy, I picked and cut most of their festival purses; and had not the old man come in with a whoobub against his daughter and the king's son, and scared my choughs from the chaff, I had not left a purse alive in the whole army. [CAM., FLO., and PER. come forward. Cam. Nay, but my letters, by this means being there

So soon as you arrive, shall clear that donbt. Flo. And those that you'll procure from king Leontes,-

ACT II.

Scene I .- A public Place.

* Enter ADRIANA and LUCIANA.

Adr. Neither my husband nor the slave return'd,

That in such haste I sent to seek his master!
Sure, Luciana, it is two o'clock. [hir

Luc. Perhaps some merchant hath invited And from the mart he's somewhere gone to dinner.

Good sister, let us dine, and never fret: A man is master of his liberty;

Time is their master; and, when they see time, They'll go or come. If so, be patient, sister.

Adr. Why should their liberty than ours be more? [door.

Luc. Because their business still lies out of

Adr. Look, when I serve him so, he takes it ill.

Luc. O, know he is the bridle of your will.

Adr. There's none but asses will be bridled

Luc. Why, headstrong liberty is lash'd with There's nothing situate under heaven's eye But hath his bound in earth, in sea, in sky: The beasts, the fishes, and the winged fowls, Are their males' subject, and at their controls: Men, more divine, the masters of all these, Lords of the wide world and wild wat'ry seas, Indued with intellectual sense and souls Of more pre-eminence than fish and fowls, Are masters to their females, and their lords: Then let your will attend on their accords.

Adr. This servitude makes you to keep unwed. [bed.

Luc. Not this, but troubles of the marriage-Adr. But, were you wedded, you would bear some sway.

Luc. Ere I learn love, I'll practise to obey.

Adr. How if your husband start some other

Adr. How if your husband start some other where?

Luc. Till he come home again I would forbear.

Adr. Patience unmov'd, no marvel though she pause:

They can be meek that have no other cause. A wretched soul, bruis'd with adversity, We bid be quiet when we hear it cry; But were we burden'd with like weight of pain, As much, or more, we should ourselves complain: [thee,

So thou, that hast no unkind mate to grieve With urging helpless patience wouldst relieve

But if thou live to see like right bereft,
This fool-begg'd patience in thee will be left.
Luc. Well, I will marry one day, but to try:-

Luc. Well, I will marry one day, but to try:— Here comes your man, now is your husband nigh.

Enter DROMIO OF EPHESUS.

Adr. Say, is your tardy master now at hand? Dro. E. Nay, he is at two hands with me, and that my two ears can witness.

Adr. Say, didst thou speak with him? know'st thou his mind?

Dro. E. Ay, ay, he told his mind upon mine ear. Beshrew his hand, I scarce could understand it.

Luc. Spake he so doubtfully thou couldst not feel his meaning?

Dro. E. Nay, he struck so plainly I could too well feel his blows; and withal so doubtfully that I could scarce understand them.

Adr. But say, I pr'ythee, is he coming home? It seems he hath great care to please his wife.

Dro. E. Why, mistress, sure my master is horn-mad.

Adr. Horn-mad, thou villain?

Dro. E. I mean not cuckold-mad; but, sure, he's stark-mad.

When I desir'd him to come home to dinner, He ask'd me for a thousand marks in gold: 'Tis dinner-time, quoth I; My gold, quoth he: Your meat doth burn, quoth I; My gold, quoth he Will you come home? quoth I; My gold, quoth the Where is the thousand marks I gave thee, villain? The pig, quoth I, is burn'd; My gold, quoth he: My mistress, sir, quoth I; Hang up thy mistress; I know not thy mistress; out on thy mistress! Luc. Quoth who?

Dro. E. Quoth my master:

I know; quoth he, no house, no wife, no mistress: So that my errand, due unto my tongue, I thank him, I bare home upon my shoulders:

For, in conclusion, he did beat me there.

Adr. Go back again, thou slave, and fetch him home. [home? Dro. E. Go back again! and be new beaten For God's sake, send some other messenger.

Adr. Back, slave, or I will break thy pate across. [other beating:

Dro. E. And he will bless that cross with

Between you I shall have a holy head.

Adr. Hence, prating peasant; fetch thy master home. [me, Dro. E. Am I so round with you, as you with That like a football you do spurn me thus? You spurn me hence, and he will spurn me hither:

If I last in this service you must case me in leather. [Exil.

Luc. Fie, how impatience low'reth in your face!

Adr. His company must do his minions grace, Whilst I at home starve for a merry look. Hath homely age the alluring beauty took From my poor cheek? then he hath wasted it: Are my discourses dull? barren my wit? If voluble and sharp discourse be marr'd, Unkindness blunts it more than marble hard: Do their gay vestments his affections bait? That's not my fault, he's master of my state: What ruins are in me that can be found By him not ruin'd? then is he the ground Of my defeatures; my decayed fair A sunny look of his would soon repair; But, too unruly deer, he breaks the pale

And feeds from home; poor I am but his stale.

Luc. Self-harming jealousyl—fie, beat it
hence.

Adr. Unfeeling fools can with such wrongs

Adr. Untering 1001s can with such whoses I know his eye doth homage otherwhere; Or else what lets it but he would be here? Sister, you know he promis'd me a chain;—Would that alone, alone he would detain, So he would keep fair quarter with his bed! I see the jewel best enamelled Will lose his beauty; and though gold 'bides still

Aut. He has a son,-who shall be flayed alive; then 'nointed over with honey, set on the head of a wasp's nest; then stand till he be Scene I.—Signia. three quarters and a dram dead; then recovered again with aquavitae, or some other hot infusion; then, raw as he is, and in the hottest day prognostication proclaims, shall he he set against a hrick-wall, the sun looking with a southward eye upon him,—where he is to hehold him with flies blown to death. But what talk we of these traitorly rascals, whose miseries are to be smiled at, their offeuces heing so capital? Tell me,—for you seem to he honest plain men,—what have you to the king; heing something gently considered, I'll hring you where he is ahoard, tender your persons to his presence, whisper him in your hehalfs; and if it he in man hesides the king to effect your suits, here is man shall do it.

Clo. He seems to he of great authority: close with him, give him gold; and though authority he a stuhborn hear, yet he is oft led by the nose with gold: show the inside of your purse to the outside of his hand, and no more ado. Rememher,-stoned and flayed alive.

Shep. An't please you, sir, to undertake the business for us, here is that gold I have: I'll make it as much more, and leave this young man in pawn till I bring it you.

Aut. After I have done what I promised?

Shep. Ay, sir.

sav. even blessed.

Aut. Well, give me the moiety.—Are you a party in this business?

Clo. In some sort, sir: but though my case be a pitiful one, I hope I shall not be flayed out of it.

Aul. O, that's the case of the shepherd's son. Hang him, he'll be made an example!

Clo. Comfort, good comfort! We must to the king, and show our strange sights: he must know 'tis none of your daughter nor my sister; we are gone else. Sir, I will give you as much as this old man does, when the business is performed; and remain, as he says, your pawn till it be brought you.

Auf. I will trust you. Walk before toward . the sea-side; go on the right-hand: I will hat look upon the hedge, and follow yon. Clo. We are blessed in this man, as I may Shep. Let's before, as he bids us: he was provided to do us good.

Exeunt Shepherd and Clown.

Aul. If I had a mind to be honest, I see Fortune would not suffer me: she drops hooties in my mouth. I am courted now with a double occasion,-gold, and a means to do the prince my master good; which who knows how that may turn back to my advancement? hring these two moles, these hlind ones, ahoard him: if he think it fit to shore them again, and that the complaint they have to the king cou-cerns him nothing, let him call me rogue for heing so far officious; for I am proof against that title, and what shame else belongs to't. To him will I present them: there may he matter in it.

ACT V.

A Room in the Palace of LEONTES.

Enter Leontes, Cleomenes, Dion. PAULINA, and others.

Cleo. Sir, you have done enough, and have perform'd

A saint-like sorrow: no fault could you make, Which you have not redeem'd; indeed, paid

More penitence than done trespass: at the last, Do as the heavens have done, forget your evil; With them, forgive yourself.

Whilst I remember Leon. Her and her virtues, I cannot forget My hlemishes in them; and so still think of The wrong I did myself: which was so much That heirless it hath made my kingdom, and Destroy'd the sweet's companion that e'er man Bred his hopes out of.

True, too true, my lord; Paul. If, one by one, you wedded all the world, Or from the all that are took something good, To make a perfect woman, she you kill'd Would he unparallel'd.

I think so .- Kill'dl Leon. She I kill'd! I did so: hut thou strik'st me Sorely, to say I did: it is as bitter Upon thy tongue as in my thought: now, good Say so but seldom.

Not at all, good lady; Cleo. You might have spoken a thousand things that

Have done the time more benefit, and grac'd Have done the You are one of those

Would have him wed again.

If you would not so, Dion. You pity not the state, nor the remembrance Of his most sovereign name; consider little What dangers, hy his highness' fail of issue, May drop upon his kingdom, and devour Incertain lookers-on. What were more holy Incertain lookers-on. Than to rejoice the former queen is well? What holier than, -for royalty's repair, For present comfort, and for future good,-To hless the hed of majesty again

With a sweet fellow to't?

Paul. There is none worthy, Respecting her that's gone. Besides, the gods Will have fulfill'd their secret purposes: For has not the divine Apollo said. Is't not the tenor of his oracle, That king Leontes shall not have an heir Till his lost child he found? which that it shall, Is all as monstrous to our human reason As my Antigonus to break his grave, And come again to me; who, on my life, Did perish with the infant. 'Tis your counsel My lord should to the heavens he contrary,

Oppose against their wills.—Care not for issue; To LEONTES. The crown will find an heir: great Alexander Left his to the worthiest; so his successor

Was like to be the best. Good Pauling.-Leon. Who hast the memery of Hermione,

Some other mistress hath thy sweet aspects: I am not Adriana, nor thy wife. [vow The time was, once, when thou unurg'd wouldst That never words were music to thine ear, That never object pleasing in thine eye, That never touch well welcome to thy hand, That never meat sweet-savour'd in thy taste, Unless I spake, look'd, touch'd, or carv'd to thee.

How comes it now, my husband, ob, how comesit, That thou are then estranged from thyself? Thyself I call it, being strange to me, That, undividable, incorporate, Am better than thy dear self's better part. Ah, do not tear away thy self from me; For know, my love, as easy mayst thou fall A drop of water in the breaking gulf, And take unmingled thence that drop again, Without addition or diminishing, As take from me thyself, and not me too. How dearly would it touch thee to the quick Shouldst thou but hear I were licentious, And that this body, consecrate to thee, By ruffian lust should be contaminate! Wouldst thou not spit at me, and spurn at me, And hurl the name of husband in my face, And tear the stain'd skin off my harlot brow, And from my false hand cut the wedding-ring, And break it with a deep-divorcing vow:

I am possess'd with an adulterate blot;
My blood is mingled with the crime of lust:
For if we two be one, and thou play false,
I do digest the poison of thy flesh,
Being strumpeted by thy contagion. [bed;
Keep then fair league and truce with thy true
I live dis-stain'd, thou undisbonoured.

I know thou canst; and, therefore, see thou

I live dis-stain'd, thou undisbonoured.

Ant. S. Plead you to me, fair dame? I know you not:

In Ephesus I am but two hours old,
As strange unto your town as to your talk;
Who, every word by all my wit being scann'd,
Want wit in all one word to understand.

Luc. Fie, brother! how the world is chang'd with you:

When were you wont to use my sister thus? She sent for you by Dromio home to dinner.

Ant. S. By Dromio? Dro. S. By me?

Adr. By thee; and this thou didst return from him, -

That he did buffet thee, and in his blows
Denied my house for his, me for his wife.

Ant. S. Did you converse, sir, with this gentlewoman?

What is the course and drift of your compact?
Dro. S. I, sir? I never saw her till this time.
Ant. S. Villain, thou liest; for even her very words

Didst thou deliver to me on the mart.

Dro. S. I never spake with her in all my life.

Ant. S. How can she thus, then, call us by

Adv. Howill agrees it with your gravity
To counterfeit thus grossly with your slave,
Abetting him to thwart me in my mood!
Be it my wrong, you are from me exempt,

But wrong not that wrong with a more contempt. Come, I will fasten on this sleeve of thine: Thou art an elm, my busband, I a vine, Whose weakness, married to thy stronger state, Makes me with thy strength to communicate; If aught possess thee from me, it is dross, Usuring ivy, brier, or idle moss; Who, all for want of pruning, with intrusion Infect thy sap, and live on thy confusion.

Infect thy sap, and live on thy confusion.

Ant. S. To me she speaks; she moves me for her theme:

What, was I married to her in my dreams? Or sleep I now, and think I hear all this? What error drives our eyes and ears amiss? Until I know this sure uncertainty I'll entertain the offer'd fallacy.

ACT III.

Scene I .- The same.

Enter Antipholus of Ephesus, Dromio of Ephesus, Angelo, and Balthazar.

Ant. E. Good Signior Angelo, you must excuse us all.

My wife is shrewish when I keep not hours: Say that I linger'd with you at your shop To see the making of her carcanet, And that to-morrow you will bring it home.

Afresh within me; and these thy offices, lhither, So rarely kind, are as interpreters Of my behind-hand slackness!-Welcome As in the spring to the earth. And hath he too Expos'd this paragon to the fearful usage,-At least ungently, -of the dreaded Neptune, To greet a man not worth her pains, much less The adventure of her person?

Good, my lord, Flo.

She came from Libya.

Leon. Where the warlike Smalus, That noble honour'd lord, is fear'd and lov'd? Flo. Most royal sir, from thence; from him, whose daughter

His tears proclaim'd his, parting with her: thence -

A prosperous south wind friendly,-we have cross'd,

To execute the charge my father gave me, For visiting your highness: my best train I bave from your Sicilian shores dismiss'd: Who for Bohemia bend, to signify Not only my success in Libya, sir, But my arrival, and my wife's, in safety Here, where we are.

The hlessed gods Leon. Purge all infection from our air whilst you Do climate here! You have a holy father, A graceful gentleman; against whose person, So sacred as it is, I have done sin: For which the heavens, taking angry note, Have left me issueless; and your father's hless'd,-As he from heaven merits it,—with you, Worthy his goodness. What might I have been, Might I a son and daughter now have look'd on, Such goodly things as you!

· Enter a Lord.

Most noble sir, Lord. That which I shall report will hear uo credit, Were not the proof so nigh. Please you, great sir, Bohemia greets you from himself by me; Desires you to attach his son, who has, His dignity and duty both cast off,-Fled from his father, from his hopes, and with A shepherd's daughter.

Leon. Where's Bohemia? speak. Lord. Here in your city; I now came from him:

I speak amazedly; and it hecomes My marvel and my message. To your court Whiles he was hast'ning,—in the chase, it seems. Of this fair couple,-meets he on the way The father of this seeming lady, and Her hrotber, having both their country quitted

With this young prince. Flo. Camillo has hetray'd me; Whose honour, and whose honesty, till now, Endur'd all weathers.

Lay't so to this charge; Lord.

Lord. He's with the king your father. Who? Camillo?

Lord. Camillo, sir; I spake with him; who Has these poor men in question. Never saw I Wretches so quake: they kneel, they kiss the earth;

Forswear themselves as often as they speak: Bohemia stops his ears, and threatens them With divers deaths in death.

O my poor father!-The heaven sets spies upon us, will not have Our contract celebrated.

Leon. You are married? Flo. We are not, sir, nor are we like to be; The stars, I see, will kiss the valleys first:— The odds for high and low's alike.

Leon. Is this the daughter of a king?

Flo. She is, When once she is my wife,

Leon. That once, I see, by your good father's speed,

Will come on very slowly. I am sorry, Most sorry, you have broken from his liking, Where you were tied in duty; and as sorry Your choice is not so rich in worth as beauty, That you might well enjoy her.

Flo. Dear, look up: Though Fortune, visible an enemy, Should chase us, with my father, power no jot Hatb she to change our loves.—Beseech you, sir,

Remember since you ow'd no more to time Than I do now: with thought of such affections, Step forth mine advocate; at your request

My father will grant precious things as trifles. Leon. Would be do so, Pd beg your precious mistress,

Which he counts but a trifle. Paul.

Sir, my liege, Your eye hath too much youth in't: not a month 'Fore your queen died, she was more worth such gazes

Than what you look on now.

I thought of her Leon. Even in these looks I made.—But your petition To FLORIZEL. Is yet unanswer'd. I will to your father:

Your honour not o'erthrown hy your desires, I am friend to them and you: upon which errand

I now go toward him; therefore, follow me, And mark what way I make. Come, good my lord. Excuni.

SCENE II .- The same. Before the Palace.

Enter AUTOLYCUS and a Gentleman.

Aut. Beseech yon, sir, were yon present at this relation?

I Gent. I was by at the opening of the fardel, heard the old shepherd deliver the manner how he found it: wherenpon, after a little amazedness, we were all commanded out of the chamber; only this, methonght I heard the shepherd say he found the child. lit

Aut. I would most gladly know the issue of I Gent. I make a broken delivery of the business; hut the changes I perceive in the king and Camillo were very notes of admiration: they seemed almost, with staring on one another, to tear the cases of their eyes; there was speech in their dumbness, language in their very gesture; they looked as they had beard of a world ransomed, or one destroyed: a notable passion of wonder appeared in them; but the wisest heAnt. E. Go, get thee gone; fetch me an iron Shame hath a bastard-fame, well managed; crow.

Bal. Have patience, sir: O, let it not be so: Herein you war against your reputation, And draw within the compass of suspect The unviolated honour of your wife. Once this,—your long experience of her wisdom Her sober virtue, years, and modesty, Plead on her part some cause to you unknown; And doubt not, sir, but she will well excuse Why at this time the doors are made against you. Be rul'd by me; depart in patience, And let us to the Tiger all to dinaner: And, about evening, come yourself alone, To know the reason of this atrange restraint. If by strong hand you offer to break in, Now in the stirring passage of the day, A vulgar comment will be made of it; And that supposed by the common rout Against your yet ungalled estimation, That may with foul intrusion enter ia, And dwell upon your grave when you are dead: For alander lives upon succession. For ever hous'd where it once gets possession.

Ant. E. You have prevail'd. I will depart in quiet,
And, in despite of mirth, mean to be merry.
I know a wench of excellent discourse,—
Pretty and witty; wild, and yet, too, gentle;—
There will we dine: this woman that I mean,
My wife,—but, I protest, without desert,—
Hath oftentimes upbraided me withal;

To her will we to dinner:—Get you home
And fetch the chain: by this, I know, 'tis made:
Bring it, I pray you, to the Porcupine;
For there's the house; that chain will I bestow,—

Be it for nothing but to spite my wife,—
Upon mine hostess there: good sir, make haste:
Since mine own doors refuse to entertain me,
I'll knock elsewhere, to see if they'll disdain

Enter Luciana and Antipholus of Syracuse.

Luc. And may it be that you have quite for-

A husband's office? Shall, Antipholus, hate, Even in the spring of love, thy love-springs rot? Shall love, in building, grow so ruinate?

If you dld wed my sister for her wealth,
The, for her wealth's sake, use her with more kindness:

Or, if you like elsewhere, do it by stealth;
Muffle your false love with some show of blindness:

Let not my sister read it in your eye;
Be not thy tongue thy own shame's orator;
Look sweet, speak fair, become disloyalty;

Apparel vice like virtue's harbinger:
Bear a fair presence though your heart betainted;
Teach sin the carriage of a holy saint;

Be secret-false: what need she be acquainted?
What simple thief brags of his own attaint?
'Tis double wrong, to truant with your bed
And let her read it in thy looks at board:—

Ill deeds are doubled with an evil word.
Alas, poor woman make us but believe,
Being compact of credit, that you love us:

Though others have the arm, show us the sleeve; We in your motion turn, and you may move

Then, gentle brother, get you in again;
Comfort my sister, cheer her, call ber wife:

Teach me, dear creature, how to think and speak;

Lay open to my earthly gross conceit,
Smother'd in errors, feeble, shallow, week,
The folded meaning of your words' deceit.
Against my soul's pure truth why labour you
To make it wander in an unknown field?
Are you a god? would you create me new?
Treatform me, then and to your power the Transform me, then, and to your power I'll yield.

But if that I am I, then well I know

Your weeping sister is no wife of mine,
Nor to her bed no homage do I owe:
Far more, far more, to you do I decline.
O, train me not, sweet mermaid, with thy note,
To drown me in thy sister's flood of tears:

Sing, siren, for thyself, and I will dote:

Spread o'er the silver waves thy golden hairs,
And as a bed I'll take thee, and there lie;
And in that clorious supposition, think

And, in that glorious supposition, think

Ant. S. Not mad, but mated; how, I do not know.

Luc. It is a fault that springeth from your eye.

Ant. S. For gazing on your beams, fair sun, being by.

Luc. Gaze where you should, and that will clear your sight.

Ant. S. As good to wink, sweet love, as look on night.

Luc. Why call you me love? call my sister so.

Ant. S. Thy sister's sister.

That's my sister.

Ant. S.

It is thyself, mine own self's better part;

It is thyself, mine own self's better part, Mine eye's clear eye, my dear heart's dearer

My food, my fortune, and my sweet hope's aim, My sole earth's heaven, and my heaven's claim.

Luc. All this my sister is, or else should be.

Ant. S. Call thyself sister, sweet, for I aim thee:

Thee will I love, and with thee lead my life: Thou hast no husband yet, nor I no wife; Give me thy hand.

Luc. O soft, sir, hold you still;
I'll fetch my sister, to get her good-will.

Aut. I know you are now, sir, a gentleman Clo. Ay, and have been so any time these four hours.

Shep. And so have I, boyl

Clo. So you have:—hut I was a gentleman born hefore my father; for the king's son took me hy the hand and called me brother; and then the two kings called my father brother: and then the prince, my brother, and the princess, my sister, called my father father; and so we wept: and there was the first gentleman-like tears that ever we shed.

Sheb. We may live, son, to shed many more. Clo. Ay; or else 'twere hard luck, heing in so preposterous estate as we are.

Aut. I humbly heseech you, sir, to pardon me all the faults I have committed to your worship, and to give me your good report to the prince my master.

Shep. Pr'ythee, son, do; for we must he gentle, now we are gentlemen.

Clo. Thou wilt amend thy life?

Aut. Ay, an it like your good worship. Clo. Give me thy hand: I will swear to the prince thou art as honest a true fellow as any is in Bohemia.

Shep. You may say it, hut not swear it.

Clo. Not swear it, now I am a gentleman? Let boors and franklins say it, I'll swear it.

Shep. How if it be false, son?

Clo. If it be ne'er so false, a true gentleman may swear it in the behalf of his friend.—And I'll swear to the prince, thou art a tall fellow of thy hands, and that thou wilt not be drunk; but I know thou art no tall fellow of thy bands, and that thou wilt be drunk: but I'll swear it: and I would thou wouldst he a tall fellow of tby bands.

Aut. I will prove so, sir, to my power.

Clo. Ay, by any means, prove a tall fellow: if I do not wonder how thou darest venture to be drunk, not being a tall fellow, trust me not.-Harkl the kings and the princes, our kindred, are going to see the queen's nicture. Come, follow us: we'll be thy good masters.

Exeunt.

Scene III.—The same. A Room in PAULINA'S House.

Enter Leontes, Polixenes, Florizel, Per-DITA, CAMILLO, PAULINA, Lords, and Attendants.

Leon. O grave and good Paulina, the great comfort

That I have had of thee!

Paul. What, sovereign sir, I did not well, I meant well. All my services You have paid bome: but that you have vouchsaf'd, Itracted

With your crown'd brother, and these your con-Heirs of your kingdoms, my poor house to visit It is a surplus of your grace which never

My life may last to answer.

Leon.

O, Paulina,
We honour you with trouble:—but we came To see the statue of our queen: your gallery Have we pass'd through, not without much content

In many singularities; but we saw not That which my daughter came to look upon, The statue of her mother.

Paul. As she liv'd peerless. So her dead likeness, I do well believe, Excels whatever yet you look'd upon, Or hand of man hath done; therefore I keep it Lonely, apart. But here it is: prepare To see the life as lively mock'd as ever Still sleep mock'd death: hehold; and say 'tis PAULINA undraws a curtain, and discovers HERMIONE standing as a statue.

I like your silence,-it the more shows off Your wonder: but yet speak;-first, you, my liege.

Comes it not something near?

Her natural posturel-Leon. Chide me, dear stone, that I may say indeed, Thou art Hermione; or rather, thou art sbe, In thy not chiding; for she was as tender As infancy and grace.-But yet, Paulina, Hermione was not so much wrinkled; nothing So aged, as this seems.

O, not by much. Pol.

Paul. So much the more our carver's excellence; iber Which lets go by some sixteen years, and makes As she liv'd now.

Leon. As now she might have done, So much to my good comfort, as it is Now piercing to my soul. O, thus she stood,

Even with such life of majesty,-warm life, As now it coldly stands, -when first I woo'd her!

I am asham'd: does not the stone rebuke me For heing more stone than it?-O royal piece, There's magic in thy majesty; which has My evils conjur'd to remembrance; and From thy admiring daughter took the spirits, Standing like stone with thee!

And give me leave; Per. And do not say 'tis superstition, that I kneel, and then implore her blessing.-Lady, Dear queen, that ended when I but hegen, Give me that hand of yours to kiss.

O, patiencel Paul. The statue is but newly fix'd, the colour's

Not dry. lon. Cam. My lord, your sorrow was too sore laid Which sixteen winters cannot blow away, So many summers dry: scarce any joy

Did ever so long live; no sorrow But kill'd itself much sooner.

Pol. Dear my brother. Let him that was the cause of this have power To take off so much grief from you as he Will piece up in himself.

Paul. Indeed, my lord, If I had thought the sight of my poor image Would thus have wrought you,—for the stone is mine. I'd not have show'd it

Leon. Do not draw the curtain. Paul. No longer shall you gaze on't; lest your fancy

Mer. You know, since Pentecost the sum is due,

And since I have not much importun'd you;
Nor now I had not, hut that I am bound
To Persia, and want gilders for my voyage;
Therefore make present satisfaction,
Or I'll ettech you by this officer.

Or I'll attach you by this officer.

Ang. Even just the sum that I do owe to you Is growing to me hy Antipholus;
And in the instant that I met with you He had of me a chain; at five o'clock I shall receive the money for the same:

I will discharge my bond, and thank you too. Enter Antipholus of Ephesus, and DROMIO OF Ephesus.

Pleaseth you walk with me down to his house,

Off. That lahour may you save: see where he comes. Igo thou

Anl. E. While I go to the goldsmith's house, And huy a rope's end; that will I hestow Among my wife and her confederates, For locking me out of doors hy day.—
But, soft; I see the goldsmith: get thee gone; Buy thou a rope, and hring it home to me.

Dro. E. I buy a thousand pound a year! I buy a rope! [Exit Dromio.]
Ant. E. A man is well holp up that trusts to you:

I promised your presence, and the chain;
But neither chain nor goldsmith came to me:
Belike you thought our love would last too long,
If it were chained together; and therefore came
not. [note.

Ang. Saving your merry humour, here's the How much your chain weighs to the utmost carat;

The fineness of the gold, and chargeful fashion; Which does amount to three odd ducats more Than I stand debted to this gentleman: I pray you, see him presently discharg'd, For he is hound to sea, and stays hut for it.

Ant. E. I am not furnished with the present money;

Besides I have some business in the town:
Good Signior, take the stranger to my house,
And with you take the chain, and bid my wife
Dishurse the sum on the receipt thereof;
Perchance I will he there as soon as you.

erchance I will he there as soon as you.

Ang. Then you will hring the chain to her yourself?

Ant. E. No; hear it with you, lest I come not time enough. [ahout you? Ang. Well sir, I will: have you the chain Ant. E. Anif I have not, sir, I hope you have, Or else you may return without your money.

Ang. Nay, come, I pray you, sir, give me the chain;

Both wind and tide stays for this gentleman, And I, to hlame, have held him here too long. Ant. E. Good lord, you use this delliance to excuse

Your breach of promise to the Porcupine: I should have chid you for not hringing it, But, like a shrew, you first begin to brawl Mer. The hour steals on; I pray you, sir, despatch.

Ant. E. I answer you! What should I answer Ang. The money that you owe me for the chain.

Ant. E. I owe you none till I receive the Ang You know I gave it you half-an-hour since.

Ant. E. You gave me none: you wrong me much to say so.

Ang. You wrong me more, sir, in denying it.
Consider how it stands upon my credit.
Mer. Well, officer, errest him at my suit.

Off. I do, and charge you in the duke's name to ohey me.

Ang. This touches me in reputation: Either consent to pay this sum for me, Or I attach you by this officer.

Ant. E. Consent to pay thee that I never had!
Arrest me, foolish fellow, if thon dar'st.
Ang. Here is thy fee; arrest him, officer:—
I would not spare my brother in this case,
If he should scorn me so apparently.

Off. I do arrest you, sir: you hear the suit.
Ant. E. I do obey thee till I give thee bail:
But, sirrah you shall buy this sport as dear
As all the metal in your shop will answer.

Ang. Sir, sir, I shall have law in Ephesus, To your notorious shame, I doubt it not.

Enter DROMIO OF SYRACUSE.

Dro. S. Master, there is a bark of Epidam-

That stays hut till her owner comes ahoard, And then, sir, hears away: our fraughtage, sir, I have convey'd ahoard; and I have bought The oil, the halsamum, and aqua-vitae. The ship is in her trim; the merry wind Blows fair from land: they stay for naught at all But for their owner, master, and yourself.

Ant. E. How now! a madman? Why, thou peevish sheep,

What ship of Epidamnum stays for me?

Dro. S. A ship you sent me to, to hire wait-

Ant. E. Thou drunken slave, I sent thee for a rope;

And told thee to what purpose and what end.

Dro. S. You sent me, sir, for a rope's end as soon:

You sent me to the bay, sir, for a bark.

Ant. E. I will debate this matter at more

Ant. E. I will debate this matter at more leisure,

Why thou departedst from thy native home, And for what cause thou cam'st to Ephesus.

Dro. S. Not that Adam that kept the paradise, but that Adam that keeps the prison: he that goes in the calf's-skin that was killed for the Prodigal; he that came behind you. sir, like an evil angel, and bid you forsake your liberty.

Ant. S. I understand thee not.
Dro. S. No? why, 'tis a plain case: he that went like a base-viol in a case of leather; the man, sir, that, when gentlemen are tired, gives them a fob, and 'rests them; he, sir, that takes pity on decayed men, and gives them suits of durance; he that sets up his rest to do more exploits with his mace than a morris-pike.

Ant. S. What! thou mean'st an officer?
Dro. S. Ay, sir,—the sergeant of the band: he that brings any man to answer it that breaks his band; one that thinks a man always going to bed, and says, God give you good rest!

Ant. S. Well, sir, there rest in your foolery. Is there any ship puts forth to-night? may we be

Dro. S. Why, sir, I brought you word an hour since, that the bark Expedition put forth tonight; and then were you hindered by the sergeant, to tarry for the hoy, Delay: here are the angels that you sent for to deliver you.

Ant. S. The fellow is distract, and so am I;

And here we wander in illusions:

Some blessed power deliver us from hence!

Enter a Courtezan.

Cour. Well met, well met, Master Antipholus. I see, sir, you have found the goldsmith now: Is that the chain you promis'd me to-day? Ant. S. Satan, avoid! I charge thee, tempt me not!

Dro. S. Master, is this Mistress Satan?
Ant. S. It is the devil.

Dro. S. Nay, she is worse—she is the devil's dam; and here she comes in the habit of a light wench; and thereof comes that the wenches say, God damn me—that's as much as to say, God make me a light wench. It is written, they appear to men hke angels of light: light is an effect of fire, and fire will burn; ergo, light wenches will burn: come not near her.
Cour. Your man and you are marvellous merry, sir.

Will you go with me? We'll mend our dinner Dro. S. Master, if you do; expect spoonmeat, or bespeak a long spoon.

Ant. S. Why, Dromio?

Dro. S. Marry, he must have a long spoon that must eat with the devil.

Ant. S. Avoid then, fiend! what tell'st thou me of supping? Thou art, as you are all, a sorceress:

I conjure thee to leave me and be gone. Cour. Give me the ring of mine you had at | in adversity.

dinner, Or, for my diamond, the chain you promis'd,

And I'll be gone, sir, and not trouble you. Dro. S. Some devils ask but the paring of one's nail, A rush, a hair, a drop of blood, a pin, A nut, a cherry-stone; but she, more covetous, Would have a chain.

Master, be wise; an if you give it her, The devil will shake her chain, and fright us with it.

Cour. I pray you, sir, my ring, or else the chain:

I hope you do not mean to cheat me so. Ant. S. Avaunt, thou witch! Come, Dromio, let us go.

Dro. S. Fly pride, says the peacock: Mistress, that you know.

Exeunt ANT., S. and DRO, S. Cour. Now, out of doubt, Antipholus is mad, Else would he never so demean himself: A ring he hath of mine worth forty ducats, And for the same he promis'd me a chain; Both one and other he denies me now: The reason that I gather he is mad, Besides this present instance of his rage,-Is a mad tale he told to-day at dinner, Of his own doors being shut against his entrance. Belike his wife, acquainted with his fits, On purpose shut the doors against his way. My way is now to hie home to his house, And tell his wife that, being lunatic, He rush'd into my house, and took perforce My ring away: this course I fittest choose, For forty ducats is too much to lose.

SCENE IV .- The same.

Enter ANTIPHOLUS OF EPHESUS and an Officer.

Ant. E. Fear me not, man; I will not break away:

I'll give thee, ere I leave thee, so much money To warrant thee, as I am 'rested for. My wife is in a wayward mood to-day; And will not lightly trust the messenger That I should be attach'd in Ephesus: I tell you, 'twill sound harshly in her ears.

Enter DROMIO OF EPHESUS, with a rope's end

Here comes my man: I think he brings the money.

How now, sir! have you that I sent you for? ?
Dro. E. Here's that, I warrant you, will pay them all. Ant. E. But where's the money? [rope. Dro. E. Why, sir, I gave the money for the Ant. E. Five hundred ducats, villain, for a

|the rate. rope? Dro. E. I'll serve you, sir, five hundred at Ant. E. To what end did I bid thee hie thee home? Dro. E. To a rope's end, sir; and to that end am I return'd. Ant. E. And to that end, sir, I will welcome [Beating him.

Off. Good sir, be patient. Dro. E. Nay, 'tis for me to be patient; I am

Off. Good now, hold thy tongue. Dro. E. Nay, rather persuade him to hold his hands.

Ant. E. Thou whoreson senseless villain!

Dro. E. I would I were senseless, sir, that I might not feel your blows. Ant. E. Thou art sensible in nothing but.

blows, and so is an ass.

Dro. E. I am an ass indeed: you may prove it by my long ears. I have served him from the hour of my nativity to this instant, and have

Scene II .- A public Place.

Enter Antipholus and Dromio of SYRACUSE, and a Merchant.

Mer. Therefore, give out you are of Epidamnum,

Lest that your goods too soon he confiscate. This very day a Syracusan merchant Is apprehended for arrival here; And, not being able to huy out his life, According to the statute of the town, Dies ere the weary sun set in the west. There is your money that I had to keep.

Ant. S. Go bear it to the Centaur, where we host,

And stay there, Dromio, till I come to thee. Within this hour it will be dinner-time: Till that, I'll view the manners of the town, Peruse the traders, gaze upon the huildings, And then return and sleep within mine inn; For with long travel I am stiff and weary .-Get thee away.

Dro. S. Many a man would take you at your word

And go indeed, having so good a mean. (Exit DROMIO S.

Ant. S. A trusty villain, sir, that very oft, When I am dull with care and melancholy, Lightens my humour with his merry jests. What, will you walk with me about the town, And then go to my inn and dine with me?

Mer. I am invited, sir, to certain merchants, Of whom I hope to make much benefit: I crave your pardon. Soon, at five o'clock, Please you, I'll meet with you upon the mart, And afterwards consort you until bed-time: My present business calls me from you now.

Ant. S. Farewell till then: I will go lose myself,

And wander up and down to view the city. Mer. Sir, I commend you to your own con-

[Exit Merchant.

Ant. S. He that commends me to mine own content,

Commends me to the thing I cannot get. I to the world am like a drop of water That in the ocean seeks another drop; Who, failing there to find his fellow forth, Unseen, inquisitive, confounds himself: So I, to find n mother and a brother, In quest of them, unhappy, lose myself.

Enter Dromio of Ephesus.

Here comes the almanac of my true date. What now? How chance thou art return'd so soon?

Dro. E. Return'd so soon! rather approach'd too late:

The capon hurns, the pig falls from the spit; The clock hath strucken twelve upon the bell-My mistress made it one upon my cheek: She is so hot hecause the meat is cold; The meat is cold because you come not home; You come not home because you have no stomach: You have no stomach, having hroke your fast; But we, that know what 'tis to fast and pray, Are penitent for your default to-day.

Ant. S. Stop-in your wind, sir; tell me this, I pray;

Where have you left the money that I gave you? Dro. E. O,-sixpence that I had o'Wednesday last

To pay the saddler for my mistress' crupper;-The saddler had it, sir, I kept it not.

Ant. S. I am not in a sportive humour now: Tell me, and dally not, where is the money? We being strangers here, how dar'st thou trust So great a charge from thine own custody?

Dro E. I pray yon, jest, sir, as you sit at dinner:

I from my mistress come to you in post: If I return, I shall be post indeed; For she will score your fault upon my pate. Methinks your maw, like mine, should be your clock.

And strike you home without a messenger.

Ant. S. Come, Dromio, come, these jests are out of season; Reserve them till a merrier hour than this. Where is the gold I gave in charge to thee?

Dro. E. To me, sir? why, you gave no gold to me!

Ant. S. Come on, sir knave; have done your toolishness,

And tell me how thou hast dispos'd thy charge. Dro. E. My charge was but to fetch you from the mart

Home to your house, the Phoenix, sir, to dinner: My mistress and her sister stay for you.

Ant. S. Now, as I am a Christian, answer me-In what safe place you have bestow'd my money

Or I shall break that merry sconce of yours That stands on tricks when I am undispos'd; Where is the thousand marks thou hadst of me? Dro. E. I have some marks of yours upon my pate,

Some of my mistress' marks upon my shoulders, But not a thousand marks between you both .-If I should pay your worship those again,

Perchance you will not hear them patiently.

Ant. S. Thy mistress' marks! what mistress. slave, hast thou?

Dro. E. Your worship's wife, my mistress at the Phoenix;

She that doth fast till you come home to dinner, And prays that you will hie yon home to dinner. Ant. S. What, wilt thou flout me thus unto my face, Being forbld? There, take you that, sir knave. Dro. E. What mean you, sir? for God's sake, hold your hands: Nay, an you will not, sir, I'll take my heels.

Exit DROMIO E.

Ant. S. Upon my life, hy some device or other,

The villain is o'er-raught of all my money. They say this town is full of cozenege; As, nimble jugglers that deceive the eye. Dark-working sorcerers that change the mind, Soul-killing witches that deform the hody, Disguised cheaters, prating mountebanks, And many such-like liberties of sin: If it prove so, I will be gone the sooner. I'll to the Centaur, to go seek this slave: I greatly fear my money is not safe. [Exit. [Exeunt PINCH and Assistants, with ANT. E. and DRO. E.

Say now, whose suit is he arrested at?

Off. One Angelo, a goldsmith; do you know him? lowes? Adr. I know the man: what is the sum he Off. Two hundred ducats.

Adr. Say, how grows it due?

. Off. Due for a chain your husband had of him. Adr. He did bespeak a chain for me, but had it not.

Cour. When as your husband, all in rage, to-day

Came to my house, and took away my ring,-The ring I saw upon his finger now,- Straight after did I meet him with a chain. Adr. It may be so, but I did never see it: Come, gaoler, bring me where the goldsmith is: . I long to know the truth hereof at large.

. Enter Antipholus of Syracuse, with his rapier drawn, and DROMIO OF SYRACUSE.

Luc. God, for thy mercy! they are loose again.

Adr. And come with naked swords: let's call more help.

To have them bound again.

Off. Away, they'll kill us. Exeunt Off., ADR., and Luc. Ant. S. I see these witches are afraid of swords.

Dro. S. She that would be your wife now ran from you.

Ant. S. Come to the Centaur; fetch our stuff from thence:

I long that we were safe and sound aboard. Dro. S. Faith, stay here this night; they will surely do us no harm: you saw they speak us fair, give us gold: methinks, they are such a gentle nation, that but for the mountain of med flesh that claims marriage of me, I could find in my heart to stay here still and turn witch. Ant. S. I will not stay to-night for all the Therefore away to get our stuff aboard. Exeunt.

ACT V.

Scene I .- The same.

Enter Merchant and ANGELO.

Ang. I am sorry, sir, that I have hinder'd

But I protest he had the chain of me, Though most dishonestly he doth deny it.

Mer. How is the man esteem'd here in the city?

Ang. Of very reverend reputation, sir; Of credit infinite, highly belov'd, Second to none that lives here in the city: His word might bear my wealth at any time. Mer. Speak softly: yonder, as I think, he walks.

> Enter Antipholus and Dromio of SYRACUSE.

Ang. 'Tis so; and that self chain about his Which he forswore most monstrously to have. In bed, he slept not for my urging it;

Good sir, draw near to me, I'll speak to him. Signior Antipholus, I wonder much [trouble: That you would put me to this shame and And not without some scandal to yourself, With circumstance and oaths so to deny This chain, which now you wear so openly: Besides the charge, the shame, imprisonment, You have done wrong to this my honest friend: Who, but for staying on our controversy, Had hoisted sail and put to sea to-day:

This chain you had of me; can you deny it? Ant. S. I think I had: I never did deny it. Mer. Yes, that you did, sir; and forswore it

Ant. S. Who heard me to deny it or for-Mer. These ears of mine, thou knowest, did hear thee.

Fie on thee, wretch! 'tis pity that thou liv'st To walk where any honest men resort. [thus: Ant. S. Thou art a villain to impeach me

I'll prove mine honour and mine honesty Against thee presently, if thou dar'st stand. Mer. I dare and do defy thee for a villain.

They draw.

Enter Adriana, Luciana, Courtezan; and others.

Adr. Hold, hurt him not, for God's sake; he is mad:

Some get within him, take his sword away: Bind Dromio too, and bear them to my house, -Dro. S. Run, master, run; for God's sake, take a house.

This is some priory; -in, or we are spoil'd. Exeunt ANT. S. and DRO. S. to the Priory. Enter the Abbess.

Abb. Be quiet, people. Wherefore throng you hither? [hence:

Adr. To fetch my poor distracted husband Let us come in, that we may bind him fast, And bear him home for his recovery.

Ang. I knew he was not in his perfect wits. Mer. I am sorry now that I did draw on him. Abb. How long hath this possession held the man?

Adr. This week he hath been heavy, sour, And much, much different from the man he was:

But till this afternoon his passion Ne'er brake into extremity of rage. Abb. Hath he not lost much wealth by wreck Buried some dear friend? Hath not else his eye Stray'd his affection in unlawful love? A sin prevailing much in youthful men Who give their eyes the liberty of gazing. Which of these sorrows is he subject to?

Adr. To none of these, except it be the last; Namely, some love that drew him oft from home.

Abb. You should for that have reprehended him.

Adr. Why, so I did.

Ay, but not rough enough. Abb. Adr. As roughly as my modesty would let me.

Abb. Haply in private.

And in assemblies too. Adr. Abb. Ay, but not enough.

Adr. It was the copy of our conference:

That others touch, yet often touching will Wear gold; and so no man that hath a name But falsehood and corruption doth it shame. Since that my heauty cannot please his eye, I'll weep what's left away, and, weeping, die.
Luc. How many fond fools serve mad jealousyl. Exeunt.

Scene II .- The same.

Enter ANTIPHOLUS OF SYRACUSE.

Ant. S. The gold I gave to Dromio is laid up Safe at the Centaur; and the heedful slave Is wander'd forth in care to seek mo out. By computation and mine host's report I could not speak with Dromio since at first I sent him from the mart. See, here he comes.

Enter DROMIO OF SYRACUSE.

How now, sirl is your merry humour alter'd? As you love strokes, so jest with me again. You know no Centaur? you receiv'd no gold? Your mistress sent to have me home to dinner? My house was at the Phoenix? Wast thou mad, That thus so madly thou didst answer me?
Dro. S. What answer, sir? when spake I such a word?

Ant. S. Even now, even here, not half-anhour since.

Dro. S. I did not see you since you sent me hence,

Home to the Centaur with the gold you gave me. Ant. S. Villain, thou didst deny the gold's receipt;

And told'st me of a mistress and a dinner; For which, I hope, thou felt'st I was displeas'd. Dro. S. I am glad to see you in this merry [me. vein: What means this jest? I pray you, master, tell Ant. S. Yea, dost thou jeer and flout me in the teeth? Think'st thou I jest? Hold, take thou that, and that. Beating him. Dro. S. Hold, sir, for God's sake: now your jest is earnest: Upon what hargain do you give it me? Ant. S. Because that I familiarly sometimes

Do use you for my fool, and chat with you, Your sauciness will jest upon my love, And make a common of my serious hours. When the sun shines let foolish gnats make sport. But creep in crannies when he hides his beams. If you will jest with me, know my aspect, And fashion your demeanour to my looks,

Or I will heat this method in your sconce. Dro. S. Sconce, call you it? so you would leave hattering, I had rather have it a head: an you use these hlows long, I must get a sconce for my head, and ensconce it too; or else I shall seek my wit in my shoulders .- But, I pray sir, why am I heaten?

Ant. S. Dost thou not know?

Dro. S. Nothing, sir; hut that I am heaten.

Ant. S. Shall I tell you why?

Dro. S. Ay, sir, and wherefore; for, they say, every why hath a wherefore,—

Ant. S. Why, first,—for flouting me; and then, wherefore,

For urging it the second time to me.

Dro. S. Was there ever any man thus heaten out of season,

When in the why and the wherefore is neither rhyme nor reason?-

Well, sir, I thank you.

Ant. S. Thank me, sirl for what? Dro. S. Marry, sir, for this something that you gave me for nothing.

Ant. S. I'll make you amends next, to give you nothing for something.—But say, sir, is it, dinner-time? [that I have.

Dro. S. No, sir; I think the meat wants Ant. S. In good time, sir, what's that?

Dro. S. Basting. Ant. S. Well, sir

Ant. S. Well, sir, then 'twill be dry.
Dro. S. If it he, sir, I pray you eat none of it.

Ant. S. Your reason?
Dro. S. Lest it make you choleric, and purchase me another dry hasting.

Ant. S. Well, sir, learn to jest in good time: There's a time for all things.

Dro. S. I durst have denied that hefore you were so choleric.

Ant. S. By what rule, sir?

Dio. S. Marry, sir, hy a rule as plain as the plain hald pate of Father Time himself.

Ant. S. Let's hear it.

Dro. S. There's no time for a man to recover his hair, that grows hald hy nature.

Ant. S. May he not do it by fine and recovery? Dro. S. Yes, to pay a fine for a peruke, and recover the lost hair of another man.

Ant. S. Why is Time such a niggard of hair, being, as it is, so plentiful an excrement?

Dro. S. Because it is a blessing that he bestows on heasts: and what he hath scanted men in hair he hath given them in wit.

Ant. S. Why, hut there's many a man hath more hair than wit.

Dro. S. Not n man of those but he hath the wit to lose his hair.

Ant. S. Why, thou didst conclude hairy men plain dealers without wit.

Dro. S. The plainer dealer the sooner lost: yet he loseth it in a kind of jollity.

Ant. S. For what reason?

Dro. S. For two; and sound ones too.

Ant. S. Nay, not sound, I pray you. Dro. S. Sure ones, then.

Ant. S. Nay, not sure, in a thing falsing.

Dro. S. Certain ones, then.

Ant. S. Name them.

Dro. S. The one, to save the money that he spends in tiring; the other, that at dinner they should not drop in his porridge.

Ant. S. You would all this time have proved there is no time for all things.

Dro. S. Marry, and did, sir; namely, no time to recover hair lost hy nature.

Ant. S. But your reason was not substantial why there is no time to recover.

Dro. S. Thus I mend it: Time himself is hald, and, therefore, to the world's end will have hald followers.

Ant. S. I knew 'twould he a hald conclusion: But, soft! who wafts us yonder?

· Enter Adriana and Luciana.

Adr. Ay, ay, Antipholus, look strange and frown;

Adr. Peace, fool, thy master and his man are here:

And that is false thou dost report to us. Serv. Mistress, upon my life, I tell you true: I have not hreath'd almost since I did see it. He cries for you, and vows, if he can take you, To scorch your face, and to disfigure you:

Cry within. Hark, hark, I hear him; mistress, fly; he gone. Duke. Come, stand by me; fear nothing. Guard with halberds.

Adr. Ah me, it is my husband! Witness you That he is borne about invisible. Even now we hous'd him in the abbey here; And now he's there, past thought of human reason.

Enter ANTIPHOLUS and DROMIO OF EPHESUS.

Ant. E. Justice, most gracious duke; oh' grant me justice!

Even for the service that long since I did thee, When I bestrid thee in the wars, and took Deep scars to save thy life: even for the blood That then I lost for thee, now grant me justice. Ege. Unless the fear of death doth make me dote.

I see my son Antipholus and Dromio.

Ant. E. Justice, sweet prince, against that woman there.

She whom thou gav'st to me to be my wife; That hath abused and dishonour'd me, Even in the strength and height of injury! Beyond imagination is the wrong That she this day hath shameless thrown on Duke. Discover how, and thou shalt find me just.

Ant. E. This day, great duke, she shut the doors upon me,

While she with harlots feasted in my house. Duke. A grievous fault. Say, woman, didst thou so? my sister, Adr. No, my good lord;—myself, he, and To-day did dine together. So befall my soul As this is false he burdens me withal!

Luc. Ne'er may I look on day nor sleep on night.

But she tells to your highness simple truth! Ang. O perjur'd woman! they are both forsworn.

In this the madman justly chargeth them. Ant. E. My liege, I am advised what I say; Neither disturb'd with the effect of wine, Nor, heady-rash, provok'd with raging ire, Albeit my wrongs might make one wiser mad. This woman lock'd me out this day from dinner: That goldsmith there, were he not pack'd with her, Could witness it, for he was with me then; Who parted with me to go fetch a chain. Promising to bring it to the lorcupine, Where Balthazar and I did dine together. Our dinner done, and he not coming thither I went to seek him. In the street I met him, And in his company that gentleman. There did this perjur'd goldsmith swear me That I this day of him receiv'd the chain, Which, God he knows, I saw not: for the which

He did arrest me with an officer. I did obey, and sent my peasant home For certain ducats: he with none return'd. Then fairly I bespoke the officer To go in person with me to my house. By the way we met My wife, her sister, and a rabble more Of vile confederates: along with them They brought one Pinch; a hungry lean-faced villain.

A mere anatomy, a mountebank. A thread-bare juggler, and a fortune-teller; A needy, hollow-ey'd, sharp-looking wretch; A living dead man; this pernicious slave, Forsooth, took on him as a conjurer; And gazing in mine eyes, feeling my pulse, And with no face, as 'twere outfacing me, Cries out, I was possess'd: then altogether They fell upon me, bound me, bore methence: And in a dark and dankish vault at home. There left me and my man both bound together: Till, gnawing with my teeth my bonds in sunder. I gain'd my freedom, and immediately Ran hither to your grace; whom I beseech To give me ample satisfaction

For these deep shames and great indignities. Ang. My lord, in truth, thus far I witness with him,

That he dined not at home, but was lock'd out, Duke. But had he such a chain of thee, or

Ang. He had, my lord; and when he ran in here

These people saw the chain about his neck. Mer. Besides, I will be sworn these ears of Heard you confess you had the chain of him, After you first forswore it on the mart, And thereupon I drew my sword on you; And then you fled into this abbey here, From whence, I think, you are come by miracle. Ant. E. I never came within these abbey walis, Nor ever didst thou draw thy sword on me: I never saw the chain, so help me heaven! And this is false you burden me withal.

Duke. What an intricate impeach is this! I think you all have drank of Circe's cup. If here you hous'd him, here he would have been:

If he were mad he would not plead so coldly:-You say he dined at home; the goldsmith here Denies that saying:—Sirrah, what say you?

Dro. E. Sir, he dined with her there at the Porcupine. [that ring. Cour. He did; and from my finger snatch'd

Ant. E. 'Tis true, my leige, this ring I had of her. Duke. Saw'st thou him enter at the abbey

Cour. As sure, my liege, as I do see your grace.

Duke. Why, this is strange:-Go call the abbess hither: I think you are all mated, or stark mad.

[Exit on Attendant. Ege. Most mighty duke, vouchsafe me speak a word; Haply, I see a friend will save my life, And pay the sum that may deliver me. Duke. Speak freely, Syracusan, what thou But here's a villain that would face me down. He met me on the mart; and that I beat him, And charg'd him with a thousand marks in gold And that I did deuy my wife and bouse:—

Thou drunkard, thou, what didst thon mean by this?

Dro. E. Say what you will, sir, but I know what I know:

That you heat me at the mart I have your hand to show:

If the skin were parchment, and the blows you gave were ink, [think. Your own bandwriting would tell you what I Ant. E. I think thou art an ass.

D70. E. Marry, so it doth appear By the wrongs I suffer and the blows I bear. I should kick, being kick'd; and, being at that pass, [an ass.

You would keep from my heels, and beware of Ant. E. You are sad, Signior Baltbazar;

pray God, our cheer come bere. May answer my good-will and your good wel-Bol. I hold your dainties cheap, sir, and your welcome dear.

Ant. E. O, Signior Balthazar, either at flesh or fish,

A table full of welcome makes scarce one dainty disb.

Bol. Good meat, sir, is common; that every churl affords.

Ant. E. And welcome more common; for that's nothing but words.

Bal. Small cheer and great welcome makes a merry feast. [sparing guest.

Ant. E. Ay, to a niggardly host and more

But though my cates be mean, take them in good part; Iheart. Better cheer may you have, but not with better But, soft; my door is lock'd: go bid them let

Gillian, Jenl us in. Dro. E. Maud, Bridget, Marian, Cicely, Dro. S. [Within.] Mome, malt-horse, capon, coxcomb, idiot, patch! Either get thee from the door or sit down at the hatch:

Dost thou conjure for wenches, that thou call'st [the door. for such store,

When one is one too many? Go, get thee from Dro. E. What patch is made our porter?

My master stays in the street.

Dro. S. Let him walk from whence he came, lest he catch cold on's feet.

Ant. E. Who talks within there? ho, open the door.

Dro. S. Right, sir, I'll tell you when an you'll tell me wherefore.

Ant. E. Wherefore! for my dinner: I have not dined to-day.

Dro. S. Nor to-day here you must not; come again when you may.

Ant. E. What art thou that keep'st me out from the house I owe? Dro. S. The porter for this time, sir, and my name is Dromio.

Dro. E. O villain, thou hast stolen both mine office and my name; [hlame. The one ne'er got me credit, the other mickle If thou hadst been Dromio to-day in my place, Thou wouldst have chang'd thy face for a name, or thy name for an ass.

Luce. [Within.] What a coil is there! Dromio. who are those at the gate?

Dro. E. Let my master in, Luce.

Luce. Faith, no; he comes too late; And so tell your master.

D70. E. O Lord, I must laugb;-Have at you with a proverb.—Shall I set in my staff?

Luce. Have at you with another: that's,-When? can you tell?

Dro. S. If thy name he called Luce,-Luce, thou hast answer'd him well.

Ant. E. Do you bear, you minion? you'll let us iu, I hope?

Luce. I though to bave ask'd you. Dro. S. And yo

And you said no. Dro. E. So, come, belp: well struck; there was blow for blow.

Ant. E. Thou baggage, let me in.

Luce. Can you tell for whose sake? Dro. E. Master, knock the door hard.

Luce. Let him knock till it ache. Ant. E. You'll cry for this, minion, if I beat the door down.

Luce. What needs all that, and a pair of stocks in the town? Adr. [Within.] Who is that at the door, that keeps all this noise? Dro. S. By my troth, your town is troubled with unruly boys.

Ant. E. Are you there, wife? you might have come before. tbe door.

Adr. Your wife, sir knavel go, get yon from Dro. E. If you went in pain, master, this knave would go sore.

Ang. Here is neither cheer, sir, nor welcome: we would fain have either.

Bal. In debating which was best, we shall part with neither.

Dro. E. They stand at the door, master; bid them welcome hither.

Ant. E. There is something in the wind, that we cannot get in. Dro. E. You would say so, master, if your garments were thin. Your cake here is warm within; you stand here in the cold: It would make a man mad as a buck, to be so bought and sold.

Ant. E. Go, fetch me somthing, I'll break ope the gate.

Dro. S. Break any breaking bere, and I'll break your knave's pate.

Dro. E. A man may break a word with you, sir; and words are hut wind; Ay, and break it in your face, so be break it not behind. Dro. S. It seems thou wantest breaking; out upon thee, hind!

Dro. E. Here's too much out upon thee: I pray thee, let me in.

Dro. S. Ay, when fowls have no feathers and fish have no fin.

Ant. E. Well, I'll break iu; go borrow me E Crow.

Dro. E. A crow without a feather; master, meau you so? a feather: For a fish without a fin there's a fowl without

If a crow help us in, sirrah, we'll pluck a crow together.

And we shall make full satisfaction.—
Twenty-five years have I but gone in travail
Of you, my sons; nor till this present hour
My heavy burdens are delivered:—
The duke, my husband, and my children both,
And you the calendars of their nativity,
Go to a gossip's feast, and go with me;
After so long grief, such nativity! [feast.

Duke. With all my heart, I'll gossip at this [Exeunt Duke, Abb,. Ege., Cour., Mer., Ang., and Attendants.

Dro. S. Master, shall I fetch your stuff from shipboard? [embark'd? Ant. E. Dromio, what stuff of mine hast thou Dro. S. Your goods, that lay at host, sir, in the Centaur. [Dromio:

Ant. S. He speaks to me; I am your master, Come, go with us: we'll look to that anon: Embrace thy brother there; rejoice with him. [Exeunt ANT., S. and E., ADR., and LUC. Dro. S. There is a fat friend at your master's house,

That kitchen'd me for you to-day at dinner: She now shall be my sister, not my wife. Dro. E. Methinks you are my glass, and not my brother:

I see by you I am a sweet-faced youth.
Will you walk in to see their gossiping?

Dro. S. Not I, sir; you are my elder.

Dro. E. That's a question: how shall we try it?

Dro. S. We will draw cuts for the senior: till then, lead thou first.

Dro. E. Nay, then thus:
We came into the world like brother and brother:

And now let's go hand in hand, not one before another. [Exeunt.

Enter from the House of ANTIPHOLUS OF EPHESUS, DROMIO OF SYRACUSE,

Ant. S. Why, how now, Dromio? where runn'st thou so fast?

Dro. S. Do you know me, sir? am I Dromio?

am I your man? am I myself?

Ant. S. Thou art Dromio, thou art my man, thou art thyself.

Dro. S. I am an ass, I am a woman's man, and beside myself.

Ant. S. What woman's man? and how beside thyself? Dro. S. Marry, sir, beside myself, I am due to a woman; one that claims me, one that haunts me, one that will have me.

Ant. S. What claim lays she to thee?

Dro. S. Marry sir, such claim ns you would lay to your horse: and she would have me as a beast; not that, I being a beast, she would have me; but that she, being n very beastly creature. lays claim to me.

Ant. S. What is she?

Dro. S. A very reverent body; ay, such n one as a man may not speak of without he say sir-reverence: I have but lean luck in the match, and yet she is n wondrous fat marriage.

Ant. S. How dost thou mean? - a fat marriage?

Dro. S. Marry, sir, she's the kitchen-wench, and all grease; and I know not what use to put her to, but to make a lamp of her, and run from her by her own light. I warrant, her rags, and the tallow in them, will burn a Poland winter: if she lives till doomsday, she'll burn a week longer than the whole world.

Ant. S. What complexion is she of?

Dro. S. Swart, like my shoe; but her face nothing like so clean kept: for why? she sweats, a man may go over shoes in the grime of it. Ant. S. That's n fault that water will mend. Dro. S. No, sir, 'tis in grain; Noah's flood could not do it. Ant. S. What's her name?

Dro. S. Nell, sir; -but her name and threequarters, that is an ell and three-quarters, will not measure her from hip to hip.

Ant. S. Then she bears some breadth? Dro. S. No longer from head to foot than from hip to hip: she is spherical, like a globe: I could find out countries in her.

Ant. S. In what part of ber body stands Ireland?

Dro. S. Marry, sir, in her buttocks: I found it out by the bogs.

Ant. S. Where Scotland?

Dro. S. I found it by the barrenness; hard in the palm of the hand.

Ant. S. Where France?

Dro. S. In her forehead; armed and reverted, making war against ber hair.

Ant. S. Where England?

Dro. S. I looked for the chalky cliffs, but I could find no whiteness in them: but I guess it stood in her chin, by the salt rheum that ran between France and it.

Ant. S. Where Spain?

Dro. S. Faith, I saw it not; but I felt it hot in her breath.

Ant. S. Where America?—the Indies?

Dro. S. O, sir, upon her nose, all o'er embellished with rubies, carbuncles, sapphires, declining their rich aspect to the hot breath of Spain; who sent whole armadas of carracks to be ballast at her nose.

Ant. S. Where stood Belgia,-the Netherlands?

Dro. S. O, sir, I did not look so low.conclude, this drudge or diviner laid claim to me; called me Dromio; swore I was assured to ber; told me what privy marks I had about me, as the mark of my shoulder, the mole in my neck, the great wart on my left arm, that I, amazed, ran from her as a witch: and, I think, if my breast had not been made of faith and my heart of steel, she had transformed mc to a curtail-dog, and made me turn i wheel. [road; Ant. S. Go, hie thee presently post to the And if the wind blow any way from shore,

If any bark put forth, come to the mart, Where I will walk till thou return to me. If every one knows us, and we know none, 'Tis time, I think, to trudge, pack, and be gone. Dro. S. As from a bear a man would run for

I will not harbour in this town to-night.

So fly I from ber that would be my wife.

Exit. Ant. S. There's none but witches do inhabit here;

And therefore 'tis high time that I were hence. She that doth call me husband, even my soul Doth for a wife abhor; but her fair sister, Possess'd with such a gentle sovereign grace, Of such enchanting presence and discourse, Hath almost made me traitor to myself: But, lest myself be guilty to self-wrong, I'll stop mine ears against the mermaid's song.

Enter ANGELO.

Ang. Master Antipholus? Ant. S. Ay, that's my name. [chain; Ang. I know it well, sir. Lo, bere is the I thought to have ta'en you at the Porcupine: The chain unfinish'd made me stay thus long. Ant. S. What is your will that I shall do with this? Ang. What please yourself, sir; I have made it for you.

Ant. S. Made it for me, sir! I bespoke it not. Ang. Not once nor twice, but twenty times yon bave:

Go home with it, and please your wife withal; And soon at supper-time I'll visit you, And then receive my money for the chain.

Ant. S. I pray you, sir, receive the money now,

For fear you ne'er see chain nor money more. Ang. You are a merry man, sir; fare you well. Exit.

Ant. S. What I should think of this I cannot tell:

But this I think, there's no man is so vain That would refuse so fair an offer'd chain. I see a man here needs not live by shifts, When in the street he meets such golden gifts. I'll to the mart, and there for Dromio stay; If any ship put out, then straight away. |Exit And put the same into young Arthur's hand. Thy nephew and right royal sovereign.

K. John. What follows, if we disallow of Chat. The proud control of fierce and bloody war.

To enforce these rights so forcibly withheld. K. John. Here have we war for war, and blood for blood Controlment for controlment: so answer France. Chat. Then take my king's defiance from my mouth,

The furthest limit of my embassy.

K. John. Bear mine to him, and so depart in peace:

Be thou as lightning in the eyes of France; For ere thou canst report I will be there, The thunder of my cannon shall be heard: So, hence! Be thou the trumpet of our wrath, And sullen presnge of your own decay.-An honourable conduct let him have:-Pembroke, look to't. Farewell, Chatillon.

Exeunt CHATILLON and PEMBROKE. Eli. What now, my son! have I not ever said How that ambitious Constance would not cease Till she had kindled France and all the world Upon the right and party of her son? That might have been prevented and made whole

With very easy arguments of love; Which now the manage of two kingdoms must With fearful bloody issue arhitrate.

K. John. Our strong possession and our right for us. your right,

Eli. Your strong possession much more than Or else it must go wrong with you and me: So much my conscience whispers in your ear. Which none but heaven and you and I shall hear.

Enter the Sheriff of Northamptonshire, who whispers Essex.

Essex. My liege, here is the strangest controversy, Come from the country to be judg'd by you, That e'er I heard: shall I produce the men? K. John. Let them approach.

Exit Sheriff. Our abbeys and our priories shall pay This expedition's charge.

Re-enter Sheriff, with Robert Falconbridge and PHILIP, his bastard Brother.

What men are you? Bast. Your faithful subject I, a gentleman Born in Northamptonshire, and eldest son, As I suppose, to Robert Falconbridge,-A soldier, by the honour-giving hand Of Coeur-de-lion knighted in the field.

K. John. What art thou?

Rob. The son and heir to that same Falcon-[the heir? bridge. K. John. Is that the elder, and art thou

You came not of one mother, then, it seems. Bast. Most certain of one mother, mighty father: king, That is well known; and, as I think, one

But for the certain knowledge of that truth I put you o'er to heaven and to my mother:-Of that I doubt, as all men's children may.

Eli. Out on thee, rude man! thou don't shame thy mother,

And wound her honour with this diffidence. Bast. 1, madam? no, I have no reason for it,-

That is my hrother's plea, and none of mine; That which if he can prove, 'a pops me out At least from fair five hundred pound a-year; Heaven guard my mother's honour and my land!

K. John. A good blunt fellow.-Why, heing younger horn,

Doth he lay claim to thine inheritance? Bast. I know not why, except to get the land. But once he slander'd me with bastardy: But whe'r I he as true hegot or no, That still lay upon my mother's head; But, that I am as well begot, my liege,-Fair fall the bones that took the pains for mel-Compare our faces, and be judge yourself. If old Sir Robert did beget us both And were our father, and this son like him,-O old Sir Robert, father, on my knee

I give heaven thanks I was not like to thee! K. John. Why, what a madcap hath heaven lent us here! Eli. He hath a trick of Coeur-de-lion's face:

The accent of his tongue affecteth him: Do you not read some tokens of my son In the large composition of this man? K. John. Mine eye hath well examined his And finds them perfect Richard.—Sirrah, speak,

What doth move you to claim your brother's land? [father; Bast. Because he hath n half-face, like my

With that half-face would he have all my land: A half-fac'd groat five hundred pound a-year! Rob. My gracious liege, when that my father liv'd,

Your brother did employ my father much,-Bast. Well, sir, by this you cannot get my land:

Your tale must be, how he employ'd my mother. Rob. And once despatch'd him in an emhassy To Germany, there with the emperor To treat of high affairs touching that time. The advantage of his absence took the king, And in the meantime sojourn'd at my father's; Where how he did prevail I shame to speak,-But truth is truth: large lengths of seas and shores Between my father and my mother lay, As I have heard my father speak himself,-When this same lusty gentleman was got. Upon his death-hed he by will bequeath'd His lands to me; and took it, on his death, That this, my mother's son, was none of his; And if he were, he came into the world Full fourteen weeks hefore the course of tima Then, good my liege, let me have what is mine, My father's land, as was my father's will.

K. John. Sirrah, your brother is legitimate; Your father's wife did after wedlock hear him; And if she did play false, the fault was hers; Which fault lies on the hazards of all husbands Tell me, how if my brother, That marry wives. Who, as you say, took pains to get this son, Had of your father claim'd this son for his? In sooth, good friend, your father might have [Excunt Mer., Ang., Off., and Ant. E. Dro. S. To Adriana! that is where we din'd, Where Dowsabel did claim me for her husband: She is too big, I hope, for me to compass. Thither I must, although against my will, For servants must their masters' minds fulfil. Exit.

Scene II .- The same.

Enter Adriana and Luciana.

Adr. Ah, Luciana, did he tempt thee so? Might'st thou perceive austerely in his eye That he did plead in earnest, yea or no?

Look'd he or red or pale, or sad or merrily? What observation mad'st thou in this case Of his heart's meteors tilting in his face?

Luc. First, he denied you had him in no right. my spite.

Adr. He meant he did me none; the more Luc. Then swore he that he was a stranger here. the were.

Adr. And true he swore, though yet forsworn Luc. Then pleaded I for you.

Adr. And what said he? Luc. That love I begg'd for you he begg'd of me. [love?

Adr. With what persuasion did hetemptthy Luc. With words that in an honest suit might move.

First, he did praise my heauty, then my speech.

Adr. Didst speak him fair

Have patience, I heseech. Luc. Adr. I cannot, nor I will not hold me still: My tongue, though not my heart, shall have his will.

Adr. Ahl but I think him hetter than I say, And yet would herein others' eyes were worse:

Far from her nest the lapwing cries, away: My heart prays for him, though my tongue do curse.

ENTER DROMIO OF SYRACUSE.

Dro. S. Here, go: the desk, the purse: sweet now, make haste.

Luc. How hast thou lost thy breath?

Dro. S. By running fast. Adr. Where is thy master, Dromio? is he well? fhell.

Dro. S. No, he's in Tartar limbo, worse than A devil in an everlasting garment hath him; One whose hard heart is button'd up with steel; A fiend, a fairy, pitiless and rough; A wolf-nay worse, a fellow all in buff;

A back-friend, a shoulder-clapper, one that countermands The passages of alleys, creeks, and narrow lands;

A hound that runs counter, and yet draws dry foot well; One that, before the judgment, carries poor souls

Adr. Why, man, what is the matter? Dro. S. I do not know the matter: he is

'rested on the case. Isuit. Adr. What, is he arrested? tell me at whose Dro. S. I know not at whose suit he is arrested, well;

But he's in a suit of buff which 'rested him, that can I tell:

Will you send him, mistress, redemption, the money in the desk?

Adr. Go fetch it, sister .- This I wonder at, Exil LUCIANA.

That he, unknown to me, should be in debt.—
Tell me, was he arrested on a band?

Dro. S. Not on a band, but on a stronger thing

A chain, a chain: do you not hear it ring?

Adr. What, the chain?

[gone. Dro. S. No, no, the bell: 'tis time that I were It was two ere I left him, and now the clock strikes one.

Adr. The hours come back! that did I never hear.

Dro. S. O yes. If any hour meet a sergeant, 'a turns back for very fear.

Adr. As if time were in debt! how fondly . dost thou reason!

Dro. S. Time is a very bankrupt, and owes more than he's worth to season. Nay, he's a thief too: have you not heard men

Enter Luciana.

Adr. Go, Dromio; there's the money, hear it straight:

And hring thy master home immediately. Come, sister: I am press'd down with conceit; Conceit my comfort and my injury. Excunt.

SCENE III .- The same.

Enter Antipholus of Syracuse.

Ant. S. There's not a man I meet but doth salute me As if I were their well-acquainted friend; And every one doth call me by my name. Some tender money to me, some invite me; Some other give me thanks for kindnesses; Some offer me commodities to buy: Even now a tailor call'd me in his shop And show'd me silks that he hed hought for me, And therewithal took measure of my body. Sure, these are but imaginary wiles.

Enter Dromio of Syracuse.

And Lapland sorcerers inhabit here.

Dro S. Master, here's the gold you sent me for.

What, have you got the picture of Old Adam new apparelled?

Ant. S. What gold is this? What Adam dost thou mean?

We know his handiwork:-therefore, good mother,

To whom am I heholding for these limbs? Sir Rohert never holp to make this leg. Lady F. Hast thou conspired with thv brother too, (honour?

That for thine own gain shouldst defend mine What means this scorn, thou most untoward lisco-like:

Bast. Knight, knight, good mother,-Basil-What! I am duhh'd; I have it on my shoulder. But, mother, I am not Sir Rohert's son; I have disclaim'd Sir Rohert and my land; Legitimation, name, and all is gone: Then, good my mother, let me know my father,-

Some proper man, I hope: who was it, mother? Lady F. Hast thou denied thyself a Falconbridge?

Bast. As faithfully as I deny the devil. Lady F. King Richard Coeur-de-lion was thy father:

By long and vehement suit I was seduc'd To make room for him in my hushand's hed:-Heavenlay not my transgression to my charge!-Thou art the issue of my dear offence, Which was so strongly urg'd, past my defence. Bast. Now, by this light, were I to get again. Madam, I would not wish a hetter father.

And they shall say, when Richard me hegot, If thou hadst said him nay, it had been sin: Who says it was, he lies; I say 'twas not.

Exeunt.

ACT II.

Scene I.—France. Before the Walls of Angiers.

Enter, on one side, the ARCHDUKE OF AUSTRIA and Forces; on the other, PHILIP, King of France, Louis, Constance, Arthur, and Forces.

Lou. Before Angiers well met, brave Austria. Arthur, that great forerunner of thy blood, Richard, that robh'd the lion of his heart, And fought the holy wars in Palestine, By this brave duke came early to his grave: And, for amends to his posterity, At our importance hither is he come To spread his colours, hoy, in thy behalf; And to rehuke the usurpation Of thy unnatural uncle, English John: Emhrace him, love him, give him welcome hither.

Arth. God shall forgive you Cœur-de-lion's death.

The rather that you give his offspring life. Shadowing their right under your wings of war: I give you welcome with a powerless hand, But with a heart full of unstained love, Welcome before the gates of Angiers, duke. Who would not do Lou. A noble hoy!

thee right? Aust. Upon thy cheek lay I this zealous kiss,

As seal to this indenture of my love,-That to my home I will no more return Till Angiers, and the right thou hast in France, Together with that pale, that white-fac'd shore. Whose foot spurns hack the ocean's roaring tides,

And coops from other lands her islanders,-Even till that England, hedg'd in with the main, That water-walled bulwark still secure And confident from foreign purposes,-Even till that utmost corner of the west Salute thee for her king: till then, fair boy, Will I not think of home, but follow arms. Const. O, take his mother's thanks, a widow's thanks, Till your strong hand shall help to give him strength To make a more requital to your lovel. Aust. The peace of heaven is theirs that lift their swords

In such a just and charitable war.

K. Phi. Well, then, to work: our cannon shall be hent

Against the brows of this resisting town,-Call for our chiefest men of discipline, To cull the plots of hest advantages: We'll lay before this town our royal bones, Wade to the market-place in Frenchman's blood,

But we will make it subject to this boy. Const. Stay for an answer to your embassy Lest unadvis'd you stain your swords with blood:

My Lord Chatillon may from England bring That right in peace, which here we urge in war; And then we shall repent each drop of blood That hot rash haste so indirectly shed.

K. Phi. A wonder, lady!—lo, upon thy wish, Our messenger Chatillon is arrived!

Enter CHATILLON.

What England says, say briefly, gentle lord; We coldly pause for thee; Chatillon, speak. Chat. Then turn your forces from this paltry siege,

And stir them up against a mightier task. England, impatient of your just demands, Hath put himself in arms: the adverse winds, Whose leisure I have stay'd, have given him time

To land his legions all as soon as I; His marches are expedient to this town, His forces strong, his soldiers confident. With him along is come the mother-queen, An Até, stirring him to blood and strife; With her her niece, the Lady Blanch of Spain; With them a bastard of the king deceas'd: And all the unsettled humours of the land, Rash, inconsiderate, fiery voluntaries, nothing at his hands for my service hut hlows: when I am cold he heats me with heating; when I am warm he cools me with heating. waked with it when I sleep; raised with it when I sit; driven out of doors with it when I go from home; welcomed home with it when I return: nay, I hear it on my shoulders as a heggar wont her hrat; and I think, when he hath lamed me, I shall heg with it from door to door.

Ant. E. Come, go along; my wife is coming yonder.

Enter ADRIANA, LUCIANA, and the Courtezan, with PINCH and others.

Dro. E. Mistress, respice finem, respect your end; or rather the prophecy, like the parrot, Beware the rope's end.

Ant. E. Wilt thou still talk? Beats him. Cour. How say you now? is not your hushand mad?

Adr. His incivility confirms no less .-Good Doctor Pinch, you are a conjurer; Establish him in his true sense again,

And I will please you what you will demand. Luc. Alas, bow fiery and how sharp be looks! Cour. Mark how he tremhles in his ecstacyl Pinch. Give me your hand, and let me feel your pulse. [your ear.

Ant. E. There is my hand, and let it feel Pinch. I charge thee, Satan, hous'd within

this man,

To yield possession to my holy prayers, And to thy state of darkness hie thee straight: I conjure thee by all the saints in beaven.

Ant. E. Peace, doting wizard, peace; I am not mad.

Adr. O that thou wert not, poor distressed (customers? soull Ant. E. You minion, you, are these your Did this companion with the saffron face Revel and feast it at my house to-day, Whilst upon me the guilty doors were sbut, And I denied to enter in my bouse? home.

Adr. O bushand, God doth know youdin'd at Where would you had remain'd until this time, Free from these slanders and this open shame! Ant. E. I din'd at home! Thou villain, what say'st thou?

Dro. E. Sir, sooth to say, you did not dine at bome.

Ant. E. Were not my doors lock'd up and I sbut out? Dro. E. Perdy, your doors were lock'd and you sbut out.

Ant. E. And did not she berself revile me there? Ithere. Dro. E. Sans fahle, she herself revil'd you Ant. E. Did not her leitchen-maid rail, taunt, and scorn me? Dro. E. Certes, she did: the kitchen-vestal scorn'd you.

Ant. E. And did not I in rage depart from thence? (witness,

Dro. E. In verity, you did;—my hones hear That since have felt the vigour of his rage. Adr. Is't good to soothe him in these contraries? fvein, Pinch. It is no shame: the fellow finds bis And, yielding to him, humours well his frenzy. Ant. E. Thou hast suhorn'd the goldsmith to arrest me.

Adr. Alas! I sent you money to redeem you, By Dromio here, who came in haste for it. Dro. E. Money hy mel heart and good-will you might,

But surely, master, not a rag of money.

Ant. E. Went'st not thou to her for a purse of ducats?

Adr. He came to me, and I deliver'd it. Luc. And I am witness with her that she did. Dro. E. God and the rope-maker, hear me witness

That I was sent for nothing but a ropel Pinch. Mistress, hoth man and master is possess'd; I know it hy their pale and deadly looks:

They must be hound, and laid in some dark room.

Ant. E. Say, wherefore didst thou lock me forth to-day?--And why dost thon deny the hag of gold?

Adr. I did not, gentle hushand, lock thee forth.

Dro. E. And, gentle master, I receiv'd no gold;

But I confess, sir, that we were lock'd out. Adr. Dissembling villain, thou speak'st false in hoth.

Ant. E. Dissembling harlot, thou art false in And art confederate with a damned pack, To make a loathsome abject scorn of me: But with these nails I'll pluck out these false eyes,

That would be bold me in this shameful sport. [PINCH and Assistants bind ANT. E. and DRO. E. Adr. O, bind him, bind him; let him not come near me. Pinch. More company;—the fiend is strong [looks! within him. Luc. Ah me, poor man! bow pale and wan he Ant. E. What, will you murder me? Thou gaoler, thou,

I am thy prisoner: wilt thou suffer them To make a rescue?

. Off. Masters, let him go: He is my prisoner, and you shall not have him.

Pinch. Go, bind this man, for he is frantic too.

Adr. What wilt thou do, thou peevish officer? Hast thou delight to see a wretched man Do outrage and displeasure to himself?

Off. He is my prisoner: if I let him go, The deht he owes will be requir'd of me.

Adr. I will discharge thee ere I go from thee: Bear me forth with unto his creditor, [it. And, knowing how the debt grows, I will pay Good master doctor, see him safe convey'd Home to my house. - O most unhappy day!

Ant. E. O most unhappy strumpet!
Dro. E. Master, I am here enter'd in hond for you.

villain! wherefore Ant. E. Oot on thee, dost thou mad me? [mad.

Dro. E. Will you he hound for nothing? he [talk] Good master; cry, the devil .-Luc. God help, poor souls, how idly do they Adr. Go hear him hence.—Sister, go you with me .-

Thy sins are visited in this poor child; The canon of the law is laid on him, Being but the second generation Removed from thy sin-conceiving womb.

K. John. Bedlam, have done. I have but this to say,-Const. That he is not only plagued for her sin, But God hath made her sin and her the plague On this removed issue, plagu'd for her, And with her plague, her sin; his injury Her injury, -the beadle to her sin; All punish'd in the person of this child, And all for her: a plague upon her!

Eli. Thou unadvised scold, I can produce [will; A will that bars the title of thy son. Const. Ay, who doubts that? a will! a wicked A woman's will; a canker'd grandam's will! K. Phi. Peace, lady! pause, or be more temperate: It ill beseems this presence to cry aim To these ill-tuned repetitions .-Some trumpet summon hither to the walls These men of Angiers: let us hear them speak Whose title they admit, Arthur's or John's.

Trumpet sounds. Enter Citizens upon the walls.

I Cit. Who is it that hath warn'd us to the walls?

K. Phi. 'Tis France, for England. K. John. England, for itself:-You men of Angiers, and my loving subjects, K. Phi. You Joving men of Angiers, Arthur's subjects, Our trumpet call'd you to this gentle parle. K. John. For our advantage; therefore hear us first.

These flags of France, that are advanced here Before the eye and prospect of your town, Have hither march'd to your endamagement: The cannons have their bowels full of wrath, And ready mounted are they to spit forth Their iron indignation 'gainst your walls: All preparation for a bloody siege And merciless proceeding by these French Confronts your city's eyes, your winking gates; And, but for our approach, those sleeping

That as a waist do girdle you about, By the compulsion of their ordinance By this time from their fixed beds of lime Had been dishabited, and wide havoc made For bloody power to rush upon your peace. But, on the sight of us, your lawful king, Who painfully, with much expedient march, Have brought a countercheck before your gates, To save unscratch'd your city's threaten'd cheeks,-Behold, the French, amaz'd, vouchsafe a parle; And now, instead of bullets wrapp'd in fire, To make a shaking fever in your walls, They shoot but calm words, folded up in smoke, To make a faithless error in your ears: Which trust accordingly, kind citizens, And let us in, your king; whose labour'd spirits, Forwearied in this action of swift speed, Crave harbourage within your city-walls.

K. Phi. When I have said, make answer to us both.

Lo, in this right hand, whose protection

Is most divinely vow'd upon the right Of him it holds, stands young Plantagenet. Son to the elder brother of this man, And king o'er him and all that he enjoys: For this down-trodden equity we tread In war-like march these greens before your town;

Being no further enemy to you Than the constraint of hospitable zeal In the relief of this oppressed child Religiously provokes. Be pleased, then. To pay that duty which you truly owe To him that owes it, namely, this young prince: And then our arms, like to a muzzled bear, Save in aspect, have all offence seal'd up; Our cannons' malice vainly shall be spent Against the invulnerable clouds of heaven: And with a blessed and unvex'd retire, With unhack'd swords and helmets all un-bruis'd. We will bear home that lusty blood again Which here we came to spout against your town, And leave your children, wives, and you in peace. But if you fondly pass our proffer'd offer. 'Tis not the rondure of your old-fac'd walls Can hide you from our messengers of war, Though all these English, and their discipline, Were harbour'd in their rude circumference. Then, tell us, shall your city call us lord In that behalf which we have challeng'd it? Or shall we give the signal to our rage, And stalk in blood to our possession?

1 Cit. In brief, we are the King of England's subjects:

For him, and in his right, we hold this town. K. John. Acknowledge then the king, and let me in.

1 Cit. That can we not; but he that proves the king,

To him will we prove loyal: till that time Have we ramm'd up our gates against the world. K. John. Doth not the crown of Engand prove the king? And, if not that, I bring you witnesses, Twice fifteen thousand hearts of England's breed,-

Bast. Bastards, and else. K. John. To verify our title with their lives. K. Phi. As many and as well-born bloods as those,

Bast. Some bastards too.

K. Phi. Stand in his face, to contradict his claim.

1 Cit. Till you compound whose right is worthiest.

We for the worthiest hold the right from both-K. John. Then God forgive the sin of all those souls. That to their everlasting residence, Before the dew of evening fall, shall fleet,

In dreadful trial of our kingdom's king! K. Phi. Amen, Amen!—Mount, chevaliers! to arms!

Bast. St. George, that swinged the dragon, and e'er since

Sits on his horse' back at mine hostess' door, Teach us some fence!-Sirrah [to AUSTRIA], were I at home,

At your den, sirrah, with your lioness,

At hoard, he fed not for my urging it; Alone, it was the subject of my theme; In company, I often glanced it; Still did I tell him it was vile and bad.

Abb. And thereof came it that the man was mad:

The venom clamours of a jealous woman Poison more deadly than a mad dog's tooth. It seems his sleeps were hindered by thy railing: And therefore comes it that his head is light, Thou say'st his meat was sauc'd with thy uphraidings:

Unquiet meals make ill digestions,
Thereof the raging fire of fever hred;
And what's a fever but a fit of madness?
Thou say'st his sports were hinder'd by thy hrawls:

Sweet recreation harr'd, what doth ensue
But moody and dull melancholy,—
Kinsman to grim and comfortless despair,—
And, at her heels, n buge infectious troop
Of pale distemperatures and foes to life?
In food, in sport, and life-preserving rest
To be disturh'd would mad or man or beast:
The consequence is, then, thy jealous fits
Have scar'd thy husband from the use of's wits.

Luc. She never reprehended him but mildly,

When he demean'd himself rough, rude, and wildly.—
Why bear you these rebukes, and answer not?

Adr. Sbe did betray me to my own reproof.—
Good people, enter, and lay bold on him.
Abb. No, not a creature enters in my house.

Adr. Then let your servants bring my bushand forth.

Abb. Neither: be took this place for sanctuary,

And it shall privilege him from your bands

Till I have brought him to his wits again,
Or lose my labour in assaying it.

Adr. I will attend my husband, be his nurse,

Diet his sickness, for it is my office, And will have no attorney but myself; And therefore let me have him bome with me. Abb. Be patient; for I will not let him str

Till I have used the approved means I have,
With wholesome syrups, drugs, and holy prayers,

To make of him a formal man again: It is a brancb and parcel of mine oath, A charitable duty of my order; Therefore depart, and leave him here with me.

Adr. I will not hence and leave my husband bere;

And ill it doth heseem your holiness To separate the hushand and the wife.

Abb. Be quiet, and depart: thou shalt not have him. [Exit Abhess. Luc. Complain unto the duke of this indignity.

Adr. Come, go; I will fall prostrate at his feet,
And never rise until my tears and prayers

Have won his grace to come in person hither,
And take perforce my husband from the abhess.

Mer. By this, I think, the dial points at five:
Anon, I am sure, the duke himself in person

Anon, I am sure, the duke himself in person Comes this way to the melancholy vale;
The place of death and sorry execution,
Behind the ditches of the abhey bere.

Ang. Upon what canse?
Mer. To see a reverend Syracusan merchant
Who put unluckily into this bay,
Against the laws and statutes of this town.

Bebeaded publicly for his offence. Ihis death.

Ang. See where they come: we will behold

Luc. Kneel to the duke before he pass the abhey.

Enter Duke, attended; ÆGEON, bare-headed with the Headsman and other Officers.

Duke. Yet once again proclaim it publicly, If any friend will pay the sum for him, He shall not die; so much we tender him.

Adr. Justice, most sacred duke, against the abbess!

Duke. She is a virtuous and a reverend lady;

It cannot he that she hath done thee wrong.

Adr. May it please your grace, Antipholus,

my husband,—

Whom I made lord of me and all I had, At your important letters,—this ill day A most outrageous fit of madness took him; Thatdesperately heburried through the street,—Witb bim his bondman, all as mad as he,—Doing displeasure to the citizens By rushing in their houses, hearing thence Rings, jewels, anything his rage did like. Once did I get him hound, and sent him home, Whilst to take order for the wrongs I went, That bere and there his fury bad committed. Anon, I wot not hy what strong escape, He broke from those that had the guard of him; And, with his mad attendant and himself, Eacb one with ireful passion, with drawn swords,

Met us again, and, madly bent on us,
Chased us away; till, raising of more aid,
We came again to hind them: then they fied
Into this ahhey, whither we pursued them:
And here the abbess shuts the gates on us,
And will not suffer us to fetch him out,
Nor send him forth, that we may hear him

hence.
Therefore, most gracious duke, with thy command, [help.

Let him he hrought forth, and horne hence for Duke. Long since thy hushand serv'd me in my wars;

And I to thee engag'd a prince's word, When thou didst make him master of the hed, To do him all the grace and good I could.—. Go, some of you, knock at the ahbey-gate, And bid the lady ahhess come to me: I will determine this hefore I stir.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. O mistress, mistress, shift and save yourself.

My master and his man are both broke loose, Beaten the maids a-row, and hound the doctor, Whose beard they have singed off with brands of fire:

And ever as it blazed they threw on him Great pails of puddled mire to quench the hair: My master preaches patience to him, while His man with scissors nicks him like a fool: And, sure, unless you send some present help, Between them they will kill the conjurer.

How like you this wild counsel, mighty states? Smacks it not something of the policy?

K. John. Now, by the sky that hangs above our heads,

I like it well.—France, shall we knit our powers,

And lay this Angiers even with the ground; Then, after, fight who shall be king of it? Bast. An if thou hast the mettle of a king,-Being wrong'd, as we are, by this peevish town.-Turn thou the mouth of thy artillery, As we will ours, against these saucy walls;

And when that we have dash'd them to the ground,

Why, then defy each other, and, pell-mell, Make work upon ourselves, for heaven or hell! K. Phi. Let it be so .- Say, where will you assault? Struction K. John. We from the west will send de | Since I first called my brother's father dad. Into this city's bosom.

Aust. I from the north.

K. Phi. Our thunder from the south Shall rain their drift of bullets on this town. Bast. O prudent discipline! From north to south.

Austria and France shoot in each other's mouth:

I'll stir them to it. [Aside.]—Come, away, away!

1 Cit. Hear us, great kings: vouchsafe awhile to stay,

And I shall show you peace and fair-fac'd league;

Win you this city without stroke or wound; Rescue those breathing lives to die in beds, That here come sacrifices for the field: Perséver not, but hear me, mighty kings.

K. John. Speak on, with favour; we are Blench, bent to hear. I Cit. That daughter there of Spain, the Lady Is niece to England:-look upon the years Of Louis the Dauphin, and that lovely maid: If lusty love should go in quest of beauty, Where should he find it fairer than in Blanch? If zealous love should go in search of virtue, Where should he find it purer than in Blanch?

If love ambitious sought a match of birth, Whose veins bound richer blood than Lady Blanch?

Such as she is, in beauty, virtue, birth, Is the young Dauphin every way complete,-If not complete of, say he is not she; And she again wants nothing, to name want, If want it be not, that she is not he: He is the half part of a blessed man, Left to be finished by such a she; And she a fair divided excellence, Whose fulness of perfection lies in him. O, two such silver currents, when they join Do glorify the banks that bound them in; And two such shores to two such streams made one, Two such controlling bounds shall you be, To these two princes, if you marry them. This union shall do more than battery can To our fast-closed gates; for, at this match, With swifter spleen than powder can enforce, The mouth of passage shall we fling wide ope, And give you entrance; but without this match, In such a love so vile a lout as he.

The sea enraged is not half so deaf, Lions more confident, mountains and rocks More free from motion; no, not Death himself In mortal fury half so peremptory, As we to keep this city.

Here's a stay That shakes the rotten carcase of old Death Out of his rags! Here's a large mouth, indeed. That spits forth death and mountains, rocks and seas:

Talks as familiarly of roaring lions As maids of thirteen do of puppy-dogs! What cannoneer begot this lusty blood? He speaks plain cannon,—fire and smoke and bounce;

He gives the bastinado with his tongue: Our ears are cudgell'd; not a word of his But buffets better than a fist of France: Zounds! I was never so bethump'd with words

Eli. Son, list to this conjunction, make this match;

Give with our niece a dowry large enough: For by this knot thou shalt so surely tie Thy now unsur'd assurance to the crown, That you green boy shall have no sun to ripe The bloom that promiseth a mighty fruit. I see a yielding in the looks of France; Mark how they whisper: urge them while their

Are capable of this ambition, Lest zeal, now melted by the windy breath Of soft petitions, pity, and remorse, Cool and congeal again to what it was. 1 Cit. Why answer not the double majesties

This friendly treaty of our threaten'd town? K. Phi. Speak England first, that hath been forward first

To speak unto this city: what say you? K. John. If that the Dauphin there, thy princely son,

Can in this book of beauty read, "I love," Her dowry shall weigh equal with a queen: For Anjou, and fair Touraine, Maine, Poictiers, And all that we upon this side the sea,-Except this city now by us besieg'd,-Find liable to our crown and dignity, Shall gild her bridal bed; and make her rich In titles, honours, and promotions, As she in beauty, education, blood, Holds hand with any princess of the world.

K. Phi. What say'st thou, boy? look in the lady's face.

Lou. I do, my lord, and in her eye I find A wonder, or a wondrous miracle, The shadow of myself form'd in her eye: Which, being but the shadow of your son. Becomes a sun, and makes your son a shadow: I do protest I never lov'd myself Till now infixed I beheld myself Drawn in the flattering table of her eye.

Whispers with BLANCH. Bast. [Aside.] Drawn in the flattering table of her eye!-Hang'd in the frowning wrinkle of her brow!-And quarter'd in her heart!—he doth espy Himself love's traitor! This is pity now, That, hang'd, and drawn, and quarter'd, there-should be

Æge. Is not your name, sir, call'd Antipholus?

And is not that your bondman Dromio?

Dro. E. Within this hour I was his bondman, sir,

But he, I thank him, gnaw'd in two my cords: Now am I Dromio and his man, unbound. Æge. I am sure you hoth of you remember me.

Dro. E. Ourselves we do remember, sir, hy For lately we were hound as you are now.
You are not Pinch's patient, are you, sir?

You are not Pinch's patient, are you, sir?

Æge. Why look yon strange on me? you know me well.

Ant. E. I never saw you in my life, till now.

Æge. Oh! grief hath chang'd me since you saw me last;

And careful hours, with Time's deformed hand, Have written strange defeatures in my face: But tell me yet, dost thou not know my voice? Ant. E. Neither.

Æge. \ Dromio, nor thou? Dro. E. No, trust me, sir, nor I.

Ege. I am sure thou dost. Dro. E. Ay, sir; hut I am snre I do not; and whatsoever a man denies, you are now bound to helieve him. [tremity]

Æge. Not know my voice! O, time's ex-Hast thou so crack'd and splitted my poor tongue,

In seven short years, that here my only son
Knows not my feehle key of untun'd cares?
Though now this grained face of mine he hid
In sap-consuming winter's drizzled snow,
And all the conduits of my hlood froze up,
Yet hath my night of life some memory,
My wasting lamps some fading glimmer left,
My dull deaf ears a little use to hear:
All these old witnesses,—I cannot err,—
Tell me, thou art my son Antipholus.

Ant. É. I never saw my father in my life. Ege. But seven years since, in Syracusa, hoy, Thou know'st we parted; but perhaps, my son, Thou sham'st to acknowledge me in misery.

Ant. E. The duke, and all that know me in the city,

Can witness with me that it is not so: I ne'er saw Syracusa in my life.

Duke. I tell thee, Syracusan, twenty years Have I been patron to Antipholus, During which time he ne'er saw Syracusa: I see, thy age and dangers make thee dote.

Enter the Abbess, with Antipholus Syracusan and Dromio Syracusan.

Abb. Most mighty duke, behold a man much wrong'd. [All gather to see him.

Adr. I see two hushands, or mine eyes deceive me.

Duke. One of these men is genius to the other;

And so of these. Which is the natural man, And which the spirit? Who deciphers them? Dro. S. I, sir, am Dromio; command him away.

Dro. E. I, sir, am Dromio; pray let me stay.
Ant. S. Ægeon, art thou not? or else his ghost?

Dro. S. O, my old master, who hath hound him here?

Abb. Whoever bound him, I will loose his bonds.

And gain a husband by his liherty.—
Speak, old Ægeon, if thou be'st the man
That hadst a wife once called Æmilia,
That hore thee at a burden two fair sons:
O, if thou be'st the same Ægeon, speak,
And speak unto the same Æmilia!

Abb. By men of Epidamnum, he and I, And the twin Dromio, all were taken up: Bnt, by and hy, rude fisherman of Corinth By force took Dromio and my son from them, And me they left with those of Epidamnum: What then became of them I cannot tell; I to this fortune that you see me in. [right: Duke. Why, here begins his morning story These two Antipholus's, these two so like, And these two Dromios, one in semblance,—Besides her urging of her wreck at sea,—These are the parents to these children, Which accidentally are met together.

Antipholus, thou cam'st from Corinth first?

Ant. S. No, sir, not I; I came from Syracuse.

Duke. Stay, stand apart; I know not which is which. [ours lord.]

Ant. E. I came from Corinth, my most graci-Dro. E. And I with him. Ant. E. Brought to this town by that most famous warrior,

Duke Menaphon, your most renowned uncle.

Adr. Which of you two did dine with me to-day?

Ant. S. I, gentle mistress.

Adr. And are not you my husband?
Ant. E. No; I say nay to that.
Ant. S. And so do I, yet she did call me so;

And this fair gentlewoman, her sister here, Did call me brother.—What I told you then, I hope I shall have leisure to make good; If this be not a dream I see and hear. [me Ang. That is the chain, sir, which you had o

Ang. That is the chain, sir, which you had of Ant. S. I think it he, sir, I deny it not. Ant. E. And you, sir, for this chain arrested me.

Ang. I think I did, sir: I deny it not.

Adr. I sent you money, sir, to be your bail,

By Dromio; but I think he brought it not.

Dro. E. No, none by me. [you, Ant. S. This purse of ducats I receiv'd from And Dromio my man did bring them me: I see we still did meet each other's man, And I was ta'en for him, and he for me.

And thereupon these errors are arose. (bere. Ant. E. These ducats pawn I for my father Duke. It shall not need; thy father hath his for my good cheer. [pains Abb. Renowned duke, vouchsale to take the To go with us into the abhey here, And hear at large discoursed all our fortunes:—And all that are assembled in this place, That by this sympathized one day's error Have suffer'd wrong, go, keep ns company,

Then speak again, -not all thy former tale, But this one word, whether thy tale he true. Sal. As true as I believe you think them false That give you cause to prove my saying true.

Const. O, if thou teach me to believe this sorrow,

Teach thou this sorrow how to make me die; And let belief and life encounter so As doth the fury of two desperate men. Which in the very meeting fall and die!-Louis marry Blanch? O boy, then where art thou?

France friend with England! what hecomes of] me? Fellow, be gone: I cannot brook thy sight; This news hath made thee a most ugly man. Sal. What other harm have I, good lady, done,

But spoke the harm that is hy others done? Const. Which harm within itself so heinous is, As it makes harmful all that speak of it.

Arth. I do heseech you, madam, be content. Const. If thou, that bid'st me he content, wert grim,

Ugly, and slanderous to thy mother's womh, Full of unpleasing blots and sightless stains, Lame, foolish, crooked, swart, prodigious, Patch'd with foul moles and eye-ofiending marks,

I would not care, I then would he content; For then I should not love thee; no, nor thou Become thy great birth, nor deserve a crown. But thou art fair; and at thy hirth, dear boy, Rature and fortune join'd to make thee great: Of nature's gifts thou mayst with lilies hoast, And with the helf-blown rose: but Fortune, O! She is corrupted, chang'd, and won from thee; She adulterates hourly with thine uncle John; And with her golden hand hath pluck'd on France

To tread down fair respect of sovereignty, And made his majesty the bawd to theirs. France is a hawd to Fortune, and king John-That strumpet Fortune, that usurping John!-Tell me, thou fellow, is not France forsworn? Envenom him with words; or get thee gone, And leave those woes alone, which I alone Am hound to under-hear.

Sal. Pardon me, madam, I may not go without you to the kings.

Const. Thou mayst, thou shalt; I will not go with thee:

I will instruct my sorrows to he proud; For grief is proud, and makes his honour stout, To me, and to the state of my great grief, Let kings assemble; for my grief's so great That no supporter but the huge firm earth Can hold it up: here I and sorrows sit; Here is my throne, bid kings come bow to it.

Seats herself on the ground.

Enter King John, King Philip, Louis BLANCH, ELINOR, BASTARD, AUSTRIA, and Attendants.

K. Phi. 'Tis true, fair daughter; and this hlessed day Ever in France shall be kept festival: To solemnize this day the glorions sun Stays in his course, and plays the alchemist, Turning, with splendour of his precious eye, The meagre cloddy earth to glittering gold: The yearly course that brings this day about Shall never see it but a holiday.

Const. A wicked day, and not a holy day! Rising. What hath this day deserv'd? what hath it done. That it in golden letters should be set Among the high tides in the calendar? Nay, rather turn this day out of the week, This day of shame, oppression, perjury: Or, if it must stand still, let wives with child Pray that their hurdens may not fall this day, Lest that their hopes prodigiously be cross'd: But on this day let seamen fear no wreck; No bargains hreak that are not this day made: This day, all things hegun come to ill end,-Yea, faith itself to hollow falsehood change! K. Phi. By heaven, lady, you shall have no cause

To curse the fair proceedings of this day. Have I not pawn'd to you my majesty?

Const. You have beguil'd me with a counterfeit Resembling majesty; which, being touch'd and tried,

Proves valueless: you are forsworn, forsworn: You came in arms to spill mine enemies' blood, But now in arms you strengthen it with yours: The grappling vigour and rough frown of war Is cold in amity and painted peace, And our oppression hath made up this league.-Arm, arm, you heavens, against these perjur'd kings! A widow cries; be husband to me, heavens! Let not the hours of this ungodly day Wear out the day in peace; but, ere sunset; Set armed discord 'twixt these perjur'd kings! Hear me, O, hear me!

Aust. Lady Constance, peace. Const. War! war! no peace! peace is to me

O Lymoges! O Austrial thou dost shame That bloody spoil: thou slave, thou wretch, thou coward!

Thou little valiant, great in villany! Thou ever strong upon the stronger sidel Thou Fortune's champion that dost never light But when her humorous ladyship is hy To teach thee safety!-thou art perjur'd too, And sooth'st up greatness. What a fool art thou, A ramping fool, to hrag, and stamp, and swear Upon thy party! Thou cold-blooded slave, Hast thou not spoke like thunder on my side? Been sworn my soldier? bidding me depend Upon thy stars, thy fortune, and thy strength? And dost thou now fall over to my foes? Thou wear a lion's hide! doff it for shame, And hang a calf's-skin on those recreant limbs!

Aust. O, that a man should speak those words to me! Bast. And hang a calf's-skin on those recreant limbs.

Aust. Thou der'st not say so, villain, for thy life. Bast. And hang a calf's-skin on those recreant limbs. K. John. We like not this; thou dost forget thyself. K. Phi. Here comes the holy legate of the pope.

ACT I.

Scene I.—Northampton. A Room of State in the Palace.

Enter King John, Queen Elinor, Pem-Broke, Essex, Salisbury, and others, with Chatillon.

K. John. Now, say, Chatillan, what would France with us?

Chat. Thus, after greeting, speaks the King of France,

In my behaviour, to the majesty,
The borrow'd majesty of England here.
Eli. Astrange beginning;—borrow'd majesty!
K. Jahn. Silence, good mother; hear the embassy. [behalf Chat. Philip at France, in right and true of thy deceased brather Geffrey's son, Arthur Plantagenet, lays most lawful claim To this fair island, and the territories,—Ta Ireland, Poictiers, Anjau, Tauraine, Maine; Desiring thee ta lay aside the sward

Which sways usurpingly these several titles,

Out of your grace, devise, ordain, impose Some gentle order; and then we shall be hiess'd To do your pleasure, and continue friends.

Pand. All form is formless, order orderless, Save what is opposite to England's love. Therefore, to arms! be champion of our church! Or let the church, our mother, breathe her curse,—

A mother's curse,—on her revolting son.
France, thou mayst hold a serpent by the tongue,

A chafed lion by the mortal paw,
A fasting tiger safer by the tooth,
Than keep in peace that hand which thou dost
K. Phi. I may disjoin my hand, but not my faith. [faith; Pand. So mak'st thou faith an enemy to And, like a civil war, sett'st oath to oath, Thy tongue against thy tongue. O, let thy vow First made to heaven, first he to heaven perform'd,—

That is, to be the champion of our church! What since thou swor'st is sworn against thyself,

And may not he performed by thyself:
For that which thou hast sworn to do amiss
Is not amiss when it is truly done;
And heing not done, where doing tends to ill,
The truth is then most done not doing it:
The hetter act of purposes mistook
Is to mistake again; though indirect,
Yet indirection thereby grows direct,
And falsehood falsehood cures; as fire cools

Within the scorched veins of one new hurn'd. It is religion that doth make vows kept; But thou hast sworn against religion, By what thou swear'st against the thing thou swear'st;

And mak'st an oath the surety for thy truth Against an oath: the truth thou are unsure To swear, swears only not to he forsworn; Else what a mockery should it be to swear! But thou dost swear only to he forsworn; And most forsworn, to keep what thou dost swear.

Therefore thy latter vows against thy first Is in thyself rehellion to thyself; And better conquest never canst thou make Than arm thy constant and thy nobler parts Against these giddy loose suggestions: Upon which hetter part our prayers come in, If thou vouchsafe them; but if not, then know The peril of our curses light on thee, So heavy as thou shalt not shake them off, But in despair die under their hlack weight.

Aust. Rehellion, flat rehellion!

Bast. Will't not he?
Will not a calf's-skin stop that mouth of thine?

Low Father, to arms!

Lou. Father, to arms!

Blanch.
Upon thy wedding-day?
Against the blood that thou hast married?
What, shall our feast he kept with slaughter'd men?
Shall hraying trumpets and loud churlish Clamours of hell,—he measures to our pomp?
O hushand, hear mel—ay, alack, how new Is hushand in my mouth!—even for that name, Which till this time my tongue did ne'er pronounce.

Upon my knee I heg, go not to arms
Against mine uncle.
Const.
O, upon my knee,

Made hard with kneeling. I do pray to thee, Thou virtuous Dauphin, alter not the doom Forethought by heaven.

Blonch. Now shall I see thy love: what motive may

Be stronger with thee than the name of wife?

Const. That which upholdeth him that thee upholds,

His honour:-O, thine honour, Louis, thine honour!

Lou. I muse your majesty doth seem so cold.
When such profound respects do pull you on.
Pand. I will denounce a curse upon his head.
K. Phi. Thou shalt not need.—England, I will fall from thee.

Const. O fair return of hanish'd majesty!
Eli. O foul revolt of French inconstancy!
K. John. France, thou shalt rue this hour within this hour.

Bast. Old Time the clock-setter, that bald sexton Time,

Is it as he will? well, then, France shall rue.

Blanch. The sun's o'ercast with blood: fair day, adieu!

Which is the side that I must go withal?
I am with hoth: each army hath a hand;
And in their rage, I having hold of hoth,
They whirl asunder and dismember me.
Hushand, I cannot pray that thou mayst win;
Uncle, I needs must pray that thou mayst lose;
Father, I may not wish the fortune thine;
Grandam, I will not wish thy wishes thive:
Whoever wins, on that side shall I lose;
Assured loss hefore the match he play'd.

Lou. Lady, with me; with me thy fortune lies.

Blanch. There where my fortune lives, there my life dies.

K. John. Cousin, go draw our puissance together.— [Exit BASTARD.
France, I am burn'd up with inflaming wrath;
A rage whose heat hath this condition,
That nothing can allay, nothing hut blood,—
The blood, and dearest-valu'd blood of France.
K. Phi. Thy rage shall burn thee up, and thou shalt turn

To ashes, ere our blood shall quench that fire:

Look to thyself, thou art in jeopardy.

K. John. No more than he that threats.—

To arms let's hiel | Exeunt severally.

Scene II.—The same. Plains near Angiers.

Alarums. Excursions. Enter the BASTARD, with AUSTRIA'S head.

Bast. Now, by my life, this day grows wondrous hot; Some airy devil hovers in the sky, [there, hot;

Some airy devil hovers in the sky, Indication And pours down mischief.—Austria's head lie While Philip breathes.

Enter King John, Arthur, and Hobert.

K. John. Hubert, keep this boy.—Philip make up: My mother is assailed in our tent,

And ta'en, I fear.

This calf, hred from his cow, from all the world; In sooth, be might: then, if he were my brother's,

My brother might not claim him; nor your father.

Being none of his, refuse him. This concludes.

My mother's son did get your father's beir; Your father's heirmust have your father's land. Rob. Shall, then, my father's will he of no force Seid tore ei doid which test eeseeogeib of Bast. Of no more force to dispossess me, sir,

Than was his will to get me, as I think. Eli. Whether hadst thou rather he a Falcon-bridge, And like thy brother, to enjoy thy land, Or the reputed son of Coeur-de-lion,

Lord of thy presence, and no land beside?

Bast. Madam, an if my hrother had my shape And I had his, Sir Robert bis, like him; And if my legs were two such riding-rods, My arms such eel-skins stuff'd, my face so thin That in mine ear I durst not stick a rose Lest men should say, Look, where three-farthings goes! And, to his shape, were heir to all this land, Would I might never stir from off this place, I'd give it every foot to have this face; I would not be Sir Nob in any case.

Eli. I like thee well: wilt thou forsake thy fortune,

Bequeath thy land to him, and follow me? I am a soldier, and now hound to France. Bast. Brother, take you my land, I'll take my chance: Your face hath got five hundred pound a-year; Yet sell your face for fivepence, and 'tis dear.-Madam, I'll follow you unto the death.

Eli. Nay, I would have you go hefore me Way. thitber.

Bast. Our country manners give our hetters K. John. What is thy name?

Bast. Philip, my liege; so is my name begun; Philip, good old Sir Rohert's wife's eldest son. K. John. From henceforth best his name whose form thou bear'st: Kneel thou down Philip, hut arise more great, Arise Sir Richard and Plantagenet.

Bast. Brother by the mother's side, give me your hand:

My father gave me honour, yours gave land .-Now blessed be the bour, by night or day, When I was got, Sir Robert was sway! Eli. The very spirit of Plantagenet!-I am thy grandam, Richard; call me so. Bast. Madam, by chance, but pot by truth:

wbat though? Something about, a little from the right, In at the window, or else o'er the hatch;

Who dares not stir hy day must walk by night; And have is have, however men do catch: Near or far off, well won is still well shot; And I am I, howe'er I was hegot.

K. John. Go, Falconbridge; now hast thou thy desire;

A landless knight makes thee a landed squire. Come, madam,-and come, Richard; we must speed

Bast. Brother, adieu: good fortune come to thee! For thou wast got i' the way of bonesty.

(Exeunt all except the BASTARD. A foot of honour better than I was: But many a many foot of land the worse. Well, now can I make any Joan a lady:-Good den, Sir Richard:-God-a-mercy, fellow:-And if his name be George, I'll call him Peter: For new-made bonour doth forget men's names:

'Tis too respective and too sociable
For your connection. Now your mereller,—
He and his toothpick at my worship's mess; And when my knightly stomach is suffic'd, Why then I suck my teeth, and catechize My pick'd man of countries: --- My dear sir,-Thus, leaning on mine elbow, I begin. I shall beseech you-that is question now; And then comes answer like an ABC-book:-O sir, says answer, at your best command; At your employment; at your service, sir:-No sir, says question, I, sweet sir, at yours: And so, ere answer knows what question would. Saving in dialogue of compliment, And talking of the Alps and Apennines, The Pyrenean and the river Po.-It draws towards supper in conclusion so.

But this is worshipful society, And fits the mounting spirit like myself: For he is hut a bastard to the time. That doth not smack of observation. And so am I, whether I smack or no;

And not alone in hahit and device, Exterior form, outward accoutrement, But from the inward motion to deliver Sweet, sweet, sweet poison for the age's tooth: Which, though I will not practise to deceive

Yet, to avoid deceit, I mean to learn; For it shall strew the footsteps of my rising. But who comes in such haste in riding-rohes? What woman-post is this? hath she no hushand,

That will take pains to blow a horn before ber? Enter LADY FALCONBRIDGE, and JAMES GURNEY.

Q met it is my mother.—How now, good lady! What brings you here to court so hastily?

Lady F. Where is that slave, thy brother?

where is be That holds in chase mine honour up and down? Bast. My hrother Robert? old Sir Robert's Colbrand the giant, that same mighty man? Is it Sir Rohert's son that you seek so?

Lady F. Sir Robert's son! Ay, thou unreverend boy, !Robert? Sir Robert's son: why scorn'st thou at Sir

He is Sir Robert's son; and so art thou. Bast. James Gurney, wilt thou give us leave awhile?

Gur. Good leave, good Phillip. Bast.

Phillip?-sparrow?-James, There's toys abroad: anon I'll tell thee more. Exit GURNEY.

Madam, I was not old Sir Rohert's son; Sir Robert might have eat his part in me Upon Good-Friday, and ne'er broke bis fast: Sir Robert could do well: marry, to confess, For France, for France; for it is more than need. ! Could not get me; Sir Rohert could not do it,- Const. No, I defy all counsel, all redress, But that which ends all counsel, true redress, Death, death:—O amiable lovely death! Thou odoriferous stench! sound rottenness! Arise forth from the couch of lasting night, Thou hate and terror to prosperity, And I will kiss thy detestable bones; And put my eyeballs in thy vaulty brows; And ring these fingers with thy household worms: And stop this gap of breath with fulsome dust, And be a carrion monster like thyself: Come, grin on me; and I will think thou smil'st,

And buss thee as thy wife! Misery's love, O, come to me!

K. Phi. O fair affliction, peace!

Const. No, no, I will not, having hreath to cry:—

O, that my tongue were in the thunder's mouth! Then with a passion would I shake the world; And rouse from sleep that fell anatomy Which cannot hear a lady's feeble voice, Which scorns a modern invocation.

Pand. Lady, you utter madness, and not sorrow.

Const. Thou are not holy to belie me so; I am not mad: this hair I tear is mine: My name is Constance; I was Geffrey's wife; Young Arthur is my son, and he is lost: I am not mad; - I would to heaven I were! For then, 'tis like I should forget myself: O, if I could, what grief should I forget!-Preach some philosophy to make me mad, And thou shalt be canoniz'd, cardinal; For, being not mad, but sensible of grief, My reasonable part produces reason How I may be deliver'd of these woes, And teaches me to kill or hang myself: If I were mad I should forget my son, Or madly think a bahe of clouts were he: I am not mad; too well, too well I feel The different plague of each calamity.

K. Phi. Bind up those tresses.—O, what love I note

In the fair multitude of those her hairs! Where but hy chance a silver drop hath fallen, Even to that drop ten thousand wiry friends Do glue themselves in sociable grief; Like true, inseparable, faithful loves, Sticking together in calamity.

Const. To England, if you will.

K. Phi. Bind up your hairs.
Const. Yes, that I will; and wherefore will
I do it?

I tore them from their bonds, and cried aloud, O that these hands could so redeem my son, As they have given these hairs their liberty! But now I envy at their liberty, And will again commit them to their bonds, Because my poor child is a prisoner.— And, father cardinal, I have heard you say That we shall see and know our friends in heaven:

If that be true, I shall see my boy again; For since the hirth of Cain, the first male child, To him that did but yesterday suspire, There was not such a gracious creature born. But now will canker sorrow eat my bud, And chase the native heauty from his cheek, And he will look as hollow as a ghost,

As dim and meagre as an ague's fit; And so he'll die; and, rising so again, When I shall meet him in the court of heaven I shall not know him: therefore never, never Must I behold my pretty Arthur more Pand. You hold too heinous a respect of grief.

Const. He talks to me that never had a son.
K. Phi. You are as fond of grief as of your child.

Const. Grief fills the room up of my absent Lies in his bed, walks up and down with me, Puts on his pretty looks, repeats his words, Remembers me of all his gracious parts, Stuffs out his vacant garments with his form; Then have I reason to he fond of grief. Fare you well: had you such a loss as I, I could give better comfort than you do.— I will not keep this form upon my head, | Tearing off her head-dress.

When there is such disorder in my wit.
O lord! my boy, my Arthur, my fair son!
My life, my joy, my food, my all the world!
My widow-comfort, and my sorrow's cure!

K. Phi. I fear some outrage, and I'll follow her. [Exil.

Lou. There's nothing in this world can make me joy:

Life is as tedious as a twice-told tale Vexing the dull ear of a drowsy man; [taste, And bitter shame hath spoil'd the sweet world's That it yields naught but shame and bitterness.

Pand. Before the curing of a strong disease, Even in the instant of repair and health,. The fit is strongest; evils that take leave, On their departure most of all show evil: What have you lost by losing of this day?

Lou. All days of glory, joy, and happiness. Pand. If you had won it, certainly you had. No, no; when Fortune means to men most good, She looks upon them with a threatening eye. 'Tis strange to think how much King John hath lost

In this which he accounts so clearly won:

Are not you griev'd that Arthur is his prisoner?

Lou. As heartily as he is glad he hath him.

Pand. Your mind is all as youthful as your

Now hear me speak with a prophetic spirit; For even the breath of what I mean to speak Shall blow each dust, each straw, each little rub, Out of the path which shall directly lead Thy foot to England's throne; and therefore mark.

John hath seiz'd Arthur; and it cannot be That, whiles warm life plays in that infant's veins,

The misplac'd John should entertain an hour, One minute, nay, one quiet breath of rest: A sceptre snatch'd with an unruly hand Must be as boisterously maintain'd as gain'd; And he that stands upon a slippery place Makes nice of no vile hole to stay him up: That John may stand, then Arthur needs must fall;

So be it, for it cannot be but so. [fall?

Lou. But what shall I gain by young Arthur's Pand. You, in the right of Lady Blanch your wife,

May then make all the claim that Arthur did.

With ladies' faces, and fierce dragon's spleens.

Have sold their fortunes at their native homes, Bearing their hirthrights proudly on their hacks, To make a hazard of new fortunes here. In brief, a braver choice of dauntless spirits. Than now the English hottoms have wast o'er, Did never float upon the swelling tide, To do offence and scath in Christendom.

Drums beat within. The interruption of their churlish drums Cuts off more circumstance: they are at hand, To parley or to fight: therefore prepare.

K. Phi. How much unlook'd-for is this expedition1

Aust. By how much unexpected, hy so much We must awake endeavour for defence; For courage mounteth with occasion: Let them be welcome, then; we are prepar'd.

Enter King John, Elinor, Blanch, the Bastard, Lords, and Forces.

K. John. Peace he to France, if France in peace permit

Our just and lineal entrance to our own! If not, bleed France, and peace ascend to heaveni

Whiles we, God's wrathful agent, do correct Their proud contempt that beat his peace to heaven.

freturn K. Phi. Peace he to England, if that war From France to England, there to live in peace! England we love; and for that England's sake With hurden of our armour here we sweat. This toil of ours should he a work of thine; But thou from loving England art so far, That thou hast under-wrought his lawful king, Cut off the sequence of posterity, Ontfaced infant state, and done a rape Upon the maiden virtue of the crown. Look here upon thy brother Geffrey's face;-These eyes, these brows, were moulded out of his:

This little abstract doth contain that large Which died in Geffrey; and the hand of time Shall draw this brief into as huge a volume. That Geffrey was thy elder brother horn, And this his son; England was Geffrey's right, And this is Geffrey's: in the name of God How comes it then, that thou art call'd a king, When living blood doth in these temples beat Which owe the crown that thou o'ermasterest?

K. John. From whom hast thou this great commission, France,

To draw my answer from thy articles? K. Phi. From that supernal judge that stirs good thoughts

In any hreast of strong authority, To look into the blots and stains of right. That judge hath made me guardian to this hoy: Under whose warrant I impeach thy wrong: And hy whose help I mean to chastise it.

K. John. Alack, thou dost usurp authority. K. Phi. Excuse,—it is to heat usurping down Eli. Who is it thou dost eall usurper, France? Const. Let me make answer; -- thy usurping Son.

Eli. Out, insolentl thy hastard shall he king, That thou mayst he a queen, and eheck the worldl Coost. My bed was ever to thy son as true As thine was to thy husband; and this boy Liker in feature to his father Geffrey Than thou and John in manners,--heing as As rain to water, or devil to his dam. My boy a hastard! By my soul, I think His father never was so true begot: It cannot be, an if thou wert his mother.

Eli. There's a good mother, boy, that hlots thy father.

Const. There's a good grandam, hoy, that would hlot thee.

Aust. Peacel Bost. Hear the crier.

Aust. What the devil art thou? Bast. One that will play the devil, sir, with An 'a man catch your hide and you alone. You are the hare of whom the proverh goes, Whose valour plucks dead lions by the heard: I'll smoke your skin-coat an I catch you right; Sirrah, look to 't; i' faith, I will, i' faith.

Blanch. O, well did he become that lion's robe

That did disrobe the lion of that robel Bost. It lies as sightly on the back of him As great Alcides' shoes upon an ass:-But, ass, I'll take that burden from your hack, Or lay on that shall make your shoulders crack. Ausl. What cracker is this same that deafs'

our ears

With this ahundance of superfluous hreath?

K. Phi. Louis, determine what we shall do |ference.straight.

Lou. Women and fools, hreak off your con-King John, this is the very sum of all, England and Ireland, Anjou, Touraine, Maine, In right of Arthur, do I claim of thee: Wilt thou resign them, and lay down thy arms?

K. John. My life as soon:-I do defy thee, France.

Arthur of Bretagne, yield thee to my hand; And out of my dear love, I'll give thee more Than e'er the coward hand of France can win: Suhmit thee, hoy.

Eli. Come to thy grandam, child. Const. Do, child, go to it' grandam, child; Give grandam kingdom, and it' grandam will Give it a plum, a cherry, and a fig: There's a good grandam.

Arth. Good my mother, peacel I would that I were low laid in my grave: I am not worth this coil that's made for me.

Eli. His mother shames him so, poor hoy, does or no! he weeps.

Const. Now, shame upon you, whe'r she His grandam's wrongs, and not his mother's [poor eyes, shames,

Draw those heaven-moving pearls from his Which heaven shall take in nature of a fee: Ay, with these crystal heads heaven shall he hrih'd

To do him justice, and revenge on you.

Eli. Thou monstrous slanderer of heaven [and earth! and earth!

Const. Thou monstrous injurer of heaven Call not me slanderer; thou and thine usurp son, The dominations, royalties, and rights son, Of this oppressed hoy: this is thy eldest son's Infortunate in nothing hut in thee:

An if an angel should have come to me And told me Hubert should put out mine eyes, I would not have believ'd him, -no tongue but Hubert's.

Hub. Come forth.

Stamps.

Re-enter Attendants, with cords, irons, &c.

Do as I bid yon. Arth. O, save me, Hubert, save mel my eyes are out Even with the fierce looks of these bloody men. Hub. Give me the iron, I say, and bind him (rough?!

Arth. Alas, what need you be so boist'rous-I will not struggle, I will stand stone-still. For beaven's sake, Hubert, let me not he hound! Nay, hear me, Hubert!-drive these men away, And I will sit as quiet as a lamb; I will not stir, nor wince, nor speak a word.

Nor look upon the iron angerly: Thrust but these men away, and I'll forgive you. Whatever torment you do put me to. him.

Hub. Go, stand within; let me alone with a Atlend. I am best pleas'd to be from such a deed. Exeunt Attendants.

Arth. Alas, I then have chid away my friend! He hath a stern look but a gentle heart:-Let him come back, that his compassion may Give life to yours.

Come, boy, prepare yourself. Hub. Arth. Is there no remedy?

Hub. None, but to lose your eyes. Arth. O heaven!—that there were but a mote in yours,

A grain, a dust, a gnat, a wandering hair, Any annoyance in that precious sense! Then, feeling what small things are boisterous there, Your vile intent must needs seem horrible. Hub. Is this your promise? go to, hold your tongue. tongues Arth. Hubert, the utterance of a brace of Must needs want pleading for a pair of eyes: Let me not bold my tongue,—let me not, Hubert!

Or, Hubert, if you will, cut out my tongue, So I may keep mine eyes: O spare mine eyes, Though to no use but still to look on you!-Lo, by my troth, the instrument is cold, And would not harm me.

I can heat it, boy. Hug. Arth. No, in good sootb; the fire is dead with grief.

Being create for comfort, to be us'd In undeserv'd extremes: see else yourself: There is no malice in this burning coal: The breath of heaven hath blown his spirit out, And strew'd repentant asbes on his head.

Hub. But with my breath I can revive it, boy. Arth. And if you do, you will but make it Hubert: blush,

And glow with shame of your proceedings, Nay, it, perchance, will sparkle in your eyes; And, like a dog that is compell'd to fight, Snatch at his master that doth tarre him on. All things that you should use to do me wrong, Deny their office: only you do lack That mercy which fierce fire and iron extends, Creatures of note for mercy-lacking uses.

Hub. Well, see to live; I will not touch thine eyes

For all the treasure that thine uncle owes: Yet am I sworn, and I did purpose, boy, With this same very iron to burn them out. Arth. O, now you look like Hubertl all this while

You were disguised. Hub. Peace; no more.

Adieu! Your uncle must not know but you are dead; I'll fill these dogged spies with false reports: And, pretty child, sleep doubtless and secure, That Hubert, for the wealth of all the world. Will not offend thee.

Arth. O beaven! I thank you, Hubert. Hub. Silence; no more: go closely in with me: Much danger do I undergo for thee. [Exeunt.

Scene II .- The same. A Room of State in the Palace.

Enter King John, crowned; PEMBROKE SALISBURY, and other Lords. The King takes his State.

K. John. Here once again we sit, once again crown'd,

And look'd upon, I bope, with cheerful eyes. Pem. This once again, but that your highness pleas'd,

Was once superfluous: you were crown'd before, And that high royalty was ne'er pluck'd off; The faiths of men ne'er stained with revolt; Fresh expectation troubled not the land With any long'd-for change or better state.

Sal. Therefore, to be possess'd with double pomp

To guard a title that was rich before, To gild refined gold, to paint the lily, To throw a perfume on the violet, To smooth the ice, or add another hue Unto the rainbow, or with taper-light To seek the heauteous eye of beaven to garnish, Is wasteful and ridiculous excess. [done,

Pem. But that your royal pleasure must be This act is as an ancient tale new told; And in the last repeating troublesome, .

Being urged at a time unseasonable.

Sal. In this, the antique and well-noted face Of plain old form is much disfigured; And, like a shifted wind unto a sail, It makes the course of thoughts to fetch about; Startles and frights consideration; Makes sound opinion sick, and truth suspected, For putting on so new a fashion'd robe.

Pem. When workmen strive to do better than well

They do confound their skill in covetousness; And oftentimes excusing of a fault Doth make the fault the worse by the excuse,-As patches set upon a little breach Discredit more in hiding of the fault

Than did the fault before it was so patch'd. Sal. To this effect, before you were new-[highness crown'd, We breath'd our counsel: but it pleas'd your To overbear it; and we are all well pleas'd, Since all and every part of what we would Doth make a stand at what your bigbness will K. John. Some reasons of this double coronation

I would set an ox-head to your lion's hide, And make a monster of you.

Aust. Peace! no more.

Bast. O, tremble, for you hear the lion roar.

K. John. Up higher to the plain; where we'll set forth

In best appointment all our regiments.

Bast. Speed, then, to take advantage of the field.

K. Phi. It shall he so;—[to Louis] and at the other hill

Command the rest to stand.—God and our right! [Exeunt severally.

After Excursions, enter a French Hereld, with trumpets, to the gates.

F. Her. You men of Angiers, open wide your gates,
And let young Arthur, Duke of Bretagne, in,
Who, by the hand of France, this day hath made,
Much work for tears in many an English mother, [ground: Whose sons lie scatter'd on the bleeding Many a widow's hnsband grovelling lies, Coldiy embracing the discolour'd earth; And victory, with little loss, doth play Upon the dancing banners of the Freuch, Who are at hand, trinumphantly display'd. To enter conquerors, and to proclaim Arthur of Bretagne England's king and yours.

Enter on English Herald, with trumpets.

E. Her. Rejoice, you men of Angiers, ring your hells: proach, King John, your king and England's, doth ap-Commander of this hot malicious day:
Their armours, that marth'd hence so silverhright.

Hither return all gilt with Frenchmen's blood;
There stuck no plume in any Engüsh crest
That is removed by a staff of France;
Our colours do return in those same hands
That did display them when we first march'd forth;

And, like a jolly troop of huntsmen, come Our lusty English, all with purpled hands, Dy'd in the dying slaughter of their foes: Open your rates, and give the victors war.

Open your gates, and give the victors way.

1 Cit. Heralds, from off our towers, we might hehold,

From first to last, the onset and retire
Of both your armies; whose equality
By our best eyes cannot be censured:
Biood hath bonght blood, and blows have an-swer'd blows; Strength match'd with strength, and power confronted power:

Both are alike; and both alike we like. One must prove greatest: while they weigh so even

We hold our town for neither; yet for both-

Re-enter, on one side. King John, Elinon, Blanch, the Bastard, and Forces; of the other, King Philip, Louis, Austria, and Forces.

K. John. France, hast thon yet more blood. Out of one side her happy minion, to cast away?

To whom in favour she shall give the day, Say, shall the current of our right run ou?

And kiss him with a glorious victory.

Whose passage, ver'd with thy impediment, Shall leave his native channel, and o'erswell With course disturb'd even thy confining shores, Unless thou let his silver water keep A peaceful progress to the ocean.

K. Phi. Eugland, thou hast not sav'd one drop of blood,

In this hot trial, more than we of France: Rather, lost more; and by this hand I swear, That sways the earth this climate overlooks, Before we will lay down our just-borne arms, We'll put thee down, 'gainst whom these arms we bear.

Or add a royal number to the dead, Gracing the scroll that tells of this war's loss With slaughter coupled to the name of kings. East. Ha, majesty! how high thy glory towers

When the rich blood of kings is set on fire!

O, now doth Death line his dead chaps with steel:

The swords of soldiers are his teem, his fangs;
And now he feasts, mousing the flesh of men,
In undetermin'd differences of kings.—
Why stand these royal fronts amazed thus?
Cry, havoc, kings! back to the stained field,
You equal potentates, hery-kindled spirits!
Then let confusion of one part confirm
The other's peace; till then, blows, blood, and death! [admit?

K. John. Whose party do the townsmen yet K. Phi. Speak, citizens, for England; who's your king? (the king.

your king? (the king. I Cit. The King of England, when we know K. Phi. Know him in us, that here hold up his right.

K. John. In us, that are our own great deputy.

And bear possession of our person here; Lord of our presence, Angiers, and of you. I Cit. A greater power than we denies all this;

And till it he undonbted, we do lock
Our former scruple in our strong-berr'd getes;
King'd of our fear, until our fears, resolv'd.
Be by some certain king purg'd and depos'd.

Be by some certain king purg'd and depos'd.

Bast. By heaven, these scroyles of Angiers flout you, kings,

And stand securely on their battlements
As in a theatre, whence they gape and point
At your industrious scenes and acts of death.
Your royal presences be rul'd by me:
Do like the minines of Jeruselem,
Be friends awhile, and both conjointly bend
Your sharpest deeds of malice on this town:
By east and west let France and England mount
Their battering cannon, charged to the mouths,
Till their soul-fearing clamours have brawl'd
down

The flinty ribs of this contemptuous city:
I'd play incessantly upon these jades,
Even till unfenced desolation
Leare them as naked as the vulgar air.
That done, dissever your united strengths,
And part your mingled colcurs once again:
Turn face to face, and hloody point to point;
Then, in a moment, fortune shall cull forth
Out of one side her happy minion,
To whom in favour she shall give the day,
And kiss him with a glorious victory.

That, ere the next Ascension-day, at noon, Your highness should deliver up your crown. K. John. Thou idle dreamer, wherefore didst thou so?

Peter. Foreknowing that the truth will fall K. John. Huhert, away with him; imprison him;

And on that day at noon, whereon he says I shall yield up my crown, let him be hang'd. Deliver him to safety; and return, For I must see thee.

Exil HUBERT with PETER. O my gentle cousin,

Hear'st thou the news abroad, who are arriv'd? Bast. The French, my lord; men's mouths are full of it:

Besides, I met Lord Bigot and Lord Salisbury,-With eyes as red as new-kindled fire,-And others more, going to seek the grave Of Arthur, whom they say is kill'd to-night On your suggestion.

K. John. Gentle kinsman, go And thrust thyself into their companies: I have a way to win their loves again:

Bring them before me.

Bast. I will seek them out. K. John. Nay, hut make haste; the better foot before.

O, let me have no subject enemies When adverse foreigners affright my towns With dreadful pomp of stout invasion! Be Mercury, set feathers to thy heels, And fly like thought from them to me again. Bast. The spirit of the time shall teach me speed. K. John. Spoke like a spriteful noble gentle-(Exit BASTARD. Go after him; for he perhaps shall need Some messenger betwirt me and the peers;

And be thou he.

With all my heart, my liege. [Exit. Mess. K. John. My mother deadl

Re-enter HUBERT.

Hub. My lord, they say five moons were seen to-night;

Four fixed: and the fifth did whirl about

The other four in wondrons motion.

K. John. Five moons!

Hub. Old men and bedlams in the streets [mouths: Do prophesy upon it dangerously: Young Arthur's death is common in their And when they talk of him, they shake their heads,

And whisper one another in the ear; And he that speaks doth gripe the hearer's wrist; Whilst he that hears makes fearful action, With wrinkled brows, with nods, with rolling

I saw a smith stand with his hammer, thus, The whilst his iron did on the anvil cool, With open mouth swallowing a tailor's news; Who, with his shears and measure in his hand, Standing on slippers,—which his nimble haste Had falsely thrust upon contrary feet, Told of a many thousand warlike French That were embattailed and rank'd in Kent: Another lean unwash'd artificer Cuts off his tale, and talks of Arthur's death? And make them tame to their obedience!

K. John. Wby seek'st thou to possess me with these fears?

Why urgest thou so oft young Arthur's death? Thy hand hatb murder'd bim: I had a mighty (kill him. To wish him dead, but thou hadst none to

Hub. No hand, my lord! why, did you not provoke me? [tended

K. John. It is the curse of kings to be at-By slaves that take their humours for a warrant To break within the bloody house of life: And, on the winking of authority, To understand a law; to know the meaning Of dangerous majesty, when perchance it frowns

More upon humour than advis'd respect. Hub. Here is your hand and seal for what I

K. John. O, when the last account 'twist heaven and earth

Is to be made, then shall this hand and seal. Witness against us to damnation! How oft the sight of means to do ill deeds Make ill deeds done! Hadst not thou been by, A fellow by the band of nature mark'd, Quoted, and sign'd, to do a deed of shame, This murder had not come into my mind: But, taking note of thy abhorr'd aspect, Finding thee fit for bloody villany. Apt, liable to be employ'd in danger, I faintly broke with thee of Arthur's death; And thou, to be endeared to a king, Made it no conscience to destroy a prince,

Hub. My lord,— K. John. Hadst thou but shook thy head, or made a pause, When I spake darkly what I purpos'd, Or turn'd an eye of doubt upon my face, As bid me tell my tale in express words, Deep shame had struck me dumb, made me break off,

And those thy fears might have wrought fears in me:

But thou didst understand me by my signs, And didst in signs again parley with sin; Yea, without stop, didst let thy heart consent, And consequently thy rude hand to act The deed, which both our tongues held vile to name.-

Out of my sight, and never see me more! My nobles leave me; and my state is brav'd, Even at my gates, with ranks of foreign powers: Nay, in the body of this fleshly land, This kingdom, this confine of blood and breath, Hostility and civil tumult reigns

Between my conscience and my cousin's death. Hub. Arm you against your other enemies, I'll make a peace between your soul and you. Young Arthur is alive: this hand of mine Is yet a maiden and an innocent hand, Not painted with the crimson spots of blood. Within this bosom never enter'd yet The dreadful motion of a murderous thought; And you have slander'd nature in my form,— Which, howsoever rude exteriorly, Is yet the cover of a fairer mind.

Than to be butcher of an innocent child. K. John. Doth Arthur live? O, haste thee to the peers,

Throw this report on their incensed rage,

Blanch. My uncle's will in this respect is mine.

If he see aught in you thot makes him like,
That anything he sees, which moves his liking,
I can with ease tronslate it to my will;
Or if you will, to speak more properly,
I will enforce it easily to my love.
Further, I will not flotter yon, my lord,
That all I see in you is worthy love,
Than this,—that nothing do I see in you, Though churlish thoughts themselves should he your judge,—

That I can find should merit any hote.

K. John. What say these young ones?—
What soy you, my niece? Ido Blanch. That sbe is bound in honour still to Whot you in wisdom still vouchsofe to soy.

K. John. Speak then, Prince Dauphin; can you love this lody?

Lou. Nay, ask me if I can refrain from love;

For I do love her most unfeignedly.

K. John. Then do I give Volquessen, Touraine. Maine.

raine, Maine,
Poictiers, and Anjou, these five provinces,
With her to thee; and this oddition more,
Full thirty thousond morks of English coin.—
Philip of Fronce, if thou be pleas'd withol,
Commond thy son and daughter to join hands

Commond thy son and daughter to join hands.

K. Phi. It likes us well.—Young princes, close your hands.

Aust. And your lips too; for I am well assur'd That I did so when I was first assur'd.

K. Phi. Now, citizens of Angiers, ope your gates,

Let in that amity which you hove made;
For at Saint Mary's chapel presently
The rites of marriage shall be solemniz'd.—
Is not the Lady Constance in this troop?
I know she is not; for this match made up
Her presence would have interrupted much:
Where is she ond her son? tell me, who knows.
Lou. She is sad and possionate at your highness' tent.

K. Phi. And, by my faith, this league that we have made

Will give her sadness very little cure.—
Brother of Englond, how may we content
This widow lady? In her right we came:
Which we, God knows, have turn'd another way,

To our own vantage.

K. John. We will heal up all; For we'll create young Arthur Duke of Bretagne

And Earl of Richmond; and this rich fair town We make him lord of.—Call the Lody Con-

Some speedy messenger bid her repair To our solemnity:—I trust we shall, If not fill up the measure of her will Yet in some meosure satisfy her so That we shall stop her exclamation. Go we, as well as haste will suffer us, To this unlook'd for, unprepared pomp. [Excunt all but the BASTARD. The Citizens retire from the Walls.

Bast. Mad world! mad kings! mad composition!

John, to stop Arthur's title in the whole, Hath willingly departed with a part; And France,—whose armour conscience buckled Whom zeal and charity brought to the field As God's own soldier,—rounded in the ear with that some purpose-changer, that sly devil; That broker, that still breaks the pate of faith; That daily break-vow; he that wins of all, Of kings, of beggars, old men, young men, maids,—

Who having no external thing to lose
But the word maid, cheats the poor maid of that;
That smooth-fac'd gentleman, tickling commodity.—

Commodity, the bias of the world; The world, who of itself is peised well, Made to run even upon even ground, Till this advantage, this vile-drawing bias, This sway of motion, this commodity, Makes it toke head from all indifferency, From all direction, purpose, course, intent: And this same bias, this commodity, This bawd, this broker, this oll-changing word, Clapp'd on the outward eye of fickle France, Hath drawn him from his own determin'd aid. From a resolv'd and honourable war, To a most bose and vile-concluded peace.— And why rail I on this commodity? But for because he hath not woo'd me yet: Not that I have the power to clutch my hand When his fair angels would salute my palm; But for my hand, as unattempted yet Like a poor beggar, raileth on the ricb. Well, whiles I om a beggar, I will rail And say, There is no sin but to be rich; And, being rich, my virtue then shall be, To say, There is no vice but beggary: Since kings break faith upon commodity Gain, be my lord!-for I will worship thee. Exit.

ACT III.

Scene I.—France. The French King's Tent.
Enter Constance, Arthur, and Salisbury.

Const. Gone to be married! gone to swear a peace!

False blood to false blood join'd! gone to be friends!

Shall Louis hove Blanch? and Blanch those provinces? It is not so; thou hast misspoke, misheard; Be well advis'd, tell o'er thy tole again: It cannot be; thou dost but say 'tis so: I trust I may not trust thee; for thy word Is but the vain breath of n common man: Believe me, I do not believe thee, mon; I have a king's oath to the contrary. Thou shalt be punish'd for thus frighting me, For I om sick, and capable of fears; Oppress'd with wrongs, and therefore full offears; A widow, husbandless, subject to feors; A woman, naturally born to fears And though thou now confess thou didst but jest, With my vex'd spirits I cannot take a truce, But they will quake and tremble all this day What dost thou mean by shaking of thy head? Why dost thou look so sadly on my son? What means that hand upon that breost of thine?

Why holds thine eye that lomentable rheum,

Like a proud river peering o'er its bounds?

lon, Be these sad signs confirmers of thy words?

Or teach thy hasty spleen to do me sbame, I'll strike thee dead. Put up thy sword betime; Or I'll so maul you and your toasting-iron That you shall think the devil is come from hell.

Big. What wilt thou do, renowned Falconbridge?

Second a villain and a murderer? Hub. Lord Bigot, I am none.

Big. Who kill'd this prince? Hub. 'Tis not an hour since I left him well: I bonour'd him, I lov'd him; and will weep My date of life out for his sweet life's loss.

Sal. Trust not those cunning waters of his eyes,

For villany is not without such rheum; And be, long traded in it, makes it seem Like rivers of remorse and innocency. Away with me, all you whose souls abhor The uncleanly savours of a slaughter-house; For I am stifled with this smell of sin.

Big. Away toward Bury, to the Dauphin tbere!

Pem. There, tell the king, he may inquire us Exeunt Lords. Bast. Here's a good world!-Knew you of this fair work? Beyond the infinite and boundless reach Of mercy, if thou didst this deed of death,

Art thou damn'd, Hubert. Hub. Do but hear me, sir. Bast. Ha! I'll tell thee what; black; Thou'rt damn'd as black-nay, nothing is so Thou art more deep damn'd than Prince Lucifer: There is not yet so ugly a fiend of hell As thou shalt be, if thou didst kill this child.

Hub. Upon my soul,

If thou didst but consent Bast. To this most cruel act, do but despair; And if thou want'st a cord, the smallest thread That ever spider twisted from her womb Will serve to strangle thee; a rush will be A beam to beng thee on; or wouldst thou drown thyself,

Put but a little water in a spoon, And it shall be as all the ocean, Enough to stifle such a villain up.

I do suspect thee very grievously. Hub. If I in act, consent, or sin of thought, Be guilty of stealing that sweet breath Which was embounded in this beauteous clay, Let bell want pains enough to torture me! I left him well.

Go, bear him in thine arms -I am amaz'd, methinks, and lose my way Among the thorns and dangers of this world, How easy dost thou take all England up! From forth this morsel of dead royalty, The life, the right, and truth of all this realm Is fled to heaven; and England now is left To tug and scamble, and to part by the teeth The unow'd interest of proud-swelling state. Now for the bare-pick'd bone of majesty Dotb dogged war bristle his angry crest, And snarleth in the gentle eyes of peace: Now powers from home and discontents at home Meet in one line; and vast confusion waits, As doth a raven on a sick-fallen beast, The imminent decay of wrested pomp. Now happy he whose cloak and cincture can Hold out this tempest.—Bear away that child. And follow me with speed: I'll to the king: A thousand businesses are brief in hand And heaven itself doth frown upon the land. Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I .- NORTHAMPTON. A Room in the Palace.

Enter King John, Pandulph with the crown. and Attendants.

K. John. Thus have I yielded up into your hand

The circle of my glory. Pand.

Take again [Giving King John the crown. From this my hand, as holding of the pope, Your sovereign greatness and authority.

K. John. Now keep your holy word: go meet the French;

And from his holiness use all your power To stop their marches 'fore we are inflam'd. Our discontented counties do revolt; Our people quarrel with obedience: Swearing allegiance and the love of soul To strange blood, to foreign royalty. This inundation of mistemper'd bumour Rests by you only to be qualified. Then pause not; for the present time's so sick That present medicine must be minister'd. Or overthrow incurable ensues.

Pand. It was my breath that blew this tempest up, Upon your stubborn usage of the pope: But since you are a gentle convertite, My tongue shall hush again this storm of war, And make fair weather in your blustering land. On this Ascension-day, remember well, Upon your oath of service to the pope, Go I to make the French lay down their arms. · Exit.

K. John. Is this Ascension-day? Did not the prophet Say that before Ascension-day at noon My crown I should give off? Even so I have: I did suppose it should be on constraint; But, heaven be thank'd, it is but voluntary.

Enter the Bastard.

Bast. All Kent hath yielded; nothing there holds out But Dover Castle: London hath receiv'd, Like a kind host, the Dauphin and his powers: Your nobles will not hear you, but are gone To offer service to your enemy;

And wild amazement hurries up and down The little number of your doubtful friends. K. John. Would not my lords return to me again,

After they heard young Arthur was alive?

Bast. They found him dead, and cast into the streets;

An empty casket, where the jewel of life By some dam'd hand was robb'd and ta'en live. away. K. John. That villain Hubert told me be did Bast. So, on my soul, be did, for aught he knew. But wherefore do you droop? wby look you sad?

Enter PANDULPH.

Pand. Hail, anointed you deputies of heaven!-

To thee, King John, my holy errand is. I Pandulph, of fair Milan cardinal, And from Pope Innocent the legate here, Do in his name religiously demand, Why thou against the church, our holy mother, So wilfully dost spurn; and, force perforce, Keep Stephen Langton, chosen archbishop Of Canterbury, from that holy see? This, in our foresaid holy father's name. Pope Innocent, I do demand of thee.

K. John. What earthly name to interrogatories

Can task the free breath of a sacred king? Thou canst not, cardinal, devise a name So slight, unworthy, and ridiculous, To charge me to an answer, as the pope. Tell him this tale; and from the mouth of England Add thus much more,—That no Italian priest Shall tithe or toll in our dominions: But as we under heaven are supreme head. So, under him, that great supremacy, Where we do reign, we will alone uphold, Without the assistance of a mortal hand: So tell the pope; all reverence set apart. To him and his usurp'd authority.

K. Phi. Brother of England, you blaspheme in this. Christendom,

K. John. Though you, and all the kings of Are led so grossly by this meddling priest, Dreading the curse that money may buy out; And by the merit of vile gold, dross, dust, Purchase corrupted pardon of a man, Who in that sale sells pardon from himself; Though you and all the rest, so grossly led, This juggling witchcraft with revenue cherish; Yet I, alone, alone do me oppose Against the pope, and count his friends my foes.

Pand. Then, hy the lawful power that I have, Thou shalt stand curs'd and excommunicate: And blessed shall he be that doth revolt From his allegiance to an heretic; And meritorious shall that hand be call'd, Canonized, and worshipp'd as a saint, That takes away hy any secret course Thy hateful life.

Const. O, lawful let it he That I have room with Rome to curse awhile! Good father cardinal, cry thou amen To my keen curses: for without my wrong There is no tongue hath power to curse him right. curse. Pand. There's law and warrant, lady, for my Const. And for mine too: when law can do no right,

Let it he lawful that law har no wrong: Law cannot give my child his kingdom here; For he that holds his kingdom holds the law: Therefore, since law itself is perfect wrong, How can the law forbid my tongue to curse?

Pand. Philip of France, on peril of a curse, Let go the hand of that arch-heretic; And raise the power of France upon his head, Unless he do suhmit himself to Rome.

Eli. Look'st thou pale, France; do not let go thy hand.

Const. Look to that, devil; lest that France repent

And, hy disjoining hands, hell lose a soul. Aust. King Philip, listen to the cardinal.

Bast. And hang a calf's-skin on his recreant limhs. [wrongs, Aust. Well, ruffian, I must pocket up these

Because—

Bast. Your hreeches hest may carry them.

Bast. Your hreeches hest may carry them. K. John. Philip, what say'st thou to the cardinal? (cardinal? Const. What should he say, but as the Lou. Bethink you, father; for the difference Is, purchase of a heavy curse from Rome, Or the light loss of England for a friend:

Forego the easier. Blanch. That's the curse of Rome. Const. O Louis, stand fast! the devil tempts thee here

In likeness of a new uptrimmed hride. Blanch. The Lady Constance speaks not from her faith,

But from her need. O, if thou grant my need, Const. Which only lives but by the death of faith, That need must needs infer this principle, That faith would live again by death of need! O, then, tread down my need, and faith mounts up;

Keep my need up, and faith is trodden down! K. John. The king is mov'd, and answers not to this. [well!

Const. O, be remov'd from him, and answer Aust. Do so, King Philip; hang no more in douht. sweet lout.

Bast. Hang nothing hut a calf's-skin, most K. Phi. I am perplex'd, and know not what to say. [thee more, Pand. What canst thou say, but will perplex

If thou stand excommunicate and curs'd? K. Phi. Good reverend father, make my person yours, And tell me how you would hestow yourself. This royal hand and mine are newly knit, And the conjunction of our inward souls Married in league, coupled and link'd together With all religious strength of sacred vows; The latest breath that gave the sound of words Was deep-sworn faith, peace, amity, true love, Between our kingdoms and our royal selves; And even hefore this truce, but new hefore,-No longer than we well could wash our hands, To clap this royal hargain up of peace, Heaven knows, they were hesmear'd and over-

stain'd With slaughter's pencil, where revenge did paint

The fearful difference of incensed kings: And shall these hands, so lately purg'd of hlood So newly joined in love, so strong in both, Unyoke this seizure and this kind regreet? Play fast and loose with faith? so jest with heaven, Make such unconstant children of ourselves, As now again to snatch our palm from palm; Unswear faith sworn; and on the marriage-hed Of smiling peace to march a bloody host, And make a riot on the gentle brow Of true sincerity? O, holy sir. My reverend father, let it not he so!

And now 'tis far too huge to be blown out With that same weak wind which enkindied it. You taught me how to know the face of right, Acquainted me with interest to this land, Yea, thrust this enterprise into my heart; And come ye now to tell me John hath made His peace with Rome? What is that peace to me?

I, by the honour of my marriage-bed, After young Arthur, claim this land for mine; And, now it is half-conquer'd, must I back Because that John hath made his peace with

Rome? [horne, Am I Rome's slave? What penny hath Rome What men provided, what munition sent, To underprop this action? Is't not I That undergo this charge? who else but I, And such as to my claim are liable, Sweat in this business and maintain this war. Have I not heard these islanders shout out, Vive le roi! as I have bank'd their towns? Have I not here the best cards for the game, To win this easy match play'd for a crown? And shall I now give o'er the yielded set? No, no, on my soul, it never shall be said. Pand. You look hut on the outside of this

Lou. Outside or inside, I will not return Till my attempt so much be glorified As to my ample hope was promised Before I drew this gallant head of war, And cull'd these fiery spirits from the world, To outlook conquest, and to win renown-Even in the jaws of danger and of death.—

[Trumpet sounds. What lusty trumpet thus doth summon us?

Enter the BASTARD, attended.

Bast. According to the fair play of the world, Let me have audience; I am sent to speak:—My holy lord of Milan, from the king I come, to learn how you have dealt for him; And, as you answer, I do know the scope And warrant limited unto my tongue.

Pand. The Dauphin is too wilful-opposite, And will not temporize with my entreaties; He fiatly says he'll not lay down his arms. Bast. By all the blood that ever fury breath'd.

The youth says well.—Now hear our English

king;
For thus his royalty doth speak in me.
He is prepar'd; and reason too he should:
This apish and unmannerly approach,
This harness'd masque and unadvised revel,
This unhair'd sauciness and boyish troops,
The king doth smile at; and is well prepar'd
To whip this dwarfish war, these pigmy arms,
From out the circle of his territories. [door,
That hand which had the strength, even at your
To cudgel you, and make you take the hatch;
To dive, like buckets, in concealed wells;
To crouch in litter of your stable planks;
To lie, like pawns, lock'd up in chests and trunks:

To hug with swine; to seek sweet safety out In vaults and prisons; and to thrill and shake Even at the crying of your nation's crow, Thinking his voice an armed Englishman;— Shall that victorious hand be feebled here,

That in your chambers gave you chastisement? No: know the gallant monarch is in arms; And like an eagle o'er his aery towers. To souse annoyance that comes near his nest.—And you degenerate, you ingrate revolts. You bloody Neroes, ripping up the womb Of your dear mother England, hlush for shame; For your own ladies and pale-visag'd maids, Like Amazons, come tripping after drums,—Their thimhles into armed gauntless chang'd, Their needles to lances, and their gentlo hearts To fierce and bloody inclination. [in peace; Lou. There end thy brave, and turn thy face We grant thou canst outscold us: fare thee well:

We hold our time too precious to he spent
With such a brabbler.

Pand.

Give me leave to speak.

Bast. No, I will speak.

Lou. We will attend to neither.—

Strike up the drums; and let the tongue of war

Plead for our interest and our being here.

Bast. Indeed, your drums, being heaten, will cry out;

And so shall you, being beaten: do but start
An echo with the clamour of thy drum,
And even at hand a drum is ready brac'd
That shall reverberate all as loud as thine;
Sound but another, and another shall,
As loud as thine, rattle the welkin's ear,
And mock the deep-mouth'd thunder: for at

hand,—
Not trusting to this halting legate here,
Whom he hath us'd rather for sport than need,—
Is warlike John; and in his forehead sits
A bare-ribb'd death, whose office is this day
To feast upon whole thousands of the French.
Lou. Strike up our drums, to find this danger

Bast. And thou shalt find it, Dauphin, do not doubt. [Exeunt.

Scene III.—The same. A Field of Ballle.
Alarums. Enter King John and Hubert.

K. John. How goes the day with us? O, tell me, Hubert.

Hub. Badly, I fear. Howfares your majesty?
K. John. This fever, that hath troubled me so long,

Lies heavy on me;—O, my heart is sick!

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord, your valiant kinsman, Falconbridge,

Desires your majesty to leave the field,
And send him word by me which way you go K. John. Tell him, toward Swinstead, to the abbey there.

Mess. Be of good comfort; for the great That was expected by the Dauphin here Are wreck'd three nights ago on Goodwin Sands. This news was brought to Richard but even now: The French fight coldly, and retire themselves. K. John. Ay mel this tyrant fever hurns me and will not let me welcome this good news.— Set on toward Swinstead: to my litter straight; Weakness possesseth me, and I am faint. Bast. My lord, I rescu'd her; Her highness is in safety, fear you not. But on, my liege; for very little pains Will bring this labour to an happy end.

{Exeunt

Scene III .- The same.

Alarums, Excursions, Retreat. Enter King John, Elinor, Arthur, the Bastard, Hubert, and Lords.

K. John. So shall it be; your grace shall stay behind, [To Elinor. So strongly guarded.—Cousin, look not sad:

Thy grandam loves thee; and thy nncle will As dear be to thee as thy father was. [grief! Arth. O, this will make my mother die with K. John. Cousin [to the BASTARD], away for England; haste hefore:

And, ere our coming, see thou shake the bags
Of hoarding ahhots; imprison'd angels
Set at liherty: the fat ribs of peace
Must hy the hungry now be fed upon:
Use our commission in his utmost force.

Bast. Bell, hook, and candle shall not drive me hack.

When gold and silver becks me to come on.

I leave your highness.—Grandam, I will pray,If ever I rememher to be holy,—
For your fair safety; so, I kiss your hand.

Eli. Farewell, gentle cousin.

K. John. Coz, farewell. [Exit BASTARD.
Eli. Come hither, little kinsman; hark a word. [She takes ARTHUR aside. K. John. Come hither, Huhert. O my gentle Hnhert,

We owe thee much! within this wall of flesh There is a soul counts thee her creditor, and with advantage means to pay thy love: And, my good friend, thy voluntary oath Lives in this bosom, dearly cherished. Give me thy hand. I had a thing to say,—But I will fit it with some better time. By heaven, Huhert, I am almost asham'd To say what good respect I have of thee.

Hub. I am much bounden to your majesty.

K. John. Good friend, thou hast no cause to say so yet: (slow, say so yet:

But thou shalt have; and creep time ne'er so Yet it shall come for me to do thee good.

I had a thing to say,—hut let it go:
The sun is in the heaven, and the proud day, Attended with the pleasures of the world, Is all too wanton and too full of gawds
To give me audience:—if the midnight hell Did, with his iron tongue and brazen mouth, Sound one unto the drowsy ear of night;
If this same were a churchyard where we stand, And thon possessed with a thousand wrongs;
Or if that surly spirit, melancholy,
Had bak'd thy blood, and made it heavy,

thick,—
Which else runs tickling up and down the veins,
Making that idiot, laughter, keep men's eyes,
And strain their cheeks to idle merriment—
A passion hateful to my purposes;—
Or if that thou couldst see me without eyes,
Hear me without thine ears, and make reply
Without a tongue, using conceit alone,

Without eyes, ears, and harmful sound of words,—
Then, in despite of hrooded watchful day,

I would into thy bosom pour my thoughts:
But, ah, I will not—yet I love thee well;
And, hy my troth, I think thou lov'st me well.
Hub. So well that what you hid me undertake,
Though that my death were adjunct to my act,

By heaven, I would do it.

K. John. Do not I know thou wouldst?
Good Hubert, Hubert, Huhert, throw thine eye [friend, On yon young boy: I'll tell thee what, my He is a very serpent in my way; And wheresoe'er this foot of mine doth tread,

He lies before me:—dost thou understand me? Thou art his keeper.

Hub. And I'll keep him so That he shall not offend your majesty.
K. John. Death.

Hub. My lord?
K. John. A grave.

Hub. He shall not live.

K. John. Enough.—
I could be merry now. Hubert, I love thee:
Well, I'll not say what I intend for thee:
Remember — Modern fare you well:

Rememher.—Madam, fare you well:
I'll send those powers o'er to your majesty.
Eli. My blessing go with theel

K. John. For England, cousin, go: Huhert shall be your man, attend on you With all true duty.—On toward Calais, ho! [Exeunt.

Scene IV.—The same. The French King's Tent.

Enter King Philip, Louis, Pandulph, and Attendents.

K. Phi. So, by a roaring tempest on the flood,

A whole armado of convicted sail
Is scatter'd and disjoin'd from fellowship.

Pand. Convey and comfort! all shall yet go well. [run so ill. K. Phi. What can go well, when we have Are we not beaten? Is not Angiers lost? Arthur ta'en prisoner? divers dear friends slain?

And bloody England into England gone,
O'erhearing interruption, spite of France?
Lou. What he hath won, that hath he fortified:

So hot a speed with such advice dispos'd,
Such temperate order in so fierce a cause,
Doth want example: who hath read or heard

Of any kindred action like to this?

K. Phi. Well could I hear that England had this praise,

So we could find some pattern of our shame.— Look, who comes here! a grave unto a soul; Holding the eternal spirit, against her will, In the vile prison of afflicted breath.

Enter CONSTANCE.

I pr'ythee, lady, go away with me. [peacel Const. Lo, now! now see the issue of your K. Phi. Patience, good lady! comfort, gentle Constance!

Bast. Come, come; sans compliment, what news abroad? night,

Hub. Why, here walk I, in the black brow of To find you out.

Bast. Brief, then; and what's the news?

Hub. O, my sweet sir, news fitting to the night,

Black, fearful, comfortless, and horrible. Bast. Show me the very wound of this ill news;

I am no woman, I'll not swoon at it.

Hub. The king, I fear, is poison'd by a monk: I left him almost speechless and broke out To acquaint you with this evil, that you might To better arm you to the sudden time,

Than if you had at leisure known of this. Bast. How did he take it; who did taste to

Hub. A monk, I tell you; a resolved villain, Whose bowels suddenly burst out: the king Yet speaks, and peradventure may recover. Bast. Who didst thou leave to tend his majesty?

come back. Hub. Why, know you not? the lords are all And brought Prince Henry in their company; At whose request the king hath pardon'd them,

And they are all about his majesty. iheaven, Bast. Withhold thine indignation, mighty And tempt us not to bear above our power!-I'll tell thee, Hubert, half my power this night, Passing these flats, are taken by the tide,— These Lincoln washes have devoured them; Myself, well-mounted, hardly have escap'd. Away, before! conduct me to the king; I doubt he will be dead or ere I come.

Exeunt.

Scene VII.—The Orchard of Swinstead Abbey Enter PRINCE HENRY, SALISBURY, and BIGOT.

P. Hen. It is too late: the life of all his blood Is touch'd corruptibly; and his pure brain,-Which some suppose the soul's frail dwellinghouse, Doth, by the idle comments that it makes, Foretell the ending of mortality.

Enter Pembroke.

Pem. His highness yet doth speak; and holds belief

That, being brought into the open air, It would allay the burning quality Of that fell poison which assaileth him.

P. Hen. Let him be brought into the orchard here .-

Exit BIGOT. Doth he still rage? He is more patient Pem.

Than when you left him; even now he sung. P. Hen. O vanity of sickness! fierce extremes In their continuance will not feel themselves. Death, having prey'd upon the outward parts, Leaves them invisible; and his siege is now Against the mind, the which he pricks and wounds

With many legions of strange fantasies, Which, in their throng and press to that last should sing.-Confound themselves. 'Tis strange that death

I am the cygnet to this pale faint swan, Who chants a doleful hymn to his own death; And then my soul shall wait on thee to heaven,

And from the organ-pipe of frailty sings His soul and body to their lasting rest. [born Sal. Be of good comfort, prince; for you are To set a form upon that indigest Which he hath left so shapeless and so rude.

Re-enter BIGOT and Attendants, who bring in KING JOHN in a chair.

K. John. Ay, marry, now my soul hath elbow-room; It would not out at windows nor at doors. There is so hot a summer in my bosom That all my bowels crumble up to dust; I am a scribbled form, drawn with a pen Upon a parchment; and against this fire Do I shrink up.

Р. Неп. How fares your majesty? K. John. Poison'd,-ill fare,-dead, forsook

And none of you will bid the winter come. To thrust his icy fingers in my maw Nor let my kingdom's rivers take their course Through my burn'd bosom; nor entreat the north

To make his bleak winds kiss my parched lips, And comfort me with cold:—I do not ask you much;

I beg cold comfort; and you are so strait, And so ingrateful, you deny me that.

P. Hen. O, that there were some virtue in my tears, That might relieve you! K. John. The salt in them is hot.

Within me is a hell; and there the poison Is, as a fiend, confin'd to tyrannize On unreprievable condemned blood.

Enter the BASTARD.

Bast. O, I am scalded with my violent motion,

And spleen of speed to see your majesty! K. John. O cousin, thou art come to set mine

The tackle of my heart is crack'd and burn'd; And all the shrouds, wherewith my life should

Are turned to one thread, one little hair: My heart hath one poor string to stay it by, Which holds but till thy news be uttered; And then all this thou seest is but a clod, And model of confounded royalty.

Bast. The Dauphin is preparing hitherward, Where heaven he knows how we shall answer him;

For in a night the best part of my power, As I upon advantage did remove, Were in the washes all unwarily Devoured by the unexpected flood.

(The KING dies. Sal. You breathe these dead news in as dead an ear. My liege! my lord!-But now a king,-now

P. Hen. Even so must I run on, and even so

What surety of the world, what hope, what stay, When this was now a king, and now is clay!

Bast. Art thou gone so? I do but stay behind To do the office for thee of revenge,

Lou. And lose it, life and all, as Arthur did. Pand. How green you are, and fresh in this old world! John lays you plots; the times conspire with For he that steeps his safety in true blood Shall find but bloody safety and untrue. This act, so evilly borne, shall cool the hearts Of all his people, and freeze up their zeal, That none so small advantage shall step forth To check his reign, but they will cherish it; No natural exhalation in the sky, No scape of nature, no distemper'd day, No common wind, no custom'd event, But they will plack away his natural cause And call them meteors, prodigies, and signs, Abortives, presages, and tongues of heaven, Plainly denouncing vengeance upon John.

Lou. May he he will not touch young Arthur's life,

But hold himself safe in his imprisonment. Pand. O, sir, when he shall hear of your approach; If that young Arthur be not gone already, Even at that news he dies; and then the hearts Of all his people shall revolt from him. And kiss the lips of unacquainted change And pick strong matter of revolt and wrath Out of the bloody fingers' ends of John. Methinks I see this harly all on foot: And, O, what better matter breeds for you Than I have nam'd!-The bastard Falconhridge Is now in England, ransacking the church, Offending charity: if but a dozen French Were there in arms, they would be as a call To train ten thousand English to their side; Or as little as snow, tumbled about Anon becomes a mountain. O noble Dauphin, Go with me to the king:—'tis wonderful What may be wrought out of their discontent, Now that their souls are topful of offence: For England go:-I will what on the king. Lou. Strong reasons make strong actions: let :

Hub. Heat me these irons hot; and look thon stand Within the arras: when I strike my foot Upon the bosom of the ground, rush forth, And bind the boy which you shall find with me Fast to the chair: be heedful: hence, and watch. I Attend. I hope your warrant will bear ont!

Young lad, come forth; I have to say with you.

Enter ARTHUR.

Arth. Good-morrow, Hnbert. Hub.Good-morrow, little prince. Arth. As little prince, having so great a title To be more prince, as may be.—You are sad.

Hub. Indeed, I have been merrier.

Arth. Mercy on me! Methinks no body should be sad but I: Yet, I remember, when I was in France, Young gentlemen would be as sad as night, Only for wantonness. By my christendom, So I were ont of prison, and kept sheep, I should be as merry as the day is long Aud so I would be here, but that I doubt My nucle practices more harm to me: He is afraid of me, and I of him: Is it my fault that I was Geffrey's son? No, indeed, is't not; and I would to heaven I were your son, so you would love me, Hubert. Hub. [Aside.] If I talk to him, with his innocent prate

He will awake my mercy, which lies dead: Therefore I will be sudden and despatch. Arth. Are you sick, Hubert? you look pale to-day:

in sooth, I would you were a little sick, That I might sit all night and watch with you: I warrant I love you more than you do me:
Hub. [Aside.] His words do take possession of my bosom. Read here, young Arthur. Showing a paper-[Aside.] How now, foolish rheum! Turning dispiteous torture out of door! I must be brier, lest resolution drop

Out at mine eyes in tender womanish tears.— Can you not read it? is it not fair writ? Arth. Too fairly, Huhert, for so foul effect. Must you with hot irons hurn out both mine eyes? Hub. Young boy, I must.

And will you? Arth. Hub. And I will. Arth. Have you the heart? When your head did hut ache

I knit my handkerchief about your hrows,-The best I had, a princess wrought it me,-And I did never ask it you again; And with my hand at midnight held your head; .:: And, like the watchful minutes to the hour, Still and anon cheer'd up the heavy time, Saying, What lack you? and, Where lies your gries?

Or, What good love may I perform for you? Many a poor man's son would have lien still, And ne'er have spoke a loving word to you; But you at your sick service had a prince. Nay, you may think my love was crafty love, And call it cunning:—do, an if you will:

If heaven be pleas'd that you must use me ill,
Why, then you must.—Will you put out mine eyes? These eyes that never did nor never shall So much as frown on yon?

Hub.I have sworn to do it! And with hot irons must I burn them ont. Arth. Ah, none but in this iron age would do it!

The iron of itself, though heat red hot, Approaching near these eyes, would drink my tears, And queuch his fiery indignation, Even in the matter of mine innocence: Kay, after that, consume away in rust, But for containing fire to harm mine eye. Are you more stubborn-hard than hammer'd iron?

ACT I.

SCENE L.-LONDON. A Room in the Palace.

Enter King Richard, attended; John Of GAUNT, and other Nobles.

K. Rich. Old John of Gaunt, time-honour'd Lancaster,

Hast thou, according to thy oath and band, Brought hither Henry Hereford, thy bold son, Here to make good the boisterous late appeal, Which then our leisure would not let us hear, Against the Duke of Norfolk, Thomas Mowbray?

Gaunt. I have, my liege. [sounded him, K. Rich. Tell me, moreover, hast thou If he appeal the duke on ancient malice; Or worthily, as a good subject should,

On some known ground of treachery in him?

Gaunt. As near as I could sift him on that argument,-

On some apparent danger seen in him, Aim'd at your highness,-no inveterate malice. K. Rich. Then call them to our presence:

face to face. And frowning brow to brow, ourselves will hear The accuser and the accused freely speck:-[Exeunt some Attendants. I have possess'd you with, and think them strong;

And more, more strong, when lesser is my fear, I shall indne you with: meantime hat ask What you would have reform'd that is not well, And well shall you perceive how willingly I will both hear and grant you your requests.

Pem. Then I,—as one that am the tongue of these,

To sound the purposes of all their hearts,—
Both for myself and them,—hut, chief of all,
Your safety, for the which myself and them
Bend their hest studies,—heartly request
The enfranchisement of Arthur; whose restraint
Doth move the murmuring lips of discontent
To break into this dangerous argument,—
If what in rest you have in right yon hold,

Why, then, your fears,—which, as they say, attend
The steps of wrong,—should move you to mew

Your tender kinsman, and to choke his days With barbarous ignorance, and deny his youth The rich advantage of good exercise? That the time's enemies may not have this To grace occasions, let it be our suit That you have bid us ask his liherty; Which for onr goods we do no further ask Than whereupon our weal, on you depending, Counts it your weal we have his liberty.

K. John. Let it he so: I do commit his youth

To your direction.

Enter HUBERT.

Hubert, what news with you? [deed; Pem. This is the man should do the bloody He show'd his warrant to a friend of mine: The image of a wicked heinous fault Lives in his eye; that close aspect of his Doth show the mood of a much-troubled breast; And I do fearfully believe 'tis done

What we so fear'd he had a charge to do. [go Sal. The colour of the king doth come and Between his purpose and his conscience, Like heralds 'twixt two dreadful battles set: His passion is so ripe it needs must hreak.

Pem. And when it breaks, I fear will issue thence

The foul corruption of a sweet child's death.

K. John. We cannot hold mortality's strong hand:—

Good lords, although my will to give is living, The suit which you demand is gone and dead: He tells us Arthur is deceas'd to-night.

Sal. Indeed, we fear'd his sickness was past cure. The was.

Pem. Indeed, we heard how near his death Before the child himself felt he was sick: This must be answer'd either here or hence.

K. John. Why do you hend such solemn hrows on me?

Think you I hear the shears of destiny?
Have I commandment on the pulse of life?
Sal. It is apparent foul-play; and 'tis shame

That greatness should so grossly offer it: So thrive it in your game! and so, farewell.

Pem. Stay yet, Lord Salisbury; I'll go with thee,

And find the inheritance of this poor child, His little kingdom of a forced grave. That blood which ow'd the breadth of all this isle,

Three foot of it doth hold:—bad world the while! [out This must not he thus horne: this will break To all our sorrows, and ere long, I douht.

[Exeunt Lords.

K. John. They burn in indignation. I repent:

There is no sure foundation set on blood;
No certain life achiev'd by other's death.—

Enter a Messenger.

A fearful eye thou hast: where is that blood That I have seen inhabit in those cheeks? So foul a sky clears not without a storm: Pour down thy weather:—how goes all in France? is power Mcss. From France to England.—Never such For any foreign preparation Was levied in the body of a land. The copy of your speed is learn'd by them; For when yon should be told they do prepare,

The tidings come that they are all arriv'd.

K. John. O, where hath our intelligence been druuk?

Where hath it slept? Where is my mother's
That such an army could he drawn in France,

And she not hear of it?

Mess. My liege, her ear
Is stopp'd with dust; the first of April died
Your noble mother: and, as I hear, my lord,
The Lady Constance in a frenzy died [tongue
Three days before; but this from rumonr's
I idly heard,—if true or false I know not.

I idly heard,—if true or false I know not.

K. John. Withhold thy speed, dreadful occasion!

O, make a league with me, till I have pleas'd
My discontented peers!—What! mother dead!
How wildly, then, walks my estate in France!—
Under whose conduct came those powers of

France
That thou for truth giv'st out are landed here?
Mess. Under the Dauphin.

K. John. Thou hast made me giddy With these ill tidings.

Enter the BASTARD and PETER of Pomfret.

Now, what says the world To your proceedings? do not seek to stuff My head with more ill news, for it is full.

Bast. But if you be afeared to hear the worst, Then let the worst, unheard, fall on your head. K. John. Bear with me, cousin; for I was amaz'd

Under the tide: but now I hreathe again
Aloft the flood; and can give audience
To any tongue, speak it of what it will.
Bast. How I have sped among the ciergymen.
The sums I have collected shall expiess.
But as I travell'd hither throngh the land.
I find the people strangely fantasied;
Possess'd with rumonrs, full of idle dreams,
Not knowing what they fear, but full of fear:
And here's a prophet that I hronght with me
From forth the streets of Pomfret, whom I found
With many hundreds treading on his heels;
To whom he sung, in rude harsh-sounding thymes.

A trespass that doth vex my grieved soul:
But, ere I last receiv'd the sacrament,
I did confess it; and exactly begg'd
Your grace's pardon, and I hope I had it.
This is my fault: as for the rest appeal'd,
It issues from the rancour of a villain,
A recreant and most degenerate traitor:
Which in myself I boldly will defend;
And interchangeably hurl'down my gauge
Upon this overweening traitor's foot,
To prove myself a loyal gentleman
Even in the hest blood chamber'd in his bosom.
In haste whereof, most heartily I pray
Your highness to assign our trial day.

K. Rich. Wrath-kindled gentlemen, he rul'd hy me;

Let's purge this choler without letting blood:
This we prescribe, though no physician;
Deep malice makes too deep incision:
Forget, forgive; conclude, and he agreed;
Our doctors say this is no time to hleed.—
Good uncle, let this end where it hegun;
We'll calm the Duke of Norfolk, you your son.

Gaunt. To be a make-peace shall become my age:

Throw down, my son, the Duke of Norfolk's

K. Rich. And, Norfolk, throw down his.

Gaunt. When, Harry? when? Obedience bids I should not bid again.

K. Rich. Norfolk, throw down; we bid; there is no boot.

Nor. Myself I throw, dread sovereign at thy

My life thou shalt command, but not my shame: The one my duty owes; but my fair name,— Despite of death, that lives upon my grave,— To dark dishonour's use thou shalt not have. I am disgrac'd, impeach'd, and baffled here: Pierc'd to the soul with slander's venom'd spear,

The which no balm can cure but his heart-blood

Which breath'd this poison.

K. Rich. Rage must be withstood: Give me his gage:—lions make leopards tame. Nor. Yea, but not change his spots: take but my shame,

And I resign my gage. My dear dear lord,
The purest treasure mortal times afford
Is spotless reputation; that away,
Men are but gilded loam or painted clay.
A jewel in a ten-times-harr'd-up chest
Is a bold spirit in a loyal hreast.
Mine honour is my life; hoth grow in one;
Take honour from me, and my life is done:
Then, dear my liege, mine honour let me try;
In that I live, and for that will I die.

K. Rich. Cousin, throw down your gage; do you begin. [foul sinl Boling. O, God defend my soul from such Shall I seem crest-fallen in my father's sight? Or with pale beggar-fear impeach my height Before this outdar'd dastard? Ere my tongue Shall wound mine honour with such feeble wrong,

Or sound so base a parle, my teeth shall tear
The slavish motive of recanting fear;
And spit it bleeding in his high disgrace,
Where shame doth harbour, even in Mowbray's facel
[Exit GAUNT.]

K. Rich. We were not born to sue, but to command;—

Which since we cannot do to make you friends, Be ready, as your lives shall answer it, At Coventry, upon Saint Lambert's day: There shall your swords and lances arbitrate The swelling difference of your settled hate; Since we cannot atone you, we shall see Justice design the victor's chivalry.—

Lord marshal, command our officers-at-arms Be ready to direct these home-alarms.

: [Exeunt.

Scene II.—The same. A Room in the Duke of Lancaster's Palace.

Enter GAUNT and DUCHESS OF GLOSTER.

Gaunt. Alas, the part I had in Gloster's hlood

Doth more solicit me than your exclaims, To stir against the butchers of his life. But since correction lieth in those hands Which made the fault that we cannot correct, Put we our quarrel to the will of heaven; Who, when they see the hours ripe on earth, Will rain hot vengeance on offender's heads.

Duch. Finds brotherhood in thee no sharper spur?

Hath love in thy old blood no living fire? Edward's seven sons, whereof thyself art one, Were as seven vials of his sacred blood, Or seven fair branches springing from one root: Some of those seven are dried by nature's course,

Some of those branches by the Destinies cut; But Thomas, my dear lord, my life, my Glos-

One vial full of Edward's sacred blood, Our flourishing branch of his most royal root, Is crack'd, and all the precious liquor spilt; Is back'd down, and his summer-leaves all faded,

By envy's hand and murder's bloody axe.

Ah, Gaunt, his blood was thinel that bed, that womb,

That mettle, that self-mould, that fashion'd thee,

Made him a many and though they livet and

Made him a man; and though thou liv'st and breath'st,

Yet art thou slain in him: thou dost consent In some large measure to thy father's death, In that thou seest thy wretched hrother die, Who was the model of thy father's life. Call it not patience, Gaunt,—it is despair; In suffering thus thy brother to be slaughter'd, Thou show'st the naked pathway to thy life, Teaching stern murder how to butcher thee: That which in mean men we entitle patience, Is pale cold cowardice in noble breasts. What shall I say? to safeguard thine own life, The best way is to venge my Gloster's death. Gaunt. God's ia the quarrel; for God's substitute,

His deputy anointed in his sight,
Hath caus'd his death: the which, if wrongfully,
Let heaven revenge; for I may never lift
An appry arm against his minister.

An angry arm against his minister.

Duch. Where, then, alas, may I complain myself?

Forgive the comment that my passion made Upon thy feature; for my rage was blind, And foul imaginary eyes of blood Presented thee more hideous than thou art. O, answer not; but to my closet bring The angry lords with all expedient haste: I conjure thee but slowly; run more fast. iExeunt.

Scene III .- The same. Before the Castle.

Enter ARTHUR, on the Walls.

Arth. The wall is high, and yet will I leap down:

Good ground, be pitiful, and hurt me not!-There's few or none to know me: if they did, This ship-boy's semblance hath disguis'd me quite.

I am afraid; and yet I'll venture it. If I get down, and do not break my limbs, I'll find a thousand shifts to get away: As good to die and go, as die and stay.

Leaps down. O me! my uncle's spirit is in these stones:-Heaven take my soul, and England keep my

Enter PEMBROKE, SALISBURY, and BIGOT.

Sal. Lords, I will meet him at Saint Edmund's-Bury:

It is our safety, and we must embrace This gentle offer of the perilous time.

Pem. Who brought that letter from the cardinal?

Sal. The Count Melun, anobie lord of France; Whose private with me of the Dauphin's love Is much more general than these lines import. Big. To-morrow morning let us meet him, then.

Sal. Or rather then set forward; for 'twill be Two long days' journey, lords, or e'er we meet.

Enter the Bastard.

Bast. Once more to-day well met, distemper'd lords!

The king by me requests your presence straight. Sal. The king hath dispossess'd himself of Bast. Whate'er you think, good words, I think, were best. now.

Sal. Our griefs, and not our manners, reason Bast. But there is little reason in your grief; Therefore 'twere reason you bad manners now. Pem. Sir, sir, impatience hath his privilege. Bast. 'Tis true,-to hurt his master, no man else.

Sal. This is the prison: - what is he lies here? Seeing ARTHUR.

Pem. O death, made proud with pure and princely beauty!

The earth bad not a hole to hide this deed. Sal. Murder, as hating what himself heth done, Sal. Sir Richard, what think yon? Have von beheld.

Shall give a holiness, a purity, To the yet begotten sin of times; And prove a deadly bloodshed but a jest, Exampled by this heinous spectacle. Bast. It is a damned and a bloody work: The graceless action of a heavy band,-If that it be the work of any hand.

Sal. If that it be the work of any hand?-We had a kind of light what would ensue: It is the sbameful work of Hubert's hand: The practice and the purpose of the king: From whose obedience I forbid my soul, Kneeling before this ruin of sweet life, And breathing to this breathless excellence The incense of a vow, a holy vow, Never to taste the pleasures of the world, Never to be infected with delight, Nor conversant with ease and idleness,

Till I have set a glory to this hand, By giving it the worship of revenge. words. Pem. Big. Our souls religiously confirm thy

Enter HUBERT.

Hub. Lords, I am hot with haste in seeking you:

Arthur doth live; the king hath sent for yon. Sal. O, he is bold, and blushes not at death:-Avaunt, thou villain, get thee gone! Hub. I am no villain.

Sal. Must I rob the law? Drawing his sword.

Bast. Your sword is bright, sir; put it up again.

Sal. Not till I sheathe it in a murderer's skin. Hub. Stand back, Lord Salisbury,—stand back, I say: [yours: back, I say; [yours: By heaven, I think my sword's as sharp as I would not have yon, lord, forge: yourself, Nor tempt the danger of my true defence;

Lest I, by marking of your rage, forget Your worth, your greatness, and nobility.

Big. Out, dunghill! dar'st thou brave a nobleman?

Hub. Not for my life: but yet I dare defend My innocent life against an emperor. Sal. Thou art a murderer.

Hub.Do not prove me so: Yet I am none: whose tongue soe'er speaks false,

Not truly speeks; who speaks not truly, lies.

Pem. Cut him to pieces.

Keep the peace, I say. . Bast. Sal. Stand by, or I shall gall yon, Falconbridge. [bury: Bast. Thou wert better gall the devil, Salis-

Nor. However God or fortune cast my lot, There lives or dies, true to King Richard's throne,

A loyal, just, and upright gentleman:
Never did captive with a freer heart
Cast off his chains of bondage, and embrace
His golden uncontroll'd enfranchisement,
More than my dancing soul doth celebrate
This feast of battle with mine adversary.—
Most mighty liege,—and my companion peers,—
Take from my mouth the wish of happy years:
As gentle and as jocund as to jest
Go I to fight: truth hath a quiet breast.

K. Rich. Farewell, my lord: securely I espy Virtue with valour couched in thine eye.—
Order the trial, marshal, and begin. [Derby,

Order the trial, marshal, and begin. [Derby, Mar. Harry of Hereford, Lancaster, and Receive thy lance; and God defend the right! Boling. Strong as a tower in hope, I cry amen.

Mar. Go bear this lance [to an Officer] to Thomas, Duke of Norfolk. [Derby, 1 Her. Harry of Hereford, Lancaster, and Stands here for God, his sovereign, and himself.

On pain to be found false and recreant, To prove the Duke of Norfolk, Thomas Mow-

A traitor to his God, his king, and him; And dares him to set forward to the fight. 2 Her. Here standeth Thomas Mowbray,

Duke of Norfolk,
On pain to be found false and recreant,
Both to defend himself, and to approve
Henry of Hereford, Lancaster, and Derby,
To God, his sovereign, and to him disloyal;
Courageously, and with a free desire,
Attending but the signal to begin.

Mar. Sound, trumpets; and set forward, combatants. [A charge sounded. Stay, the king hath thrown his warder down. K. Rich. Let them lay by their helmets and their spears,

And both return back to their chairs again:—
Withdraw with us:—and let the trumpets sound
While we return these dukes what we decree.—

[A long flourish.]
Draw near, [To the combatants.]
And list what with our council we have done.
For that our kingdom's earth should not be soil'd

With that dear blood which it hath fostered. And for our eyes do hate the dire aspect. Of civil wounds plough'd up with neighbours,

swords;
And for we think the eagle-winged pride
Of sky-aspiring and ambitious thoughts,
With rival-hating envy, set on you
To wake our peace, which in our country's cradle

Draws the sweet infant breath of gentle sleep.
Which so rous's up with boisterous untun'd drums.

With harsh-resounding trumpets' dreadful bray, And grating shock of wrathful iron arms, Might from our quiet confines fright fair peace, And make us wade even in our kindred's blood:—

Therefore, we banish you our territories:— You, cousin Hereford, upon pain of life, Till twice five summers have enrich'd our fields

That sun that warms you here shall shine on And those his golden beams to you here lent Shall point on me and gild my banishment.

K. Rich. Norfolk, for thee remains a heavier doom,

Which I with some unwillingness pronounce:
The sly-slow hours shall not determinate
The dateless limit of thy dear exile;—
The hopeless word of—never to return
Breathe I against thee, upon pain of life.

Nor. A heavy sentence, my most gracious imouth: liege, And all unlook'd-for from your highness' A dearer merit, not so deep a maim As to be cast forth in the common air, Have I deserved at your highness' hands. The language I have learn'd these forty years. My native English, now I must forego. And now my tongue's use is to me no more Than an unstring'd viol or a harp Or like a cunning instrument cas'd up, Or, being open, put into his hands That knows no touch to tune the harmony: Within my mouth you have engaol'd my tongue, Donbly portcullis'd with my teeth and lips; And dull, unfeeling, barren ignorance Is made my gaoler to attend on me. I am too old to fawn upon a nurse, Too far in years to be a pupil now: What is thy sentence, then, but speechless death,

Which robs my tongue from breathing native breath? [sionate: K. Rich. It boots thee not to be compas-

After our sentence plaining comes too late.

Nor. Then thus I turn me from my country's light, To dwell in solemn shades of endless night, [Retiring.

K. Rich. Return again, and take an oath with thee.

Lay on our royal sword your banish'd hands; Swear by the duty that you owe to God,— Our part therein we banish with yourselves,— To keep the oath that we administer:— Be great in act, as you have heen in thought;
Lot not the world see fear and sad distrust
Govern the motion of a kingly eye:
Be stirring as the time; he fire with fire;
Threaten the throatener, and outface the hrow
Of hragging horror: so shall inferior eyes,
That horrow their hehaviours from the great,
Grow great hy example, and put on
The dauntless spirit of resolution.
Away, and glister like the god of war
When he intendeth to become the field:
Show holdness and aspiring confidence.
What, shall they seek the lion in his den,
And fright him there? and make him tremhle there?

O, let it not be said!—Forage, and run
To meet displeasure further from the doors,
And grapple with him ere he come so nigh.
K. John. The legate of the pope hath been

with me,
And I have made a happy peace with him;
And he hath promis'd to dismiss the powers

Led by the Dauphin.

Bast. O inglorious league!
Shall we, upon the footing of our land,
Send fair-play orders, and make compromise,
Insinuation, parley, and hase truce.
To arms invasive? shall a heardless hoy,
A cocker'd silken wanton, hrave our fields,
And flesh his spirit in a warlike soil,
Mocking the air with colours idly spread,
And find no check? Let us, my liege, to arms:
Perchance the cardinal cannot make your peace;
Or, if he do, let it nt least he said,
They saw we had a purpose of defence.

K. John. Have thou the ordering of this present time. [I know, Bast. Away, then, with good courage! yet, Our party may well meet a prouder foe.

Excunt.

Scene II.—Near St. Edmund's-Bury.
The French Camp.

Enter, in arms, Louis, Salisbury, Melun, Pembroke, Bigor, and Soldiers.

Lou. My Lord Melun, let this be copied out, And keep it safe for our remembrance: Return the precedent to these lords again; That, having our fair order written down, Both they and we, perusing o'er these notes, May know wherefore we took the sacrament, And keep our faiths firm and inviolable.

Sal. Upon our sides it never shall he hroken. And, noblo Dauphin, alheit we swear A voluntary zeal and unurg'd faith
To your proceedings; yet, helieve me, prince, I am not glad that such a sore of time
Should seek a plastor hy contemn'd revolt,
And heal the inveterate canker of one wound
By making many. O, it grieves my soul
That I must draw this metal from my sido
To he a widow-maker! O, and there
Where honourablo rescue and defenco
Cries out upon the name of Salisbury!
But such is the infection of the time,
That, for the health and physic of our right,
We cannot deal hut with the very hand
Of stern injustice and confused wrong.—
And is't not pity, O my grieved friends!

That we, the sons and children of this isle,
Were horn to see so sad an hour as this;
Wherein we step after a stranger-march
Upon her gentle hosom, and fill up Her enemies' ranks—I must withdraw and weep

Upon the spot of this enforc'd cause— To grace the gentry of a land remote, And follow unacquainted colours here? What, here?—O nation, that thou couldst remove!

That Neptune's arms, who clippeth theo about,
Would hear thee from the knowledge of thyself,
And grapple thee unto a pagan shore. | bine
Where these two Christian armies might comThe hlood of malice in a vein of league,
And not to spend it so unneighbourly!

Lou. A noble temper dost thou show in this; And great affections wrestling in thy hosom Do make an earthquake of nobility O, what a noble combat hast thou fought Between compulsion and a hrave respect! Let me wipe off this honourable dew That silverly doth progress on thy cheeks: My heart bath melted at a lady's tears, Being an ordinary inundation; But this effusion of such manly drops, This shower, blown up by tempest of the soul, Startles mine eyes, and makes me more amaz'd Than had I seen the vaulty top of heaven Figur'd quite o'er with hurning meteors. Lift up thy brow, renowned Salishury, And with a great heart heave away this storm: Commend these waters to those haby eyes That never saw the gight world enrag'd, Nor met with fortune other than at feasts, Full warm of blood, of mirth, of gossiping. Come, come; for thou shalt thrust thy hand as deep

Into the purse of rich prosperity
As Louis himself:—so, nohles, shall you all,
That knit your sinews to the strength of mine,—
And even there, methinks, an angel spake:
Look, where the holy legate comes apace,
To give us warrant from the hand of heaven,
And on our actions sot the name of right
With holy breath.

Enter PANDULPH, attended.

Pand. Hail, noble prince of Francol The next is this,—King John hath reconcil'd Himself to Rome; his spirit is come in, That so stood out against the holy church, The great metropolis and see of Rome: Therefore thy threatoning colours now wind up, And tame the savage spirit of wild war, That, like a lion foster'd up at hand, It may lie gently nt the foot of peaco, And he no further harmful than in show.

And he no further harmful than in show.

Lou. Your grace shall pardon me, I will not back:

I am too high-born to be propertied,
To he a secondary at control,
Or useful serving-man and instrument
To any sovereign state throughout the world.
Your hreath first kindled the doad coal of wars
Between this chastis'd kingdom and myself,
And brought in matter that should feed this fire;

O, no! the apprehension of the good Gives but the greater feeling to the worse: Fell sorrow's tooth doth never rankle more Than when it bites, but lanceth not the sore. Gaunt. Come, come, my son, I'll bring thee on thy way:

Had I thy youth and cause, I would not stay.

Boling. Then, England's ground, farewell; sweet soil, adieu;

My mother, and my nurse, that bears me yet! Where'er I wander, boast of this I can,— Though banish'd, yet a true-born Englishman. Exeunt.

Scene IV .- The Court.

Enter King Richard, Bagot, and Green; AUMERLE following.

K. Rich. We did observe.—Cousin Aumerle, How far brought you high Hereford on his way? him so.

Aum. I brought high Hereford, if you call But to the next highway, and there I left him. K. Rich. And say, what store of parting tears were shed? least wind,

Aum. Faith, none for me; except the north-Which then blew bitterly against our faces, Awak'd the sleeping rheum, and so by chance

Did grace our hollow parting with a tear.

K. Rich. What said our cousin when you parted with him? Aum. "Farewell":

And, for my heart disdained that my tongue Should so profane the word, that taught me craft To counterfeit oppression of such grief, That words seem'd buried in my sorrow's grave would the word "farewell" have lengthen'd hours,

And added years to his short banishment, He should have had a volume of farewells; But since it would not, he had none of me. K. Rich. He is our cousin, cousin; but 'tis doubt, When time shall call him home from banishment.

Whether our kinsman come to see his friends. Ourself, and Bushy, Bagot here, and Green, Observ'd his courtship to the common people; How he did seem to dive into their hearts With humble and familiar courtesy; What reverence he did throw away on slaves; Wooing poor craftsmen with the craft of smiles, And patient underbearing of his fortune, As 'twere to banish their affects with him. Off goes his bonnet to an oyster-wench; A brace of draymen bid God speed him well, And had the tribute of his supple knee, With Thanks, my countrymen, my loving friends:

As were our England in reversion his, And he our subjects' next degree in hope. Green. Well, he is gone; and with him go these thoughts. Now for the rebels which stand out in Ireland,-Expedient manage must be made, my liege, Ere further leisure yield them further means For their advantage and your highness' loss. K. Rich. We will ourself in person to this war:

And, for our coffers,—with too great a count And liberal largess,—are grown somewhat light,

We are enforc'd to farm our royal realm; The revenue whereof shall furnish us For our affairs in hand. If that come short, Our substitutes at home shall have black charters;

Whereto, when they shall know what men are They shall subscribe them for large sums of gold,

And send them after to supply our wants: For we will make for Ireland presently.

Enter Bushy.

Bushy, what news?

Bushy. Old John of Gaunt is grievous sick. my lord,

Suddenly taken; and hath sent post-haste To entreat your majesty to visit him.

K. Rich. Where lies he?

Bushy. At Ely House. (mind K. Rich. Now put it, God, in his physician's To help him to his grave immediately! The lining of his coffers shall make coats To deck our soldiers for these Irish wars,-Come, gentlemen, let's all go visit him: Pray God we may make haste, and come too late! [Exeunt.

ACT II.

Scene L.—London. A Room in Ely House.

GAUNT on a couch; the DUKE OF YORK and others standing by him.

Gount. Will the king come, that I may breathe my last

In wholesome counsel to his unstaid youth? York. Vex not yourself, nor strive not with your breath;

For all in vain comes counsel to his ear. |men Gaunt. O, but they say the tongues of dying Enforce attention like deep harmony:

Where words are scarce, they are seldom spent in vain; lin pain.

For they breathe truth that breathe their words He that no more must say is listen'd more Than they whom youth and ease have taught ibefore: to glose; More are men's ends mark'd than their lives The setting sun, and music at the close,

As the last taste of sweets, is sweetest last, Writ in remembrance more than things long

Though Richard my life's counsel would not My death's sad tale may yet undeaf his ear. York. No; it is stopp'd with other flattering sounds. As, praises of his state: then there are found Lascivious metres, to whose venom-sound The open ear of youth doth always listen; Report of fashions in proud Italy, Whose manners still our tardy apish nation

Limps after, in base imitation. Where doth the world thrust forth a vanity,-So it be new, there's no respect how vile,-That is not quickly buzz'd into his ears?

Then all too late comes counsel to be heard,

Scene IV .- The same. Another part of the same.

Enter Salisbury, Pembroke, and others.

Sal. I did not think the king so stor'd with friends.

Pem. Up once again; put spirit in the French:

If they miscarry we miscarry too.
Sol. That misbegotten devil, Falconbridge, In spite of spite, alone upholds the day. Pem. They say King John, sore sick, hath left the field.

Enter MELUN wounded, and led by Soldiers.

Mel. Lead me to the revolts of England here. Sal. When we were happy we had other names.

Pem. It is the Count Melun.

Wounded to death. Sal. Mel. Fly, noble English, you are bought and Unthread the rude eye of rebellion, And welcome home again discarded faith. Seek out King John, and fall before his feet; For if the French be lords of this loud day, He means to recompense the pains you take By cutting off your heads: thus hath he sworn, And I with him, and many more with me, Upon the alter at Saint Edmund's-Bury; Even on that altar where we swore to you Dear amity and everlasting love.

Sal. May this be possible? may this be true? Mel. Have I not hideous death within my view, Retaining but a quantity of life, Which bleeds away even as a form of wax Resolveth from his figure 'gainst the fire? What in the world should make me now deceive, Since I must lose the use of all deceit? Why should I then be false, since it is true That I must die here, and live bence by truth? I say again, if Louis do win the day, He is forsworn if e'er those eyes of yours Bebold another day break in the east: But even this night,-whose black contagions Scene VI.-An ofen Place in the neighbour-breath Already smokes about the burning crest Of the bid, feeble, and day-wearied sun,-Even this ill night, your breathing shall expire; Paying the fine of rated treachery Even with a treatherous fine of all your lives, If Louis by your assistance win the day. Commend me to one Hubert, with your king; The love of him,—and this respect besides, For that my grandsire was an Englishman, Awakes my conscience to confess all this. In lieu whereof, I pray you, bear me bence From forth the noise and rumour of the field Where I may think the remnant of my thoughts In peace, and part this body and my soul With contemplation and devout desires.

Sal. We do believe thee:—and beshrew my But I do love the favour and the form Of this most fair occasion, by the which We will entread the steps of damned flight; And, like a bated and retired flood, Leaving our rankness and irregular course, Stoop low within those bounds we have o'erlook'd.

And calmly run on in obedience, Even to our ocean, to our great King John.— My arm shall give thee help to bear thee hence; For I do see the cruel pangs of death Right in thine eye .- Away, my friends! New flight,

And happy newness, that intends old right. Exeunt, leading of MELUN.

Scene V .- The same. The French Camp.

Enter Louis and his train. Lou. The sun of heaven methought was loth to set But stay'd, and made the western welkin blush, When the English measur'd backward their own ground

In faint retire. O, bravely came we off, When with a volley of our needless shot, After such bloody toil, we bid good-night; And wound our tattering colours clearly up, Last in the field, and almost lords of it.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Where is my prince, the Dauphin? Lou. Here:-what news? Mess. The Count Melun is slain; the English lords,

By his persuasion are again fallen off;

And your supply, which you have wish'd so long Are cast away and sunk on Goodwin Sands.

Lou. Ah, foul shrewd news!-beshrew thy very heart!-I did not think to be so sad to-night As this hath made me.—Who was be that said

King John did fly an bour or two before The stumbling night did part our weary powers?

Mess. Whoever spoke it, it is true, my lord. Lou. Well; keep good quarter and good care to-night;

The day shall not be up as soon as I, To try the fair adventure of to-morrow. [Exeunt.

hood of Swinstead Abbey.

Enter the BASTARD and HUBERT, meeting.

Hub. Who's there? speak, ho! speak quickly, or I shoot.

Bast. A friend. -What art thou? Hub. Of the part of England.

Bast. Whither dost thou go? Hub. What's that to thee? Why may I not demand

Of thine affairs, as well as thon of mine?

Bast. Hubert, I think.

Hub. Thou hast a perfect thought: I will, upon all bazards, well believe [well... Thon art my friend, that know'st my tongue so Who art thou

Who thou wilt: an if thou please, Thou mayst befriend me so much as to think I come one way of the Plantagenets.

Hub. Unkind remembrance! thon and eyeless night

Have done me shame:-brave soldier, pardon That any accent breaking from thy tongue Should'scape the true acquaintance of mine ear.

York. I do heseech your majesty, impute his words

To wayward sickliness and age in him:
He loves you, on my life, and holds you dear
As Harry Duke of Hereford, were he here.
K. Rich. Right, you say true: as Hereford's love, so his;

As theirs, so mine; and all be as it is.

Enter NORTHUMBERLAND.

North. My liege, old Gaunt commends him to your majesty.

K. Rich. What says he?

North. Nay, nothing; all is said: His tongue is now a stringless instrument; Words, life, and all, old Lancaster hath spent. York. Be York the next that must be hank-

rupt so!
Though death be poor, it ends a mortal woe.
K. Rich. The ripest fruit first falls, and so doth he;

His time is spent, our pilgrimage must be: So much for that.—Now for our Irish wars: We must supplant those rough rug-headed kerns.

Which live like venom, where no venom else, But only they, hath privilege to live.
And for these great affairs do ask some charge: Towards our assistance we do seize to us
The plate, coin, revenues, and movahles,

Whereof our uncle Gaunt did stand possess'd.

York. How long shall I be patient? ah, how long

Shall tender duty make me suffer wrong?
Not Gloster's death, nor Hereford's banishment,

Not Gaunt's rebukes, nor England's private wrongs,

Nor the prevention of poor Bolingbroke About his marriage, nor my own disgrace, Have ever made me sour my patient cheek, Or bend one wrinkle on my sovereign's face. I am the last of noble Edward's sons, Of whom thy father, Prince of Wales, was first: In war was never lion rag'd more fierce, In peace was never gentle lamb more mild, Than was that young and princely gentleman. His face thou hast, for even so look'd he, Accomplish'd with the number of thy hours; But when he frown'd, it was against the French, And not against his friends: his noble hand Did win what he did spend, and spent not that Which his triumphant father's hand had won: His hands were guilty of no kindred's blood, But bloody with the enemies of his kin. O Richard! York is too far gone with grief, Or else he never would compare between.

K. Rich. Why, uncle, what's the matter? York. O my liege, Pardon me, if you please; if not, I, pleas'd Not to be pardon'd, am content withal. Seek you to seize, and gripe into your hands, The royalties and rights of hanish'd Hereford? Is not Gaunt dead? and doth not Hereford live? Was not Gaunt just? and is not Harry true? Did not the one deserve to have an heir? Is not his heir a well-deserving son? [Time Take Hereford's rights away, and take from His charters and his customery rights; Let not to-morrow, then, ensue to-day;

Be not thyself,—for how art thou a king
But hy fair sequence and succession?
Now, afore God—God forhid I say truel—
If you do wrongfully seize Hereford's rights,
Call in the letters-patents that he hath
By his attorneys-general to sue
His livery, and deny his offer'd homage,
You pluck a thousand dangers on your bead,
You lose a thousand well-disposed hearts,
And prick my tender patience to those thoughts
Which honour and allegiance cannot think.

K. Rich. Think what you will, we seize into our hands

His plate, his goods, his money, and his lands.

York. I'll not he by the while: my liege, farewell:

What will ensue hereof, there's none can tell: But by bad courses may he understood That their events can never fall out good.

K. Rich. Go, Bushy, to the Earl of Wiltshire straight:

Bid him repair to us to Ely House
To see this husiness. To-morrow next
We will for Ireland; and 'tis time, I trow:
And we create, in absence of ourself,
Our uncle York lord governor of England;
For he is just, and always lov'd us well.—
Come on, our queen: to-morrow must we part;
Be merry, for our time of stay is sbort.

[Flourish. Exeunt King, Queen, Bushy,

AUMERLE, GREEN, and BAGOT.

North. Well, lords, the Duke of Lancaster is dead. [duke.

Ross. And living too; for now his son is Willo. Barely in title, not in revenue.

North. Richly in both, if justice had her right.

Ross. My heart is great; but it must break with silence,

Ere't be disburden'd with a liberal tongue.

North. Nay, speak thy mind; and let him ne'er speak more

That speaks thy words again to do thee harm!
Willo. Tends that thou wouldst speak to the Duke of Hereford?

If it be so, out with it holdly, man;
Quick is mine ear to hear of good towards him.
Ross. No good at all, that I can do for him;
Unless you call it good to pity him,
Bereft and gelded of his patrimony.

North. Now, afore God, 'tis shame such wrongs are borne

In him, a royal prince, and many more
Of nohle blood in this declining land.
The king is not himself, hut basely led
By flatterers; and what they will inform,
Merely in hate, 'gainst any of us all,
That will the king severely prosecute
'Gainet us one lives our children, and our

'Gainst us, our lives, our children, and our heirs.

Ross. The commons hath he pill'd with grievous taxes,

And quite lost their hearts: the nobles hath he fin'd

For ancient quarrels, and quite lost their hearts.

Willo. And daily new exactions are devis'd,—
As blanks, benevolences, and I wot not what:
But what, o' God's name, doth hecome of this?

North. Wars have not wasted it, for warr'd

he hath not,

As it on earth hath been thy servant still.— Now, now, you stars that move in your right! With other princes that may best be spar'd, spheres.

Where be your powers? Show now your mended faiths;

And instantly return with me again, To push destruction and perpetual shame Out of the weak door of our fainting land. Straight let us seek, or straight we shall be sought;

The Dauphin rages at our very heels.

Sal. It seems you know not, then, so much as we:

The Cardinal Pandulph is within at rest. Who half an hour since came from the Dauphin, And brings from him such offers of our peace As we with honour and respect may take, With purpose presently to leave this war.

Bast. He will the rather do it when he sees Ourselves well sinewed to our defence.

Scl. Nay, it is in a manner done already; For many carriages he hath despatch'd To the disposing of the cardinal: If you think meet, this afternoon will post To consummate this business happily.

Bast. Letit be so: - And you, my noble prince, Shall wait upon your father's funeral.

P. Hen. At Worcester must his body be interr'd:

For so he will'd it. Thither shall it, then: Bast.

And happily may your sweet self put on The lineal state and glory of the land! To whom, with all submission, on my knee, I do bequeath my faithful services And true subjection everlastingly. Sal. And the like tender of our love we make,

To rest without a spot for evermore. P. Hen. I have a kind soul that would give you thanks,

And knows not how to do it but with tears. Bast. O, let us pay the time but needful woe, Since it hath been beforehand with our griefs.-This England never did, nor never shall, Lie at the proud foot of a conqueror. But when it first did help to wound itself. To the sea-side, and put his cause and quarrel Now these her princes are come home again, Come the three corners of the world in arms, With whom yourself, myself, and other lords, And we shall shock them: nought shall make us rue.

If England to itself do rest but true. Excunt.

And all the household servants fied with him To Bolingbroke. fwoe.

Queen. So, Green, thou art the midwife to my And Bolingbroke my sorrow's dismal heir: Now hath my soul brought forth her prodigy; And I, a gasping new-deliver'd mother, Have woe to woe, sorrow to sorrow join'd.

Bushy. Despair not, madam. Queen. Who shall hinder me?

I will despair, and he at enmity
With cozening hope,—he is a flatterer,
A parasite, a keeper-back of death,
Who gently would dissolve the hands of life,
Which false hope lingers in extremity.

Green. Here comes the Duke of York.
Queen. With signs of war about his aged neck:

O, full of careful husiness are his looks!

Enter YORK.

Uncle, for God's sake, speak comfortable words.

York. Should I do so, I should helie my thoughts:

Comfort's in heaven; and we are on the earth, Where nothing lives hut crosses, care, and grief. Your husband, he is gone to save far off, Whilst others come to make him lose at home: Here am I left to underprop his land, Who, weak with age, cannot support myself: Now comes the sick hour that his surfeit made; Now shall he try his friends that flatter'd him.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. My lord, your son was gone before I

York. He was?—Why, so!—go all which way it will!—

The nobles they are fled, the commons they are cold,

And will, I fear, revolt on Hereford's side.— Sirrah, get thee to Plashy, to my sister Gloster; Bid her send me presently a thousand pound:— Hold, take my ring. [ship, Serv. My lord, I had forgot to tell your lord-To-day, as I came hy, I called there;— But I shall grieve you to report the rest.

York. What is't, knave?

Serv. An hour hefore I came, the duchess

York. God for his mercy! what a tide of woes Comes rushing on this woeful land at once I know not what to do:—I would to God,—So my untruth had not provok'd him to it,—The king had cut off my head with my hrother's. What, are there no posts despatch'd for

Ireland?—
How shall we do for money for these wars?—
Come, sister,—cousin, I would say,—pray, pardon me. Go, fellow [to the Servant], get thee home, provide some carts,.

And bring away the armour that is there.—

[Exit Servant.

Gentlemen, will you go muster men? If I

How or which way to order these affairs, Thus thrust disorderly into my hands, Never helieve me. Both are my kinsmen:— The one's my sovereign, whom hoth my oath And duty bids defend; the other, again, Is my kinsman, whom the king hath wrong'd, Whom conscience and my kindred bids to right. Well, somewhat we must do.—Come, cousin, I'll [men, Dispose of you.—Gentlemen, go, muster upyour

And meet me presently at Berkley Castle. I should to Plashy too;—
But time will not permit:—all is uneven,

And everything is left at six and seven.

Exeunt YORK and QUEEN.

Bushy. The wind sits fair for news to go to Ireland,

But none returns. For us to levy power Proportionable to the enemy Is all impossible.

Green. Besides, our nearness to the king in Is near the hate of those love not the king.

Bagot. And that's the wavering commons; for their love

Lies in their purses; and whose empties them, By so much fills their hearts with deadly hate. Bushy. Wherein the king stands generally condemn'd.

Bagot. If judgment lie in them, then so do we.

Because we ever have heen near the king. Green. Well, I will for refuge straight to Bristol Castle:

The Earl of Wiltshire is already there. [office Bushy. Thither will I with you: for little The hateful commons will perform for us, Except like curs to tear us all to pieces.—Will you go along with us?

Bagot. No; I will to Ireland to his majesty.

Farewell: if heart's presages he not vain,

We three here part that ne'er shall meet again

We three here part that ne'er shall meet again.

Bushy. That's as York thrives to heat back.

Bolingbroke. [takes

Alas poor duke! the task he under-

Green. Alas, poor dukel the task he under-Is numbering sands, and drinking oceans dry: Where one on his side fights, thousands will fly. Farewell at once,—for once, for all, and ever. Bushy. Well, we may meet again.

Bagot. I fear me, never. [Exeunt.

SCENE III .- The Wilds in Glostershire.

Enter BOLINGBROKE and NORTHUMBER-LAND, with Forces.

Boling. How far is it, my lord, to Berkley now?

North. Believe me, noble lord,
I am a stranger here in Glostershire:
These high wild hills and rough uneven ways
Draw out our miles, and make them wearisome;
And yet your fair discourse hath heen as sugar,
Making the hard way sweet and delectable.
But I hethink me what a weary way
From Ravenspurg to Cotswold will be found
In Ross and Willoughhy, wanting your company,

Which, I protest, hath very much beguil'd
The tediousness and process of my travel:
But theirs is sweeten'd with the hope to have
The present henefit which I possess;
And hope to joy is little less in joy
Than hope enjoy'd: by this the weary lords

High-stomach'd are they hoth, and full of ire. In rage deaf as the sea, hasty as fire.

Re-enter Attendants, with BOLINGBROKE and NORFOLK.

Boling. Many years of happy days befall My gracious sovereign, my most loving liege! Vor. Each day still hetter other's happiness; Until the heavens, envying earth's good hap, Add an immortal title to your crown!

K. Rich. We thank you both: yet one hut flatters us, As well appeareth by the cause you come; Namely, to appeal each other of high treason. Cousin of Hereford, what dost thou object Against the Duke of Norfolk, Thomas Mow-Ispeech!hray? Boling. First,—heaven be the record to my In the devotion of a subject's love. Tendering the precious safety of my prince, And free from other misbegotten hate, Come I appellant to this princely presence. Now, Thomas Mowbray, do I turn to thee; And mark my greeting well; for what Ispeak, My body shall make good upon this earth. Or my divine soul answer it in heaven. Thou are a traitor and a miscreant; Too good to he so, and too had to live; Since the more fair and crystal is the sky, The uglier seem the clouds that in it fly. Once more, the more to aggravate the note, With a foul traitor's name stuff I thy throat; And wish, -- so please my sovereign, -- ere I move. may prove. What my tongue speaks, my right-drawn sword Nor. Let not my cold words here accuse my zeal: 'Tis not the trial of a woman's war, The hitter clamour of two eager tongues Can arhitrate this cause hetwixt us twain: The blood is hot that must be cool'd for this: Yet can I not of such tame patience boast As to be hush'd, and naught at all to say: [me First, the fair reverence of your highness curbs From giving reins and spurs to my free speech; Which else would post until it had return'd These terms of treason doubled down his throat. Setting aside his high blood's royalty, And let him be no kinsman to my liege I do defy him, and I spit at him; Call him a slanderous coward and a villian: Which to maintain, I would allow him odds; And meet him, were I tied to run a-foot Even to the frozen ridges of the Alps, Or any other ground inhabitable, Wherever Englishman durst set his foot-Meantime let this defend my loyalty,-

By all my hopes, most falsely doth he lie.

Boling. Pale trembling coward, there I throw my gage, Disclaiming here the kindred of the king; And lay aside my high blood's royalty, [cept. Which fear, not reverence, makes thee to ex-If guilty dread hath left thee so much strength As to take up mine honour's pawn, then stoop: By that and all the rites of knighthood else, Will I make good against thee, arm to arm, What I have spoke, or thou canst worst devise. Once did I lay an ambush for your life,

Nor. I take it up; and hy that sword I swear, [shoulder, Which gently laid my knighthood on my I'll answer thee in any fair degree, Or chivalrous design of knightly trial: And when I mount, alive may I not light, If I be traitor or unjustly fight! K. Rich. What doth our cousin lay to Mowhray's charge?

It must be great, that can inherit us So much as of a thought of ill in him.

Boling. Look, what I speak my life shall prove it true;— [nohles, That Mowbray hath receiv'd eight thousand In name of lendings for your highness' soldiers, The which he hath detain'd for lewd employments, Like a false traitor and injurious villian. Besides, I say, and will in battle prove. Or here, or elsewhere to the farthest verge That ever was survey'd hy English eye,— That all the treasons for these eighteen years Complotted and contrived in this land Fetch'd from false Mowbray their first head and spring.

Further, I say,—and further will maintain Upon his bad life to make all this good,— That he did plot the Duke of Gloster's death; Suggest his soon-helieving adversaries, And consequently, like a traitor coward, Sluic'd out his innocent soul through streams of blood: Which blood, like sacrificing Abel's, cries, Even from the tongueless caverns of the earth, To me for justice and rough chastisement; And, by the glorious worth of my descent, This arm shall do it, or this life he spent!

K. Rich. How high a pitch his resolution soars!-

Thomas of Norfolk, what say'st thou to this? Nor. O, let my sovereign turn away his face. And hid his ears a little while he deaf, Till I have told this slander of his blood How God and good men hate so foul a liar.

K. Rich. Mowbray, impartial are our eyes and ears: Were he my brother, nay, my kingdom's heir,-As he is but my father's brother's son,-Now, by my sceptre's awe, I make a vow

Such neighbour-nearness to our sacred blood Should nothing privilege him, nor partialize The unstooping firmness of my upright soul: He is our subject, Mowhray, so art thou; Free speech and fearless I to thee allow.

Nor. Then, Bolingbroke, as low as to thy [liest! heart. Through the false passage of thy throat, thou Three parts of that receipt I had for Calais Disburs'd I duly to his highness' soldiers; The other part reserv'd I hy consent, For that my sovereign liege was in my debt Upon remainder of a dear account, Since last I went to France to fetch his queen: Now swallow down that liel-For Gloster's death, I slew him not; but, to mine own disgrace, Neglected my sworn duty in that case .-For you, my noble Lord of Lancaster, The honourable father to my foe,

To upstart unthrifts? Wherefore was I born? If that my cousin king be king of England, It must be granted I am Duke of Lancaster. You have a son, Aumerle, my noble kinsman; Had you first died, and he been thus trod down, He should have found his uncle Gaunt a father, To rouse his wrongs, and chase them to the bay. I am denied to sue my livery here, And yet my letters-patents give me leave: My father's goods are all distrain'd and sold; And these and all are all amiss employ'd. What would you have me do? I am a subject, And challenge law: attorneys are denied me; And therefore personally I lay my claim

To my inheritance of free descent. [abus'd. North. The noble duke hath been too much Ross. It stands your grace upon to do him right.

Willo. Base men by his endowments are made great.

York. My lords of England, let me tell you this:—

I have had feeling of my cousin's wrongs, And labour'd all I could to do him right: But in this kind to come, in braving arms, Be his own carver, and cut out his way, To find out right with wrong,—it may not be; And you that do abet him in this kind Cherish rebellion, and are rebels all.

North. The noble duke hath sworn his coming is

But for his own; and for the right of that
We all have strongly sworn to give him aid;
And let him ne'er see joy that breaks that oathl York. Well, well, I see the issue of these arms;—

I cannot mend it, I must needs confess,
Because my power is weak and all ill left:
But if I could, by him that gave me life,
I would attach you all, and make you stoop
Unto the sovereign mercy of the king;
But since I cannot, be it known to you
I do remain as neuter. So, fare you well;—
Unless you please to enter in the castle,
And there repose you for this night.

Boling. An offer, uncle, that we will accept: But we must win your grace to go with us To Bristol Castle, which they say is held By Bushy, Bagot, and their complices, The caterpillars of the commonwealth, Which I have sworn to weed and pluck away.

Which I have sworn to weed and pluck away.

York. It may be I will go with you:—but yet I'll pause;

For I am loth to break our country's laws.

Nor friends, nor foes, to me welcome you are:

Things past redress are now with me past care.

[Execunt.]

Scene IV.—A Camp in Wales. Enter Salisbury and a Captain.

Enter Salisbury and a Captain.

Cap. My Lord of Salisbury, we have stay'd ten days, And hardly kept our countrymen together, And yet we hear no tidings from the king;

Therefore we will disperse ourselves: farewell.

Sal. Stay yet another day, thou trusty

Welshman: The king reposeth all his confidence In thee. Cap. 'Tis thought the king is dead; we will not stay.

The bay trees in our country all are wither'd, And meteors fright the fixed stars of heaven; The pale-fac'd moon looks bloody on the earth, And lean-look'd prophets whisper fearth, change; [leap,—Rich men look sad, and ruffians dance and The one in fear to lose what they enjoy, The other to enjoy by rage and war:

These signs forerun the death or fall of kings. Farewell: our countrymen are gone and fled, As well assur'd Richard their king is dead.

[Erit

Sal. Ah, Richard, with the eyes of heavy mind,
I see thy glory, like a shooting star,
Fall to the base earth from the firmament!
The sun sets weeping in the lowly west,
Witnessing storms to come, woe, and unrest;
Thy friends are fled, to wait upon thy foes;
And crossly to thy good all fortune goes.

[Exit.

ACT III.

Scene I.—Bolingbroke's Camp at Bristol.

Enter Bolingbroke, York, Northumber-LAND, PERCY, Willoughby, Ross: Officers behind, with Bushy and Green, prisoners.

Boling. Bring forth these men.—
Bushy and Green, I will not vex your souls,— Since presently your souls must part your bodies—

bodies,—
With too much urging your pernicious lives,
For 'twere no charity; yet, to wash your blood
From off my hands, here, in the view of men,
I will unfold some causes of your deaths.
You have misled a prince, a royal king,
A happy gentleman in blood and lineaments,
By you unhappied and disfigur'd clean:
You have in manner with your sinful hours
Made a divorce betwirt his queen and him;
Broke the possession of a royal bed,
And stain'd the beauty of a fair queen's cheeks
With tears drawn from her eyes by your foul wrongs.

Myself,—a prince by fortune of my birth,
Near to the king in blood, and near in love
Till you did make him misinterpret me,—
Have stoop'd my neck under your injuries,
And sigh'd my English breath in foreign clouds,
Eating the bitter bread of banishment;
Whilst you have fed upon my signories,
Dispark'd my parks, and fell'd my forest-woods,
From my own windows torn my household coat.

Raz'd out my impress, leaving me no sign, Save men's opinions and my living blood, To show the world I am a gentleman. This and much more, much more than twice all this,

Condemns you to the death.—See them deliver'd over

To execution and the hand of death.

Bushy. More welcome is the stroke of death to me

Than Bolingbroke to England.—Lords, fare-

Gaunt. To God, the widow's champion and defence. [Gaunt.

Duch. Why, then, I will. Farewell, old Thou go'st to Coventry, there to behold Our cousin Hereford and fell Mowhray fight: O, sit my husband's wrongs on Hereford's spear,

That it may enter hutcher Mowhray's hreast! Or, if misfortune miss the first career, Be Mowhray's sins so heavy in his bosom That they may hreak his foaming courser's hack,

And throw the rider headlong in the lists, A caitiff recreant to my cousin Hereford! Farewell, old Gaunt; thy sometimes brother's wife,

With her companion grief must end her life. Gaunt. Sister, farewell: I must to Coventry: As much good stay with thee as go with me!

Duch. Yet one word more:—grief honndeth where it falls. Not with the empty hollowness, hut weight: I take my leave hefore I have hegun; For sorrow ends not when it seemeth done. Commend me to my hrother, Edmund York. Lo, this is all:—nay, yet depart not so; Though this he all, do not so quickly go; Bid him-O, what? I shall remember more. With all good speed at Plashy visit me. Alack, and what shall good old York there see, But empty lodgings and unfurnish'd walls, Unpeopled offices, untrodden stones? And what hear there for welcome but my Am I; who ready here do stand in arms, groans?

Therefore commend me; let him not come there To seek out sorrow that dwells everywhere. Desolate, desolate, will I hence and die: The last leave of thee takes my weeping eye! Exeunt.

Scene III .- Gosford Green, near Coventry

Lists set out, and a throne. Heralds, &c., attending. Enter the Lord Marshal, and AUMERLE.

Mar. My Lord Aumerle, is Harry Hereford arm'd?

Aum. Yea, at all points; and longs to enter Mar. The Duke of Norfolk, sprightfully and hold. [pet. |

Stays hut the summons of the appellant's trum-Aum. Why, then, the champions are pre-par'd, and stay

For nothing but his majesty's approach.

Flourish of trumpets. Enter King Richard, who takes his seat on his throne; GAUNT and several Nohlemen, who take their places. trumpet is sounded, and answered by another trumpet within. Then enter NORFOLK in armour, preceded by a Herald.

K. Rich. Marshal, demand of youder champion

The cause of his arrival here in arms: Ask him his name; and orderly proceed To swear him in the justice of his cause. Mar. In God's name and the king's, say who thou art,

And why thou com'st thus knightly clad in arms:

Against what man thou com'st, and what thy quarrel:

Speak truly, on thy knighthood and thine oath; And so defend thee heaven and thy valour!

Nor. My name is Thomas Mowbray, Duke of Norfolk;

Who hither come engaged hy my oath,-Which God defend a knight should violate!-Both to defend my loyalty and truth To God, my king, and his succeeding issue, Against the Duke of Hereford that appeals me; And, hy the grace of God and this mine arm, To prove him in defending of myself, A traitor to my God, my king, and me: And as I truly fight, defend me heaven!

Trumpet sounds. Enter BOLINGBROKE in armour, preceded by a Herald.

K. Rich. Marshal, ask yonder knight in arms Both who he is, and why he cometh hither Thus plated in habiliments of war; And formally, according to our law, Depose him in the justice of his cause.

Mar. What is thy name? and wherefore com'st thou hither, Before King Richard in his royal lists?

Against whom comest thou? and what's thy quarrel?

Speak like a true knight, so defend thee heaven:

Boling. Harry of Hereford, Lancaster, and Derhy,

To prove, by God's grace and my hody's valour, In lists, on Thomas Mowbray, Duke of Norfolk.

That he's a traitor, foul and dangerons, To God of Heaven, King Richard, and to me: And as I truly fight, defend me heaven! Mar. On pain of death, no person he so hold

Or daring-hardy as to touch the lists, Except the marshal and such officers Appointed to direct these fair designs. Boling. Lord marshal, let me kiss my sovereign's hand, And how my knee hefore his majesty: For Mowhray and myself are like two men That vow a long and weary pilgrimage; Then let us take a ceremonious leave

And loving farewell of our several friends. Mar. The appellant in all duty greets your highness,

And craves to kiss your hand and take his leave.

K. Rich. We will descend and fold him in our arms.-

Cousin of Hereford, as thy cause is right, So he thy fortune in this royal fight! Farewell, my blood; which if to-day thou shed, Lament we may, but not revenge thee dead.

Boling. O, let no noble eye profane a tear For me, if I be gor'd with Mowbray's spear: As confident as is the falcon's flight Against a bird, do I with Mowhray fight .-My loving lord, I take my leave of you;-Of you, my noble cousin, Lord Aumerle; Not sick, although I have to do with death, But lusty, young, and cheerly drawing breath.-Lo, as at English feasts, so I regreet |sweet:-The daintiest last, to make the end more And what loss is it to be rid of care?
Strives Bolingbroke to be as great as we?
Greater he shall not be; if he serve God,
We'll serve him too, and be his fellow so:
Revolt our subjects? that we cannot mend;
They break their faith to God, as well as us:
Cry woe, destruction, ruin, loss, decay;
The worst is death, and death will have his dayl Scroop. Glad am I that your highness is so arm'd To bear the tidings of calamity. Like an unseasonable stormy day, Which makes the silver rivers drown their shores,

As if the world were all dissolv'd to tears;
So high above his limits swells the rage
Of Bolingbroke, covering your fearful land
With hard bright steel, and hearts harder than steel.

White-beards have arm'd their thin and hairless scalps [voices, Against thy majesty; and boys, with women's Strive to speak big, and clap their female joints

In stiff unwieldly arms against thy crown:
Thy very beadsmen learn to bend their bows
Of double-fatal yew against thy state;
Yea, distaff-women manage rusty bills
Against thy seat: both old and young rebel,
And all goes worse than I have power to tell.

K. Rich. Too well, too well thou tell'st a tale so ill.

Where is the Earl of Wiltshire? where is Bagot?

What is become of Bushy, where is Green? That they have let the dangerous enemy Measure our confines with such peaceful steps? If we prevail, their heads shall pay for it: I warrant they have made peace with Bolingbroke.

Scroop. Peace have they made with him, indeed, my lord. [redemption]
K. Rich. O villains, vipers, damn'd without Dogs, easily won to fawn on any man! Snakes, in my heart-blood warm'd, that sting my heartl [Judas! Three Judases, each one thrice worse than Would they make peace? terrible hell make war Upon their spotted souls for this offence!

Scroop. Sweet love, I see, changing his property, Turns to the sourest and most deadly hate:— Again uncurse their souls; their peace is made With heads, and not with hands: those whom you curse Have felt the worst of death's destroying wound,

And lie full low, grav'd in the hollow ground.
Aum. Is Bushy, Green, and the Earl of Wiltshire dead? [heads.

Wiltshire dead? [heads. Scroop. Yea, all of them at Bristol lost their Aum. Where is the duke my father with his power? K. Rich. No matter where;—of comfort, no man speak:

Let's talk of graves, of worms, and epitaphs;
Make dust our paper, and with rainy eyes
Write sorrow on the bosom of the earth.
Let's choose executors, and talk of wills:
And yet not so,—for what can we bequeath,
Save our deposed bodies to the ground?

Our lands, our lives, and all are Bolingbroke's, And nothing can we call our own but death, And that small model of the barren earth Which serves as paste and cover to our bones. For God'a sake, let us sit upon the ground, And tell sad stories of the death of kings:—How some have been depos'd; some slain in war:

Some haunted by the ghosts they have depos'd; Some poisn'd by their wives; some sleeping kill'd;

All murder'd:—for within the hollow crown That rounds the mortal temples of a king Keeps Death his court; and there the antic sits, Scoffing his state, and grinning at his pomp; Allowing him a breath, a little scene, To monarchize, be fear'd, and kill with looks; Infusing him with self and vain conceit,—As if this flesh, which walls about our life.

As if this flesh, which walls about our life, Were brass impregnable; and humour'd thus, Comes at the last, and with a little pin Bores through his castle-wall, and—farewell, king!

Cover your heads, and mock not flesh and With solemn reverence; throw away respect, Tradition, form, and ceremonious duty; For you have but mistook me all this while: I live with bread like you, feel want, taste grief, Need friends:—subjected thus,

How can you say to me, I am a king?

Car. My lord, wise men ne'er sit and wail their woes,

But presently prevent the ways to wail.

To fear the foe, since fear oppresseth strength,

Gives, in your weakness, strength unto your foe.

And so your follies fight against yourself. Fear, and be slain; no worse can come to fight: And fight and die is death destroying death; Where fearing dying pays death servile breath.

Aum. My father hath a power; inquire of him;

And learn to make a body of a limb.

K. Rich. Thou chid'st me well:—proud Bolingbroke, I come [doom.

Scroop. Men judge by the complexion of the The state and inclination of the day: So may you by my dull and heavy eye, My tongue hath but a heavier tale to say. I play the torturer, by small and small To lengthen out the worst that must be spoken:—

Your uncle York is join'd with Bolingbroke;
And all your northern castles yielded up,
And all your southern gentlemen in arms
Upon his party.

K. Rich. Thou hast said enough.—
Beshrew thee, cousin, which didst lead me forth, [To Aumerle.
Of that sweet way I was in to despair!

What say you now? what comfort have we now? By heaven, I'll hate him everlastingly That bids me be of comfort any more. Go to Flint Castle: there I'll pine away;

You never shall-so help you truth and Godi-Emhrace each other's love in hanishment; Nor never look upon each other's face; Nor never write, regreet, nor reconcile This lowering tempest of your home-hred hate; Nor never hy advised purpose meet To plot, contrive, or complet any ill 'Gainst us, our state, our subjects, or our land.

Boling. I swear.

Nor. And I, to keep all this.

Boling. Norfolk, so far as to mine enemy;-By this time, had the king permitted us, One of our souls had wander'd in the air. Banish'd this frail sepulchre of our flesh, As now our flesh is hanish'd from this land: Confess thy treasons, ere thou fly the realm; Since thou has far to go, hear not along The clogging hurden of a guilty soul.

Nor. No, Bolinghroke: if ever I were traitor, My name he hietted from the hook of life, And I from heaven banish'd, as from hencel But what thou art, God, thou, and I do know; And all too soon, I fear, the king shall rue.— Farewell, my liege.—Now no way can I stray: Save hack to England, all the world's my way. Exit.

K. Rich. Uncle, even in the glasses of thine eyes I see thy grieved heart: thy sad aspect Hath from the number of his hanish'd years Pluck'd four away .- [To Boling.] Six frozen winters spent,

Return with welcome home from banishment. Boling. How long a time lies in one little

wordi

Four lagging winters and four wanton springs End in a word: such is the breath of kings. Gaunt. I thank my liege that in regard of me He shortens four years of my son's exile: But little vantage shall I reap thereby; For, ere the six years that he hath to spend Can change their moons and hring their times ahout, My oil-dried lamp and time bewasted light Shall he extinct with age and endless night;

My inch of taper will he burnt and done, And hlindfold death not let me see my son. K. Rich. Why, uncle, thou hast many years to live.

Gaunt. But not a minute, king, that thou canst give:

Shorten my days thou canst with sullen sorrow, And pluck nights from me, but not lend a morrow:

Thou canst help time to furrow me with age, But stop no wrinkle in his pilgrimage; Thy word is current with him for my death, But dead, thy kingdom cannot huy my hreath.

K. Rich. Thy son is hanish'd upon good advice,

Whereto thy tongue a party-verdict gave: Why at our justice seem'st thou, then, to lower? Gaunt. Things sweet to taste prove in digestion sour. You urg'd me as a judge; but I had rather You would have hid me argue like a father. O, had it heen a stranger, not my child, To smooth his fault I should have been more mild:

A partial slander sought I to avoid,

And in the sentence my own life destroy'd. Alas, I look'd when some of you should say. I was too strict to make mine own away; But you gave leave to mine unwilling tongue. Against my will to do myself this wrong.

K. Rich. Cousin, farewell; -and, uncle, hid him so:

Six years we hanish him, and he shall go. [Flourish. Exeunt K. RICH, and Train.

Aum. Cousin, farewell: what presence must not know,

From where you do remain let paper show. Mar. My lord, no leave take I; for I will ride As far as land will let me hy your side.

Gaunt. O, to what purpose dost thou hoard thy words,

That thou return'st no greeting to thy friends? Boling. I have too few to take my leave of

When the tongue's office should he prodigal To breathe the ahundant dolour of the heart. Gount. Thy grief is but thy absence for a

Will hut remember me what a deal of world I wander from the jewels that I love. Must I not serve a long apprenticehood To foreign passages; and in the end, Having my freedom, hoast of nothing else But that I was a journeyman to grief? [visits

Gaunt. All places that the eve of heaven Are to a wise man ports and happy havens. Teach thy necessity to reason thus; There is no virtue like necessity Think not the king did banish thee, But thou the king: woe doth the heavier sit Where it perceives it is hut faintly horne. Go, say I sent thee forth to purchase honour And not the king exil'd thee; or suppose Devouring pestilence hangs in our air. And thou art flying to a fresher clime: Look, what thy soul holds dear, imagine it To lie that way thou go'st, not whence thou com'st: Suppose the singing-birds musicians, [strew'd, The grass whereon thou tread'st the presence The flowers fair ladies, and thy steps no more Than a delightful measure or a dance; For gnarling sorrow hath less power to hite

The man that mocks at it and sets it light. Boling. O, who can hold a fire in his hand By thinking on the frosty Cancasus?

Or cloy the hungry edge of appetite By hare imagination of a feast?

Or wallow naked in December snow By thinking on fantastic summer'a heat? Is dangerous treason: he is come to ope
The purple testament of bleeding war;
But ere the crown he looks for live in peace,
Ten thousand bloody crowns of mothers' sons
Shall ill become the flower of England's face,
Change the complexion of her maid-pale peace
To scarlet indignation, and bedew
Her pastures' grass with faithful English blood.
North. The king of heaven forbid our lord

the king
Should so with civil and uncivil arms
Be rush'd upon! Thy thrice-noble cousin,
Harry Bolingbroke, doth humble kiss thy hand;
And by the honourable tomb he swears,
That stands upon your royal grandsire's bones,
And by the royalties of both your bloods,— Currents that spring from one most gracious head,—

And by the buried hand of warlike Gaunt,
And by the worth and honour of himself.
Comprising all that may be sworn or said,—
His coming hither hath no further scope
Than for his lineal royalties, and to beg
Enfranchisement immediate on his knees:
Which on thy royal party granted once,
His glittering arms he will commend to rust,
His barbed steeds to stables, and his heart
To faithful service of your majesty.
This swears he, as he is a prince, is just;
And, as I am a gentleman, I credit him.

K. Rich. Northumberland, say thus the king returns:—

His noble cousin is right welcome hither;
And all the number of his fair demands
Shall be accomplish'd without contradiction;
With all the gracious utterance thou hast
Speak to his gentle hearing kind commends.—
We do debase ourself, cousin; do we not,
[To Aumerle.]

To look so poorly, and to speak so fair?
Shall we call back Northumberland, and send Defiance to the traitor, and so die?

Aum. No, good my lord; let's fight with gentle words Till time lend friends, and friends their helpful swords.

K. Rich. O God, O God! that e'er this tongue of mine.

That laid the sentence of dread banishment
On yon proud man, should take it off again
With words of sooth! O that I were as great
As is my grief, or lesser than my name!
Or that I could forget what I have been!
Or not remember what I must be now!
Swell'st thou, proud heart? I'll give thee scope to beat,

Since foes have scope to beat both thee and me.

Aum. Northumberland comes back from Bolingbroke. K. Rich. What must the king do now? must he submit?

The king shall do it: must he be depos'd?
The king shall be contented: must he lose
The name of king? o' God's name, let it go:
I'll give my jewels for a set of beads,
My gorgeous palace for a hermitage,
My gay apparel for an alms-man's gown,
My figur'd goblets for a dish of wood,
My sceptre for a paimer's walking staff,
My subjects for a pair of carved saints,

And my large kingdom for a little grave,
A little little grave, an obscure grave;—
Or P'll be buried in the king's highway,
Some way of common trade, where subject's feet

May hourly trample on their sovereign's head; For on my heart they tread now whilst I live; And buried once, why not upon my head?—Aumerle, thou weep'st—my tender-hearted cousin!—

We'll make foul weather with despised tears; Our sighs and they shall lodge the summer

And make a dearth in this revolting land.
Or shall we play the wantons with our woes,
And make some pretty match with shedding tears?

As thus;—to drop them still upon one place, Till they have fretted us a pair of graves Within the earth; and, therein laid,—there lies Two kinsmen digg'd their graves with weeping

Would not this ill do well?—Well, well, I see I talk but idly, and you mock at me.—
Most mighty prince, my Lord Northumberland, What says King Bolingbroke? will his majesty Give Richard leave to live till Richard die?
You make a leg, and Bolingbroke says ay.

North. My lord, in the base court he doth attend [down?

To speak with you;—may it please you to come K. Rich. Down, down I come; like glistering Phaeton, Wanting the manage of unruly jades.

[NORTH. retires to BOLING.
In the base court? Base court, where kings grow base,

To come at traitors' calls, and do them grace.
In the base court? Come down? Down, court!
down, king!

For night-owls shrick where mounting larks should sing. [Exeunt from above. Boling. What says his majesty?

North. Sorrow and grief of heart Makes him speak fondly, like a frantic man: Yet he is come.

Enter King Richard, and his Attendants below.

Boling. Stand all apart,
And show fair duty to his majesty.—
My gracious lord,— [Kneeling.
K. Rich. Faircousin, you debase your princely

To make the base earth proud with kissing it; Me rather had my heart might seel your love Than my unpleas'd eye see your courtesy. Up, cousin, up;—your heart is up, I know,

Thus high at least ltouching his own head, although your knee below. [own.
Boling. My gracious lord, I come but for mine thou lose. [inspir'd, Gaunt. Methinks I am a prophet new And thus, expiring, do foretell of him: His rash fierce blaze of riot cannot last, For violent fires soon burn out themselves; Small showers last long, but sudden storms are short: He tires betimes that spurs too fast betimes; With eager feeding food doth choke the feeder: Light vanity, insatiste cormorant, Consuming means, soon preys upon itself. This royal throne of kings, this scenter'd isle This earth of majesty, this seat of Mars, This other Eden, demi-paradise; This fortress built by Nature for herself Against infection and the hand of war; This happy breed of men, this little world; This precious stone set in the silver sea, Which serves it in the office of a wall, Or as a most defensive to a house, Against the envy of less happier lands; This blessed plot, this earth, this realm, this England,

This nurse, this teeming womb of royal kings, Fear'd by their breed, and famous by their birth, Renowned for their deeds as far from home,— For Christain service and true chivalry,— As is the segulchre in stubborn Jewry Of the world's ransom, blessed Mary's Son;— This land of such dear souls, this dear dear land.

Dear for her reputation through the world, Is now leas'd out,—I die pronouncing it,—Like to a tenement or pelting farm:

K. Rich. Can sick men play so nicely with their names?

Gount. No, misery makes sport to mock itself:

Since thou dost seek to kill my name in me, I mock my name, great king, to flatter thee. K. Rich. Should dying men flatter with those that live?

Gount. No. no; men living fixtler those thet K. Rich. Thou, now s-dying, say'st thou fixtler'st me.

Grunt. O, no! thou diest, though I the sicker be. [thee ill. K. Rich. I am in health, I breathe, and see Gaunt. Now, He that made me knows I see thee ill.

Ill in myself to ree, and in thee seeing ill.
Thy death-bed is no lesser than the land
Wherein thou liest in reputsion sick;
And thou, too careless patient as thou art,
Committ'st thy anointed body to the cure
Of those physicians that first wounded thee:
A thousand flatterers sit within thy erown.
Whose compass is no bigger than thy head;
And yet, encaged in so small a verge,
The waste is no whit lesser than thy land.
O, had thy grandsire, with a prophet's eye,
Seen how his son's son should destroy his sons.
From forth thy reach he would have laid thy shame.

Deposing thee before thou wert possess'd, Which art possess'd now to depose thyself. Why, cousin, wert thou regent of the world. It were a shame to let this land by lease; But for thy world enjoying but thin land, Is it not more than shame to shame it so? Landlord of England art thou now, not king: Thy state of law is bondstare to the law;

Gardener, for telling me this news of woe, I would the plants thou graft'st may never

Gard. Poor queen! so that thy state might he no worse,

I would my skill were subject to thy curse.— Here did she fall a tear; here, in this place, I'll set a bank of rue, sour herb of grace: Rue, even for ruth, here shortly shall be seen, In the remembrance of a weeping queen.

[Exeunt.

ACT IV.

Scene I.—London. Westminster Hall. The Lords spiritual on the right side of the throne; the Lords temporal on the left; the Commons below.

Enter Bolingbroke, Aumerle, Survey, Northumberland, Percy, Fitzwater, another Lord, the Bishop of Carlisle, the Abbot of Westminster, and Attendants. Officers behind, with Bagot.

Boling. Call forth Bagot.—
Now, Bagot, freely speak thy mind;
What thou dost know of nohie Gloster's death;
Who wrought it with the king, and who perform'd

The bloody office of his timeless end.

Bagot. Then sef before my face the Lord

Aumerle. [that man.

Boling. Cousin, stand forth, and look upon Bagot. My Lord Aumerle, I know your daring tongue

Scorns to unsay what once it hath deliver'd. In that dead time when Gloster's death was plotted

I heard you say,—Is not my arm of length, That reacheth from the restful English Court 4s far as Calais, to my uncle's head? Amongst much other talk, that very time, I heard you say that you had rather refuse The offer of an hundred thousand crowns Than Bolingbroke's return to England; Adding withal, how blest this land would be in this your cousin's death.

Aum. Princes, and noble lords, What answer shall I make to this base man? shall I so much dishonour my fair stars, In equal terms to give him chastisement? Either I must, or have mine honour soil'd With the attainder of his slanderous lips.—There is my gage, the manual seal of death. That marks thee out for hell: I say, thou liest, and will maintain what thou hast said is false in thy heart-blood, though being all too base to stain the temper of my knightly sword.

Boling. Bagot, forbear; thou shalt not take it up. [best Aum. Excepting one, I would he were the n all this presence that hath moved me so.

Fitz. If that thy valour stand on sympathy, there is my gage, Aumerie, in gage to thine:
By that fair sun that shows mo where thou stand'st [it,

Scene II .- The same. A Room in the Palace. Enter Queen, Bushy, and Bagot.

Bushy. Madam, your majesty is too much sad:

You promis'd, when you parted with the king, To lay aside life-harming heaviness, And entertain a cheerful disposition.

Queen. To please the king, I did; to please myself,

I cannot do it; yet I know no cause Why I should welcome such a guest as grief, Save bidding farewell to so sweet a guest As my sweet Richard: yet, again, methinka Some unborn sorrow, ripe in fortune's womh, Is coming towards me; and my inward soul With nothing trembles: at some thing it grieves, More than with parting from my lord the king.

Bushy. Each substance of a grief hath twenty shadows, Which show like grief itself, hat are not so; For sorrow's eye, glazed with hlinding tears, Divides one thing entire to many objects; Like perspectives, which, rightly gaz'd upon, Show nothing but confusion,—ey'd awry, Distinguish form: so your sweet majesty, Looking awry upon your lord's departure,

Find shapes of grief, more than himself, to wail; Which, look'd on as it is, is naught but shadows Of what it is not. Then, thrice-gracious queen, More than your lord's departure weep not,more's not seen;

Or if it be, 'tis with false sorrow's eye, Which for things true weeps things imaginary. Queen. It may be so; but yet my inward soul

Persuades me it is otherwise: howe'er it he. I cannot but be sad; so heavy sad, Ithink. As,—though, on thinking, on no thought I Makes me with heavy nothing faint and shrink.

Bushy. 'Tis nothing hut conceit, my gracious [deriv'd lady.

Queen. 'Tis nothing less: conceit is still From some forefather grief; mine is not so. For nothing hath hegot my something grief; Or something hath the nothing that I grieve: Tis in reversion that I do possess; But what it is, that is not yet known; what I cannot name; 'tis nameless woe, I wot.

There shouldst thou find one heinous article,-Containing the deposing of a king, And cracking the strong warrant of an oath, Mark'd with a blot, damn'd in the book of

Nay, all of you that stand and look upon, Whilst that my wretchedness doth bait myself,-

Though some of you, with Pilate, wash your hands.

Showing an outward pity; yet you Pilates Have here deliver'd me to my sour cross, And water cannot wash away your sin.

K. Rich. Mine eyes are full of tears, I cannot And yet salt water blinds them not so much But they can see a sort of traitors here. Nay, if I turn mine eyes upon myself, I find myself a traitor with the rest; For I have given here my soul's consent To undeck the pompous body of a king; Make glory base, and sovereignty a slave, Proud majesty a subject, state a peasant.

K. Rich. Say that again. The shadow of my sorrow? Ha! let's see:-'Tis very true, my grief lies all within; And these external manners of laments Are merely shadows to the unseen grief That swells with silence in the tortur'd soul; There lies the substance: and I thank thee, king, Boling.Name it, fair cousin. K. Rich. Fair cousin! Why, I am greater than a king:

For when I was a king, my flatterers Were then but subjects; being now a subject, I have a king here to my flatterer. Being so great, I have no need to beg.

My noble uncle! [Kneels. York. Show me thy humble heart, and not thy knee, Whose duty is deceivable and false. Boling. My gracious uncle!-

York. Tut, tut! Grace me no grace, nor uncle me no uncle: I am no traitor's uncle; and that word—grace, In an ungracious mouth is but profane. Why have those banish'd and forbidden legs Dar'd once to touch a dust of England's ground? But, then, more why, -why have they dar'd to Duch. My lord, you told me you would tell the rest.

When weeping made you break the story off Of our two cousins coming into London. York. Where did I leave?

At that sad stop, my lord. Where rude misgovern'd hands from windows' tops ihead.

Threw dust and rubbish on King Richard's Then, as I said, the duke, great Bolingbroke.

Mounted upon a hot and fiery steed, Which his aspiring rider seem'd to know,-With slow but stately pace kept on his course. While all tongues cried, God save thee, Bolingbroke!

You would have thought the very windows spake, So many greedy looks of young and old Through casements darted their desiring eyes Upon his visage; and that all the walls With painted imagery had said at once, Jesu preserve thee! welcome, Bolingbroke! Whilst he, from one side to the other turning, Bareheaded, lower than his proud steed's neck, Bespake them thus,—I thank you, countrymen: And thus still doing, thus he pass'd along.

Duch. Alas, poor Richard! where rode he the whilst?

York. As in a theatre the eyes of men, After a well-grac'd actor leaves the stage, Are idly bent on him that enters next, Thinking his prattle to be tedious; [eyes Even so, or with much more contempt, men's Did scowl on Richard; no man cried, God save him!

No joyful tongue gave him his welcome home: But dust was thrown upon his sacred head; Which with such gentle sorrow he shook off, His face still combating with tears and smiles, The badges of his grief and patience, That had not God, for some strong purpose, steel'd Imelted. The hearts of men, they must perforce have And barbarism itself have pitied him. But heaven hath a hand in these events, To whose high will we bound our calm contents.

Freed not thy sovereign's foe, my gentle earth, Nor with thy sweets comfort his rav'nous sense; But let thy spiders, that suck up thy venom, And heavy-gaited toads, lie in their way, Doing annoyance to the treacherous feet Which with usurping steps do trample thee: Yield stinging nettles to mine enemies; And when they from thy bosom pluck a flower, Guard it, I pray thee, with a lurking adder, Whose double tongue may with a mortal touch Throw death upon thy sovereign's enemies. Duch. O happy vantage of a kneeling kneel Yet am I sick for fear: speak it again; Twice saying pardon doth not pardon twain. But makes one pardon strong.

Boling. With all my beart I pardon him.

Duch. A god on earth thou art. Boling. But for our trusty brother-in-law and the abbot.

With all the rest of that consorted crew Destruction straight shall dog them at the heels. Good uncle, help to order several powers To Oxford, or where'er these traitors are: They shall not live within this world, I swear, But I will have them, if I once know where. Uncle, farewell:-and, cousin mine, adieu: Your mother well hath pray'd, and prove you true.

Duch. Come, my old son:-I pray God make thee new. (Excunt.

Scene IV .- Another Room in the Castle.

Enter SIR PIERCE OF EXTOR and a Servent.

Exton. Didst thou not mark the king, what words he spake?-Have I no friend will rid me of this living feat?

Was it not so? Setv. Those were his very words. Exton. Have I no friend? quoth he: he spake it twice. And urg'd it twice together, -did he not?

Serv. He did. Exton. And, speaking it, he wistly look'd on As who should say, -I would thou wert the man That would divorce this terror from my heart,-Meaning the king at Pomfret. Come, let's go: I am the king's friend, and will rid his foe.

Exeunt.

Scene V.—Pomfret. The Dungeon of the Castle.

Enter KING RICHARD.

K. Rich. I have been studying how I may compare

This prison where I live unto the world: And, for because the world is populous, And here is not a creature but myself, I cannot do it;—yet I'll hammer't out. My brain I'll prove the female to my soul, My soul the father: and these two beget A generation of still-breeding thoughts, And these same thoughts people this little world.

In humours like the people of this world, For no thought is contented. The better sort, As thoughts of things divine,—are intermix'd With scruples, and do set the word itself Against the word:

As thus,-Come, little ones; and then again,-It is as hard to come as for a camel To thread the postern of a needle's eye. Thoughts tending to ambition, they do plot Unlikely wonders: how these vain weak nails May tear a passage through the flinty ribs Of this hard world, my ragged prison walls; And, for they cannot, die in their own pride. Thoughts tending to content flatter themselves A king, woe's slave, shall kingly woe obev. That power I have, discharge; and let them go To ear the land that hath some hope to grow, For I have none:-let no man speak again To alter this, for counsel is hut vain. Aum. My liege, one word.

He does me double wrong K. Rich. That wounds me with the flatteries of his tongue.

Discharge my followers: let them hence away, From Richard's night to Bolinghroke's fair day. Exeunt.

SCENE III .- WALES. Before Flint Castle.

Enter, with drum and colours, Bolingeroke and Forces; YORK, NORTHUMBERLAND, and others.

Boling. So that by this intelligence we learn The Welshmen are dispers'd; and Salisbury Is gone to meet the king, who lately landed With some few private friends upon this coast. North. The news is very fair and good, my lord:

Richard not far from hence hath hid his head. York. It would be eem the Lord Northum-

herland

To say, King Richard:-alack the heavy day When such a sacred king should hide his head. North. Your grace mistakes; only to be hrief, Left I his title out.

The time hath been, York. Would you have been so brief with him, he would Have been so brief with you, to shorten you, · For taking so the head, your whole head's length. should.

Boling. Mistake not, uncle, further than you York. Take not, good cousin, further than you should, [heads.

Lest you mistake: the heavens are o'er our Boling, I know it, uncle; and oppose not myself

Against their will .- But who comes here?

Enter Percy.

Well, Harry: what, will not this castle yield? Percy. The castle royally is mann'd, my lord, Against thy entrance. Boling. Royallyl

Why, it contains no king?

Percy. Yes, my good lord, It doth contain a king; King Richard lies Within the limits of yond lime and stone: And with him are the Lord Aumerle, Lord Salisbury, Sir Stephen Scroop; besides a clergyman Of holy reverence, who I cannot learn.

North. O, belike it is the Bishop of Carlisle. Boling. Noble lord,

To NORTHUMBERLAND. Go to the rude ribs of that ancient castle; Through brazen trumpet send the breath of parle Into his ruin'd ears, and thus deliver:-Harry Bolingbroke.

On both his knees doth kiss King Richard'a hand,

And sends allegiance and true faith of heart To his most royal person; hither come

Even at his feet to lay my arms and power, Provided that, my hanishment repeal'd, And lands restor'd again, be freely granted: If not, I'll use the advantage of my power, And lay the summer's dust with showers of blood

Rain'd from the wounds of slaughter'd Englishmen:

The which, how far off from the mind of Bolinghroke It is, such crimson tempest should bedrench The fresh green lap of fair King Richard's land,

My stooping duty tenderly shall show. Go, signify as much, while here we march Upon the grassy carpet of this plain.—
NORTH. advonces to the Castle, with a trumpet.

Let's march without the noise of threat'ning drum,

That from the castle's tatter'd hattlements Our fair appointments may be well perus'd. Methinks King Richard and myself should meet

With no less terror than the elements Of fire and water, when their thund'ring shock At meeting tears the cloudy cheeks of heaven. Be he the fire, I'll he the yielding water: The rage be his, while on the earth I rain My waters, -on the earth, and not on him. March on, and mark King Richard how he looks.

A parle sounded, and answered by another trumpet within. Flourish. Enter on the wolls King Richard, the Bishop of Car-LISLE, AUMERLE, SCROOP, and SALISBURY.

See, see, King Richard doth himself appear. As doth the blushing discontented sun From out the fiery portal of the east, When he perceives the envious clouds are bent To dim his glory, and to stain the track Of his hright passage to the occident.

York. Yet looks he like a king: behold, his As bright as is the eagle's, lightens forth Controlling majesty: -alack, alack, for woe, That any harm should stain so fair a showl

K. Rich. We are amaz'd; and thus long have we stood To watch the fearful bending of thy knee,

To NORTHUMBERLAND. Because we thought ourself thy lawful king: And if we he, how dare thy joints forget To pay their awful duty to our presence? If we he not, show us the hand of God That hath dismissed us from our stewardship; For well we know, no hand of blood and bone Can gripe the sacred handle of our sceptre, Unless he do profane, steal, or usurp. And though you think that all, as you have done. Have torn their souls by turning them from us, And we are harren and bereft of friends; Yet know,—my master, God omnipotent, Is mustering in his clouds, on our behalf, Armies of pestilence; and they shall strike Your children yet unhorn and unbegot, That lift your vassal hands against my head, And threat the glory of my precious crown. Tell Bollinghroke,—for yond methinks he is, That every stride he makes upon my land

Our town of Cicester in Glostershire; But whether they be ta'en or slain we hear not.

Enter NORTHUMBERLAND.

Welcome, my lord: what is the news?

North. First, to thy sacred state wish I all happiness.

The next news is, I have to London sent The heads of Salisbury, Spencer, Blunt, and Kent:

The manner of their taking may appear At large discoursed in this paper here.

[Presenting a paper.
Boling. We thank thee, gentle Percy, for thy pains;

And to thy worth will add right worthy gains.

Enter FITZWATER.

Fitz. My Lord, I have from Oxford sent to Loudon

The heads of Brocas and Sir Bennet Seely;
Two of the dangerous consorted traitors
That sought at Oxford thy dire overthrow.
Boling. Thy pains, Fitzwater, shall not be forgot;

Right noble is thy merit, well I wot.

Enter Percy, with the BISHOP OF CARLISLE

Percy. The grand conspirator, Abbot of Westminster,

With clog of conscience and sour melancholy, Hath yielded up his body to the grave; But here is Carlisle living, to abide

Thy kingly doom and sentence of his pride.

Boling. Carlisle, this is your doom:—
Choose out some secret place, some reverend room.

More than thou hast, and with it joy thy life So, as thou liv'st in peace, die free from strife For though mine enemy thou hast ever been, High sparks of honour in thee have I seen.

Enter Exton, with Attendants, bearing a coffin.

Exton. Great king, within this coffin I pre-

Thy buried fear: herein all breathless lies
The mightiest of thy greatest enemies,
Richard of Bordeaux, by me hither brought.
Boling. Exton, I thank thee not; for thou hast wrought

A deed of slander, with thy fatal hand,
Upon my head and all this famous land.
Exton. From your own mouth, my lord, did
I this deed.

Boling. They love not poison that do poison need,

Nor do I thee: though I did wish him dead, I hate the murderer, love him murdered. The guilt of conscience take thou for thy labour, But neither my good word nor princely favour: With Cain go wander through the shade of night,

And never show thy head by day nor light.— Lords, I protest, my soul is full of woe, That blood should sprinkle me to make me grow:

Come, mourn with me for that I do lament.

And put on sullen black incontinent:

I'll make a voyage to the Holy Land,

To wash this blood off from my guilty hand:

March sadly after; grace my mournings here,

In weeping after this untimely bier. [Excunt.

Tears show their love, hut want their remedies.

Cousin, I am too young to be your father, Though you are old enough to be my heir. What you will have, I'll give, and willing too; For do we must what force will have us do.— Set on towards London:-cousin, is it so?

Boling. Yea, my good lord. Then I must not say no. K. Rich. [Flourish. Exeunt.

The DUKE OF YORK'S Scene IV.—LANGLEY. Gorden.

- Enter the QUEEN and two Ladies.

Queen. What sport shall we devise here in this garden,

To drive away the heavy thought of care? o drive away the news, and the state of the

The world is full of ruhs, and that my fortune Runs against the hias.

Madam, we'll dance. x Lady. Queen. My legs can keep no measure in de-light,

When my poor heart no measure keeps in grief: Therefore, no dancing, girl; some other sport. I Lady. Madam, we'll tell tales.

Of sorrow or of joy? Qucen. I Lody. Of either, madam.

Of neither, girl: Oueen. For if of joy, being altogether wanting, It doth remember me the more of sorrow; Or if of grief, being altogether had, It adds more sorrow to my want of joy: For what I have, I need not to repeat; And what I want, it boots not to complain. I Lady. Madam, I'll sing.

'Tis well that thou hast cause; Queen. But thou shouldst please me better wouldst thou weep. [you good.

1 Lady. I could weep, madam, would it do Queen. And I could weep, would weeping do me good,

And never horrow any tear of thee .-But stay, here come the gardeners: Let's step into the shadow of these trees. My wretchedness unto a row of pins, They'll talk of state; for every one doth so Against a change: woe is forerun with woe. QUEEN and Ladies retire.

Enter a Gardener and two Servants.

Gard. Go, hind thou up youd dangling apricocks,

Which, like unruly children, make their sire Stoop with oppression of their prodigal weight: Give some supportance to the hending twigs.-Go thou, and like an executioner Cut off the heads of too-fast growing sprays, That look too lofty in our commonwealth: All must be even in our government. You thus employ'd, I will go root away The noisome weeds, that without profit suck

The soil's fertility from wholesome flowers.

I Serv. Why should we, in the compass of a pale, Keep law and form and due proportion. Showing as in a model, our firm estate,

Is full of weeds; her fairest flowers chok'd up, Her fruit-trees all unprun'd, her hedges ruin'd, Her knots disorder'd, and her wholesome herhs Swarming with caterpillars?

Gard. Hold thy peace:— He that hath suffer'd this disorder'd spring Hath now himself met with the fall of leaf: The weeds that his broad-spreading leaves did shelter,

That seem'd in eating him to hold him up, Are pluck'd up root and all hy Bolingbroke, I mean the Earl of Wiltshire, Bushy, Green.

r Serv. What, are they dead?

Gard. They are; and Bolinghroke Hath seiz'd the wasteful king .- Oh! what pity is it

That he had not so trimm'd and dress'd his land

As we this garden! We at time of year Do wound the bark, the skin of our fruit-trees, Lest, heing over-proud in sap and blood, With too much richness it confound itself: Had he done so to great and growing men, They might have liv'd to hear, and he to taste Their fruits of duty. Superfluous hranches We lop away, that hearing bonghs may live: Had he done so, himself had borne the crown, Which waste of idle hours hath quite thrown down.

I Serv. What, think you, then, the king shall be depos'd?

Gard. Depress'd he is already; and depos'd 'Tis doubt he will be: letters came last night To a dear friend of the good Duke of York's, That tell hlack tidings.

Queen. O, I am press'd to death through want of speaking!-Thou, old Adam's likeness [coming forward with Ladies], set to dress this garden, How dares thy harsh-rude tongue sound these unpleasing news?

What Eve, what serpent, hath suggested thee To make a second fall of cursed man? Why dost thou say King Richard is depos'd? Dar'st thou, thou little better thing than earth, Divine his downfall? Say, where, when, and how wretch. Cam'st thou hy this ill tidings? speak, thou Gard. Pardon me, madam: little joy have I To hreathe these news; yet what I say is true. King Richard, he is in the mighty hold Of Bolingbroke: their fortunes both are weigh'd: In your lord's scale is nothing hut himself, And some few vanities that make him light; But in the halance of great Bolinghroke, Besides himself, are all the English peers And with that odds he weighs King Richard down.

Post you to London, and you'll find it so; I speak no more than every one doth know. Queen. Nimble mischance, that art so light of foot, Doth not thy emhassage belong to me, And am I last that knows it? O, thou think'st To serve me last, that I may longest keep Thy sorrow in my breast.—Come, ladies, go To meet at London, London's king in woe.-What, was I born to this, that my sad look When our sea-walled garden, the whole land, | Should grace the triumph of great Bolingbroke?

Forthwith a power of English shall we levy: Whose arms were moulded in their mothers' womb

To chase these pagans in those holy fields Over whose acres walk'd those blessed feet Which fourteen hundred years ago were nail'd For our advantage on the bitter cross. But this our purpose is a twelvemonth old, And bootless 'tis to tell you we will go: Therefore we meet not now.—Then let me hear Of you, my gentle cousin Westmoreland, What yesternight our council did decree In forwarding this dear expedience.

West. My liege, this haste was hot in ques-

And many limits of the charge sét down But yesternight: when, all athwart, there came A post from Wales loaden with heavy news; Whose worst was,—that the noble Mortimer Leading the men of Herefordshire to fight Against the irregular and wild Glendower, Was by the rude hands of that Welshman taken, A thousand of his people butchered; Upon whose dead corpse there was such mis-

Such beastly, shameless transformation, By those Welshwomen done, as may not be Without much shame re-told or spoken of.

K. Hen. It seems, then, that the tidings of this broil

Brake off our business for the Holy Land. West. This, match'd with other, did, my gracious Lord: For more uneven and unwelcome news Came from the north, and thus it did import: On Holy-rood day, the gallant Hotspur there, Young Harry Percy, and brave Archibald, That ever valiant and approved Scot, At Holmedon met,

Where they did spend a sad and bloody hour; As by discharge of their artillery, And shape of likelihood, the news was told; For he that brought them, in the very heat And pride of their contention did take horse,

Uncertain of the issue any way. K. Hen. Here is a dear and true-industrious friend, Sir Walter Blunt, new lighted from his horse,

Stain'd with the variation of each soil Betwixt that Holmedon and this seat of ours; And he hath brought us smooth and welcome news.

The Earl of Douglas is discomfited: Ten thousand bold Scots, two-and-twenty knights, Balk'd in their own blood, did Sir Walter see On Holmedon's plains: of prisoners, Hotspur took Mordake, Earl of Fife and eldest son To beated Douglas; and the Earls of Athol, Of Murray, Angus, and Menteith.

And is not this an honourable spoil? A gallant prize? ha, cousin, is it not? In faith, West.

It is a conquest for a prince to boast of. K. Hen. Yea, there thou mak'st me sad, and mak'st me sin,

In envy that my Lord Northumberland Should be the father to so blest a son, A son who is the theme of honour's tongue;

Amongst a grove, the very straightest plant: Who is sweet fortune's minion and her pride: Whilst I, by looking on the praise of him, See riot and dishonour stain the brow Of my young Harry. O that it could be provid That some night-tripping fairy had exchang'd In cradle-clothes our children where they lay, And call'd mine Percy, his Plantagenet! Then would I have his Harry, and he mine: But let him from my thoughts.-What think you, coz. Of this young Percy's pride? The prisoners. Which he in this adventure hath surpris'd. To his own use he keeps; and sends me word, I shall have none but Mordake Earl of Fife.

West. This is his uncle's teaching, this is Worcester,

Malevolent to you in all aspects; Which makes him prune himself, and bristle un The crest of youth against your dignity. [this; K. Hen. But I have sent for him to answer

And for this cause awhile we must neglect Our holy purpose to Jerusalem. Cousin, on Wednesday next our council we

Will hold at Windsor,—so inform the lords: But come yourself with speed to us again; For more is to be said and to be done Than out of anger can be uttered.

West. I will, my liege. Exeunt.

Scene II.—The same. Another Room in the Palace.

Enter PRINCE HENRY and FALSTAFF.

Fal. Now, Hal, what time of day is it, lad? P. Hen. Thou art so fat-witted, with drinking of old sack, and unbuttoning thee after supper, and sleeping upon benches after noon, that thou hast forgotten to demand that truly which thou wouldst truly know. What a devil hast thou to do with the time of the day? unless hours were cups of sack, and minutes capons, and clocks the tongues of bawds, and dials the signs of leaping houses, and the blessed sun himself a fair hot wench in flame-coloured taffeta,-I see no reason why thou shouldst be so superfluous to demand the time of the day.

Fal. Indeed, you come near me now, Hal; for we that take purses go by the moon and the seven stars, and not by Phoebus,—he, that wandering knight so fair. And, I pr'ythee, sweet wag, when thou art king,—as, God save thy grace, (majesty, I should say; for grace thou wilt have none,)-

P. Hen. What, none? Fal. No, by my troth; not so much as will serve to be prologue to an egg and butter.

P. Hen. Well, how then? come, roundly, roundly.

Fal. Marry, then, sweet wag, when thou art king, let not us that are squires of the night's body be called thieves of the day's beauty: let us be Diana's foresters, gentlemen of the shade, minions of the moon; and let men say we be men of good government, being governed, as the sea is, by our noble and chaste mistress the moon, under whose countenance we steal.

P. Hen. Thou sayest well, and it holds well too; for the fortune of us that are the moon's Car.-As surely as I live, my lord.

Boling. Sweet peace conduct his sweet soul to the hosom

Of good old Ahraham!—Lords appellants, Your differences shall all rest under gage Till we assign yon to your days of trial.

Enter YORK, attended.

York. Great Duke of Lancaster, I come to thee [soul From plume-pluck'd Richard; who with willing

Adopts thee heir, and his high sceptre yields
To the possession of thy royal hand:
Ascend his throne, descending now from him,—
And long live Henry, of that name the fourth!
Boling. In God's name, I'll ascend the regal throne.

Car. Marry, God forhidi-Worst in this royal presence may I speak, Yet hest heseeming me to speak the truth. Would God that any in this noble presence Were enough noble to he upright judge Of noble Richard! then true nobless would Learn him forhearance from so foul a wrong What subject can give sentence on his king? And who sits here that is not Richard's snhject? Thieves are not judg'd hut they are hy to hear, Although apparent guilt he seen in them; And shall the figure of God's majesty, His captain, steward, deputy elect, Anointed, crowned, planted many years, Be judg'd by subject and inferior breath, And he himself not present? O, forfend it, God, That, in a Christain climate, souls refin'd Should show so heinous, black, obsceue a deed! I speak to subjects, and a subject speaks, Stirr'd up by God, thus boldly for his king My Lord of Hereford here, whom you call king, Is a foul traitor to proud Hereford's king; And if you crown him, let me prophesy,-The blood of Euglish shall manure the ground, And future ages groan for this foul act; Peace shall go sleep with Turks and infidels, And in this seat of peace tumultuous wars Shall kin with kin and kind with kind confound; Disorder, horror, fear, and mutiny, Shall here inhabit, and this land he call'd The field of Golgotha and dead men's skulls. Or, if you raise this house against this house, It will the woefullest division prove That ever fell noon this cursed earth, Prevent, resist it, let it not be so, Lest child, child's children, cry against you woel [your pains,

North. Well have yon argu'd, sir; and, for Of capital treason we arrest yon here.—
My Lord of Westminster, be it your charge To keep him safely till his day of trial.—
May't please yon, lords, to grant the commons' suit? [mon view]

Boling. Fetch hither Richard, that in com-He may surrender; so we shall proceed Without suspicion.

York. I will be his conduct. [Exil. Boling. Lords, you that are here under our arrest,

Procure your sureties for your days of answer.—
Little are we beholden to your love,
[To CARLISLE.

And little look'd for at your helping hands.

Re-enter YORK, with KING RICHARD, and Officers bearing the crown, &c.

K. Rich. Alack, why am I sent for to a king, Before I have shook off the regal thoughts Wherewith I reign'd? I hardly yet have learn'd

To insinuate, flatter, bow, and hend my limbs: Give sorrow leave awhile to tutor me
To this submission. Yet I well remember
The favours of these men; were they not mine?
Did they not sometime cry, All hail! to me?
So Judas did to Christ: hut he, in twelve,
Found truth in all hut one; I, in twelve thonsand, none.

God save the king!—Will no man say amen? Am I hoth priest and clerk? well then, amen. God save the king! although I he not he; And yet amen, if heaven do think him me. To do what service am I sent for hither?

York. To do that office of thine own goodwill

Which tired majesty did make thee offer,— The resignation of thy state and crown To Henry Bolinghroke.

K. Rich. Give me the crown.—Here, cousin, seize the crown; On this side my hand, and on that side yours.

Now is this golden crown like a deep well That owes two buckets, filling one another; The emptier ever dancing in the air, The other down, unseen, and full of water: That hucket down and full of tears am I,

Drinking my griefs, whilst you mount up on high. [resign. Boling. I thought you had heen willing to K. Rich. My crown I am; but still my griefs are mine: You may my glories and my state depose, But not my griefs; still am I king of those. Boling. Part of your cares you give me with Boling. Part of your cares you give me with your crown.

K. Rich. Your cares set up do not pluck my cares down.

My care is, loss of care, by old care done; Your care is, gain of care, hy new care won: The cares I give, I have, though given away; They tend the crown, yet still with me they stay. [crown?

Boling. Are you contented to resign the K. Rich. Ay, no;—no, ay; for I must nothing he:

Therefore no no, for I resign to thee.

Now mark me, how I will undo myself:—
I give this heavy weight from off my head,
And this unwieldy sceptre from my hand,
The pride of kingly sway from out my heart;
With mine own tears I wash away my halm,
With mine own hands I give away my crown,
With mine own heads I give away my crown,
With mine own heath release all dnty's rites:
All pomp and majesty I do forswear;
My manors, rents, revennes I forego;
My acts, decrees, and statutes I deny:
God pardon all oaths that are broke to me!
God keep all vows unbroke that swear to thee!
Make me, that nothing have, with nothing

griev'd, And thon with all pleas'd, that hast all achiev'd! Long mayst thou live in Richard's seat to sit, thou speakest may move, and what he hears may be believed, that the true prince may, for recreation sake, prove a false thief; for the poor abuses of the time want countenance. Farewell: you shall find me in Eastcheap.

P. Hen. Farewell, thou latter spring! Farewell, All-hallown summerl Exit FALSTAFF. Poins. Now, my good sweet honey-lord, ride with us to-morrow: I have a jest to execute that I cannot manage alone. Falstaff, Bardolph, Peto, and Gadshill, shall rob those men that we have already waylaid; yourself and I will not be there; and when they have the booty, if you and I do not rob them, cut this head from my shoulders. [setting forth?

P. Hen. But how shall we part with them in Poins. Why, we will set forth before or after them, and appoint them a place of meeting, wherein it is at our pleasure to fail; and then will they adventure upon the exploit themselves: which they shall have no sooner achieved, but we'll set abont them.

P. Hen. Ay, but 'tis like that they will know us by our horses, by our habits, and by every other appointment, to be ourselves.

Poins. Tut, our horses they shall not see, I'll tie them in the wood; our visards we will change after we leave them; and, sirrah, I have cases of buckram for the nonce, to inmask our noted outward garments.

P. Hen. But I doubt they will be too hard Poins. Well, for two of them, I know them to be as true-bred cowards as ever turned back; and for the third, if he fight longer than he sees reason, I'll forswear arms. The virtue of this jest will be the incomprehensible lies that this same fat rogue will tell us when we meet at supper: how thirty, at least, he fought with; what wards, what blows, what extremities he endured; and in the reproof of this lies the jest.

P. Hen. Well, I'll go with thee: provide us all things necessary, and meet me to-morrow night in Eastcheap; there I'll sup. Farewell.

Exit Poins. Poins. Farewell, my lord. P. Hen. I know you all, and will awhile uphold

The unvok'd humour of your idleness: Yet herein will I imitate the sun, Who doth permit the base contagious clouds To smother up his beauty from the world, That, when he please again to be himself Being wanted, he may be more wonder'd at, By breaking through the foul and ugly mists Of vapours that did seem to strangle him. If all the year were playing holidays, To sport would be as tedious as to work; But when they seldom come, they, wish'd-for come,

And nothing pleaseth but rare accidents. So, when this loose behaviour I throw off, And pay the debt I never promised, By how much better than my word I am, By so much shall I falsify men's hopes; And, like bright metal on a sullen ground, My reformation, glittering o'er my fault, Shall show more goodly and attract more eyes Than that which hath no foil to set it off. I'll so offend, to make offence a skill; Redeeming time when men think least I will. Exit.

SCENE III.—The same. Another Room in the Palace.

Enter KING HENRY, NORTHUMBERLAND, Worcester, HOTSPUR, SIR WALTER BLUNT, and others.

 $K.\ Hen.$ My blood hath been too cold and temperate,

Unapt to stir at these indignities, And you have found me; for accordingly You tread upon my patience: but be sure I will from henceforth rather be myself, Mighty and to be fear'd, than my condition; Which hath been smooth as oil, soft as young down.

And therefore lost that title of respect Which the proud soul ne'er pays but to the proud. Wor. Our house, my sovereign liege, little deserves

The scourge of greatness to be used on it; And that same greatness, too, which our own hands

Have holp to make so portly.

North. My lord, K. Hen. Worcester, get thee gone; for I see danger

And disobedience in thine eye: O, sir, Your presence is too bold and peremptory And majesty might never yet endure The moody frontier of a servant brow. You have good leave to leave us: when we need Your use and counsel we shall send for you. Exit WORCESTER.

You were about to speak.

To NORTHUMBERLAND. North. Yea, my good lord. Those Prisoners in your highness' name demanded, Which Harry Percy here at Holmedon took, Were, as he says, not with such strength denied As is delivered to your majesty: Either envy, therefore, or misprision

Is guilty of this fault, and not my son. Hot. My liege, I did deny no prisoners. But I remember when the fight was done, When I was dry with rage and extreme toil, Breathless and faint, leaning upon my sword, Came there a certain lord, neat, trimly dress'd Fresh as a bride-groom; and his chin new reap'd Show'd like a stubble-land at harvest-home; He was berfum'd like a milliner; And 'twirt his finger and his thumb he held A pouncet-box, which ever and anon He gave his nose, and took't away again;-

Who therewith angry, when it next came there, Took it in snuff:—and still he smil'd and talk'd; And as the soldiers bore dead bodies by, He call'd them untaught knaves, unmannerly, To bring a slovenly unhandsome corse Betwixt the wind and his nobility. With many holiday and lady terms He question'd me; among the rest, demanded My prisoners in your majesty's behalf. I, then all smarting with my wounds being cold,

To be so pester'd with a popinjay, Ont of my grief and my impatience, Answer'd neglectingly, I know not what,— He should, or he should not;—for he made me

mad

Whatever I shall happen to devise.
I see your hrows are full of discontent,
Your hearts of sorrow, and your eyes of tears:
Come home with me to supper; I will lay
A plot shall show us all a merry day. [Excunt.

ACT V.

Scene I.—London. A Street leading to the Tower.

Enter QUEEN and Ladies.

Queen. This way the king will come; this is the way

To Julius Caesar's ill-erected tower,
To whose flint bosom my condemned lord
Is doom'd a prisoner by proud Bolinghroke:
Here let us rest, if this rehellious earth
Have any resting for her true king's queen.—
But soft, but see, or rather do not see,
My fair rose wither: yet look up, hehold,
That you in pity may dissolve to dew,
And wash him fresh again with true-love tears.

Enter KING RICHARD and Guards.

Ah, thou, the model where old Troy did stand; Thou map of bonour; thou King Richard's tomb, And not King Richard; thou most heauteous jun.

Why should hard-favour'd grief be lodg'd in thee,

When triumph is become an alebouse guest?

K. Rich. Join not with grief, fair woman, do not so.

To make my end too sudden: learn, good soul, To think our former state a happy dream; From which awak'd, the truth of what we are Shows us but this: I am sworn brother, sweet, To grim Necessity; and he and I [France, Will keep a league till death. Hie thee to And cloister thee in some religious house: Our holy lives must win a new world's crown, Which our profane hours here have stricken down. [and mind Queen. What, is my Richard both in shape Transform'd and weaken'd? Hath Bolinghroke Depos'd thine intellect? Hath he heen in thy heart?

The lion, dying, thrusteth forth his paw,
And wounds the earth, if nothing else, with rage
To he o'erpower'd; and wilt thou, pupil-like,
Take thy correction mildly, kiss the rod,
And fawn on rage with base humility,
Which art a lion and a king of heasts?

K. Rich. A king of beasts, indeed; if aught but heasts,

I had been still a happy king of men. Good sometime queen, prepare thee hence for France: Think I am dead; and that even here thou tak'st,

As from my death-bed, my last living leave. In winter's tedious nights sit by the fire With good old folks, and let them tell thee tales Of woeful ages long ago hetid; And ere thou bid good-night, to quit their grief Tell thou the lamentable tale of me, And send the hearers weeping to their beds: For why, the senseless brands will sympathize Tbe heavy accent of thy moving tongue,

And in compassion weep the fire out; And some will mourn in ashes, some coal-black, For the deposing of a rightful king.

Enter NORTHUMBERLAND attended.

North. My lord, the mind of Bolinghroke is chang'd;

You must to Pomfret, not unto the Tower.— And, madam, there is order ta'en for you; With all swift speed you must away to France. K. Rich. Northumberland, thou ladder wherewithal

The mounting Bolinghroke ascends my throne,
The time shall not be many hours of age
More than it is, ere foul sin, gathering head,
Shall break into corruption: thou shalt think,
Though he divide the realm, and give thee half,
It is too little, helping him to all; the way
And he shall think that thou, which know'st
To plant unrightful kings, wilt know again,
Being ne'er so little urg'd, another way
To pluck him headlong from the usurped

throne.

The love of wicked friends converts to fear;
That fear to hate; and hate turns one or hoth
To worthy danger and deserved death.

North. My guilt be on my head, and there an end.

Take leave, and part; for you must part forthK. Rich. Doubly divorc'dl—Bad men, ye violate

A twofold marriage,—'twirt my crown and me,
And then betwirt me and my married wife.—
Let me unkiss the oath 'twirt thee and me;
And yet not so, for with a kiss 'twas made.—
Part us, Northumberland; I towards the north,
Where shivering cold and sickness pines the clime; [pomp, My wife to France, from whence, set forth in She came adorned hither like sweet May, Sent back like Hellowmas or sbort'st of day.

She came adorned hither like sweet May, Sent back like Hallowmas or sbort'st of day.

Queen. And must we be divided? must we part?

K. Rich. Ay, band from hand, my love, and heart from heart.

Queen. Banish us both, and send the king North. That were some love, but little policy.

Queen. Then whither he goes thither let me go.

K. Rich. So two, together weeping, make one Weep thou for me in France, I forthee here; Better far off than near, he ne'er the near. Gor count thy way with sighs; I, mine with groans.

Queen. So longest way shall bave the longest K. Rich. Twice for one step I'll groan, the way heing short,

And piece the way out with a heavy heart. Come, come, in wooing sorrow let's be brief, Since, wedding it, there is such length in grief. One kiss shall stop our mouths, and dumbly part;

Thus give I mine, and thus take I thy heart.
[They kissOueen. Give me mine own again; 'twere no good part

To take on me to keep and kill thy heart.
[They kiss again.

So, now I have mine own again, be gone, That I may strive to kill it with a groan. Did 'gage them both in an unjust behalf,—As both of you, God pardon it! have done,—To put down Richard, that sweet lovely rose, And plant this thorn, this canker, Bolingbroke? And shall it, in more shame, be further spoken That you are fool'd, discarded, and shook off By him for whom these shames ye underwent? No; yet time serves, wherein you may redeem Your banish'd honours, and restore yourselves Into the good thoughts of the world again,—Revenge the jeering and disdain'd contempt Of this proud king, who studies day and night To answer all the debt he owes to you Even with the bloody payment of your deaths: Therefore, I say,—

Wor. Peace, cousin; say no more:
And now I will unclasp a secret book,
And to your quick-conceiving discontents
I'll read you matter deep and dangerous;
As full of peril and adventurous spirit
As to o'er-walk a current roaring loud
On the unsteadfast footing of a spear.
Hot. If he fall in, good-night!—or sink or swim:—

Send danger from the east unto the west,
So honour cross it from the north to south,
And let them grapple.—O, the blood more stirs
To rouse a lion than to start a hare!

North. Imagination of some great exploit Drives him beyond the bounds of patience. Hot. By heaven, methinks it were an easy leap

To pluck bright honour from the pale-fac'd moon;

Or dive into the bottom of the deep, Where fathom-line could never touch the ground, And pluck up drowned honour by the locks; So he that doth redeem her thence might wear Without corrival all her dignities: But out upon this half-fac'd fellowshipl

Wor. He apprehends a world of figures here, But not the form of what he should attend.—Good cousin, give me audience for awhile.

Hot. I cry you mercy.

Wor. Those same noble Scots

That are your prisoners,—

Hot:

Yill keep them all;

By heaven, he shall not have a Scot of them;

No, if a Scot would save his soul, he shall not:

I'll keep them, by this hand.

Wor. You start away, And lend no ear unto my purposes.—

Those prisoners you shall keep.

Hot. Nay, I will; that's flat:
He said he would not ransom Mortimer;
Forbad my tongue to speak of Mortimer;
But I will find him when he lies asleep,
And in his ear I'll holla—Mortimer!
Nay,

I'll have a starling shall be taught to speak Nothing but Mortimer, and give it him, To keep his anger still in motion.

Wor. Hear you, cousin; a word.

Hot. All studies here I solemnly defy, Save how to gall and pinch this Bolingbroke: And that same sword-and-buckler Prince of Wales,—

But that I think his father loves him not,
And would be glad he met with some mischance,
I'd have him poison'd with a pot of ale.

Wor. Farewell, kinsman: I will talk to you When you are better temper'd to attend.

North. Why, what a wasp-tongue and impatient fool

Art thou to break into this woman's mood,
Tying thine ear to no tongue but thine own!

Hol. Why, look you, I am whipp'd and scourg'd with rods,
Nettled, and stung with pismires, when I hear

Of this vile politician, Bolingbroke.

In Richard's time,—what do ye call the place?—
A plague upon 't—it is in Glostershire;—
Twas where the madcap duke his uncle kept,—
His uncle York:—where I first bow'd my knee

Unto this king of smiles, this Bolingbroke,

When you and he came back from Ravenspurg.

North. At Berkeley Castle.

Hot. You say 'rue:—

Why, what a candy deal of courtesy
This fawning greyhound then did proffer me!
Look, when his infant fortune came to age,
And, gentle Harry Percy, and, kind cousin,
O, the devil take such cozeners!—God forgive

Good uncle, tell your tale; for I have done.

Wor. Nay, if you have not, to't again;

We'll stay your leisure.

Hot. I have done, i' faith.

Wor. Then once more to your Scottish prisoners.

Deliver them up without their ransom straight, And make the Douglas' son your only mean For powers in Scotland; which, for divers reasons

Which I shall send you written, be assur'd, Will easily be granted.—You, my lord,

[To NORTHUMBERLAND. Your son in Scotland being thus employ'd, Shall secretly into the bosom creep Of that same noble prelate, well belov'd, The archbishop.

Hot. Of York, is't not?
Wor. True; who bears hard
His brother's death at Bristol, the Lord Scroop.
I speak not this in estimation,
As what I think might be, but what I know
Is ruminated, plotted, and set down;
And only stays but to behold the face
Of that occasion that shall bring it on.

Hot. I smell it: upon my life, it will do well.
North. Before the game's a-foot, thou still lett'st slip. [plot:--

Hot. Why, it cannot choose but be a noble And then the power of Scotland and of York.—
To join with Mortimer, ha?

Wor. And so they shall.

Hot. In faith, it is exceedingly well aim'd.

Wor. And 'tis no little reason bids us speed,
To save our heads by raising of a head;
For, bear ourselves as even as we can,
The king will always think him in our debt,
And think we think ourselves unsatisfied,
'Till he hath found a time to pay us home:
And see already how he doth begin

To make us strangers to his looks of love.

Hol. He does, he does: we'll be reveng'd on him.

Wor. Cousin, farewell:—no further go in this Than I by letters shall direct your course. When time is ripe,—which will be suddenly,— York. Thou fond mad woman,
Wilt thou conceal this dark conspiracy?
A dozen of them here have ta'en the sacrament,
And interchangeably set down their hands
To kill the king at Oxford.

Duch. He shall he none; We'll keep him here: then what is that to him? York. Away, fond woman! were he twenty times my son

I would appeach him.

Duch. Hadst thou groan'd for him As I have done, thou wouldst he more pitiful. But now I know thy mind; thou dost suspect That I have been disloyal to thy hed, And that he is a hastard, not thy son: Sweet York, sweet hushand, be not of that mind:

He is as like thee as a man may he.

Not like to me, nor any of my kin, And yet I love him.

York. Make way, unruly woman!

Duch. After, Aumeriel mount thee upon his horse;

Spur post, and get hefore him to the king,
And beg thy pardon ere he do accuse thee.
I'll not he long hehind; though I he old,
I douht not but to ride as fast as York;
And never will I rise up from the ground
Till Bolingbroke have pardon'd thee. Away, be gone!

[Exeunt.

Scene III.—WINDSOR. A Room in the Castle.

Enter Bolingbroke as King, Percy, and other Lords.

Boling. Can no man tell of my unthrifty son? 'Tis full three months since I did see him last:—

If any plague hang over us, 'tis he.

I would to God, my lords, he might be found:
Inquire at London, 'mongst the taverns there,
For there, they say, he daily doth frequent,
With unrestrained loose companions,—

With unrestrained loose companions,—
Even such, they say, as stand in narrow lanes,
And heat our watch, and rob our passengers;
While he, young, wanton, and effeminate boy,
Takes on the point of honour to support
So dissolute a crew. [prince,

Percy. Mylord, some two days since I saw the And told him of these triumphs held at Oxford. Boling. And what said the gallant?

Boling. And what said the gallant?

Percy. His answer was,—he would unto the stews.

[glove.]

stews, [glove, And from the common'st creature pluck a And wear it as a favour; and with that He would unhorse the Justiest challenger.

Boling. As dissolute as desperate; yet through both

I see some sparkles of a better hope, Which elder days may happily bring forth.— But who comes here?

Enter AUMERLE hastily.

Aum. Where is the king?

Boling. What means
Our cousin, that he stares and looks so wildly?

Aum. God save your grace! I do beseech
your majesty,

To have some conference with your grace alone.

Boling. Withdraw yourselves, and leave us here alone.

[Exeunt PERCY and Lords.
What is the matter with our cousin now?

dum. For ever way my knees grow to the

Aum. For ever may my knees grow to the earth, [Kneels.]
My tongue cleave to my roof within my mouth, Unless a pardon ere I rise or speak.

Boling. Intended or committed was this fault? If but the first, how heinous e'er it he,

To win thy after-love I pardon thee.

Aum. Then give me leave that I may turn the key,

That no man enter till my tale be done.

Boling. Have thy desire.

[Aumerle locks the door.

York. [Within.] My liege, heware; look to thyself;

Thou hast a traitor in thy presence there.

Boling. Villain, I'll make thee safe.

Aum. Stay thy revengeful hand;
Thou hast no cause to fear. [hardy king:

York. [Within.] Open the door, secure, fool, Shall I, for love, speak treason to thy face? Open the door, or I will break it open.

[BOLING. opens the door and locks it again.

Enter YORK.

Boling. What is the matter, uncle? speak; Recover breath; tell us how near is danger, That we may arm us to encounter it.

York. Peruse this writing here, and thou shalt know

The treason that my haste forbids me show.

Aum. Remember, as thou read'st, thy promise pass'd:

I do repent me; read not my name there; My heart is not confederate with my hand. York. It was, villain, ere thy hand did set it down.—

I tore it from the traitor's hosom, king;
Fear, and not love, hegets his penitence:
Forget to pity him, lest thy pity prove.
A serpent that will sting thee to the heart.
Boling. O heinous, strong, and hold conspiracy!—

O loyal father of a treacherous son!
Thou sheer, immaculate, and silver fountain,
From whence this stream through muddy passages

Hath held his current and defil'd himself! Thy overflow of good converts to had; And thy ahundant goodness shall excuse This deadly hlot in thy digressing son.

York. So shall my virtue he his vice's hawd; And he shall spend mine honour with his shame, As thriftless sons their scraping fathers' gold. Mine honour lives when his dishonour dies, Or my sham'd life in his dishonour lies: Thou kill'st me in his life; giving him breath, The traitor lives, the true man's put to death. Duch. [Within.] What ho, my liege! for God's sake, let me in.

Boling. What shrill-voic'd suppliant makes this eager cry? ['tis I. Duch. A woman, and thine aunt, great king; Speak with me, pity me, open the door: A beggar begs that never begg'd before.

Enter FALSTAFF.

Fal. Poins! Poins, and be hanged! Poins! P. Hen. [Coming forward.] Peace, ye fatkidneyed rascall what a hrawling dost thou kecpi

Fal. Where's Poins, Hal?

P. Hen. He is walked up to the top of the hill: I'll go seek him.

[Pretends to seek Poins. Fal. I am accursed to rob in that thief's company: the rascal hath removed my horse. and tied him I know not where. If I travel but four foot by the squire further a-foot, I shall break my wind. Well, I doubt not but to die a fair death for all this, if I 'scape hanging for killing that rogue. I have forsworn his company hourly any time this two-and-twenty year, and yet I am hewitched with the rogue's company. If the rascal have not given me medicines to make me love him, I'll be hanged; it could not be else; I have drunk medicines. -Poins!-Hall-a plague upon you both!-Bardolphi-Petol-I'll starve, ere I'll rob a foot further. An 'twere not as good a deed as drink, to turn true man, and leave these rogues. I am the veriest variet that ever chewed with a tooth. Eight yards of uneven ground is threescore and ten miles a-foot with me; and the stony-hearted villains know it well enough: a plague upon't, when thieves cannot be true to one another! [They whistle.] Whew!—a plague upon you all! Give me my horse, you rogues; give me my horse, and be hanged.

P. Hen. [Coming forward.] Peace, ye fatguts! lie down; lay thine ear close to the ground, and list if thou canst hear the tread of travellers.

Fal. Have you any levers to lift me up again, being down? 'Shlood, I'll not bear mine own flesh so far a-foot again for all the coin in thy father's exchequer. What a plague mean ye to colt me thus?

P. Hen. Thou liest; thou art not colted, thou art uncolted.

Fal. I pr'ythee, good Prince Hal, help me to my horse, good king's son. [ostler? P. Hen. Out, you rogue! shall I be your Fal. Go, hang thyself in thine own heirapparent garters! If I be ta'en, I'll peach for this. An I have no ballads made on you all, and sung to filthy tunes, let a cup of sack be my poison:—when a jest is so forward, and afoot too!-I hate it.

Enfer GADSHILL.

Gads. Stand.

Fal. So I do, against my will.

Poins. O, 'tis our setter: I know his voice. [Coming forward with BARD, and PETO.

Bard. What news?

Gads. Case ye, case ye; on with your visards: there's money of the king's coming down the hill; 'tis going to the king's exchequer.

Fal. You lie, you rogue; 'tis going to the king's tavern.

Gads. There's enough to make us all.

Fal. To be hanged.

P. Hen. Sirs, you four shall front them in the narrow lane; Ned Poins and I will walk lower: if they 'scape from your encounter, then they light on us.

Peto. How many be there of them? Gads. Some eight or ten.

Fal. Zounds, will they not rob us?

P. Hen. What, a coward, Sir John Paunch? Fal. Indeed, I am not John of Gaunt, your grandfather; but yet no coward, Hal.

P. Hen. Well, we leave that to the proof. Poins. Sirrah, Jack, thy horse stands behind the hedge: when thou needest him, there thou shalt find him. Farewell, and stand fast.

Fal. Now cannot I strike him, if I should be hanged.

P. Hen. [Aside to Poins.] Ned, where are our disguises?

Poins. Here, hard by: stand close.

Exeunt. P. HENRY and PORIS. Fal. Now, my masters, happy man be his dole, say I: every man to his business.

Enter Travellers.

I Trav. Come, neighbour: the boy shall lead our horses down the hill; we'll walk a-feet awhile, and ease our legs.

Fal., Gads., &c. Standl Trav. Jesu bless us!

Fal. Strike; down with them; cut the villain's throats:-ah, whoreson caterpillars! hacon-fed knaves! they hate us youth:-down with them; fleece them. for everi

Trav. O, we are undone, both we and ours Fal. Hang ye, gorhellied knaves, are ye undone? No, ye fat chuffs; I would your store were here! On, bacons on! What, ye knaves! young men must live. You are grand-jurors, are ye? we'll jure ye, i' faith.

[Exeunt FAL., &c., driving the Travellers out.

Re-enter PRINCE HENRY and Poins.

P. Hen. The thieves have bound the true men. Now could thou and I rob the thieves, and go merrily to London, it would be argument for a week, laughter for a month, and a good jest for ever.

Poins. Stand close; I hear them coming.

Re-enter Falstaff, Gadshill, Bardolph and PETO.

Fal. Come, my masters, let us share, and then to horse before day. An the Prince and Poins be not two arrant cowards, there's no equity stirring: there's no more valour in that Poins than in a wild duck. P. Hen. Your money!

Rushing out upon them.

Poins. Villainsl [GADS., BARD., and PETO run away; and FAL. also, after a blow or two, leaving the booty.

P. Hen. Got with much ease. Now merrily to horse:

The thieves are scatter'd, and possess'd with So strongly that they dare not meet each other; Each takes his fellow for an officer.

Away, good Ned. Falstaff sweats to death, And lards the lean earth as he walks along: Were't not for laughing, I should pity him.

Exeuni. Poins. How the rogue roar'd!

Nor shall not be the last; like silly beggars, Who, sitting in the stocks, refuge their shame, That many have, and others must sit there: And in this thought they find a kind of ease. Bearing their own misfortune on the back Of such as have before endur'd the like. Thus play I, in one person, many people, And none contented: sometimes am I king; Then treason makes me wish myself a beggar, And so I am: then crushing penury Persuades me I was better when a king; Then am I king'd again: and by and by Think that I am unking'd by Bolingbroke, And straight am nothing:-but whate'er I am, Nor I, nor any man that but man is, With nothing shall be pleas'd till he be eas'd With being nothing.—Music do I hear?

Music. Ha, hal keep time:—how sour sweet music is When time is broke and no proportion kept! So is it in the music of men's lives. And here have I the daintiness of ear To check time broke in a disorder'd string; But, for the concord of my state and time, Had not an ear to hear my true time broke. I wasted time, and now doth time waste me; For now hath time made me his numbering clock: [jar

My thoughts are minntes; and, with sighs, they Their watches on unto mine eyes, the outward watch.

Whereto my finger, like a dial's point, Is pointing still, in cleansing them from tears. Now, sir, the sound that tells what hour it is, Are clamorous groans that strike upon my heart, Which is the bell: so sighs, and tears, and groans, Show minutes, times, and hours:-but my time Runs posting on in Bolingbroke's proud joy, While I stand fooling here, his Jack o' the clock. This music mads me; let it sound no more For though it have holp madmen to their wits, In me it seems it will make wise men mad. Yet blessing on his heart that gives it me! For 'tis a sign of love; and love to Richard Is a strange brooch in this all-hating world.

Enter Groom.

Groom. Hail, royal prince! K. Rich. Thanks, noble peer; The cheapest of us is ten groats too dear. What art thon? and how com'st thou hither, Where no man ever comes, but that sad dog That brings me food to make misfortune live? Groom. I was a poor groom of thy stable, king, When thon wert king; who, travelling towards York,

With much ado at length have gotten leave To look upon my sometimes royal master's face.

O, how it yearn'd my heart, when I beheld, In London streets, that coronation-day, When Bolingbroke rode on roan Barbary, That horse that thon so often hast bestrid, That horse that I so carefully have dress'd!

K. Rich. Rode he on Barbary? Tell m gentle friend,

Tell me,

How went he under him? [ground. Groom. So proudly as if he disdain'd the K. Rich. So proud that Bolingbroke was on his back!

That jade hath eat bread from my royal hand; This hand hath made him proud with clapping him.

Would he not stumble? would he not fall down,-

Since pride must have a fall,—and break the neck

Of that proud man that did usurp his back? Forgiveness, horsel why do I rail on thee. Since thou, created to be aw'd by man, Wast born to bear? I was not made a horse; And yet I bear a burden like an ass. Spur-gall'd and tir'd by jauncing Bolingbroke.

Enter Keeper with a dish.

Keep. Fellow, give place; here is no longer To the Groom. Stay K. Rich. If thou love me, 'tis time thou wert away. Groom. What my tongue dares not, that my heart shall say. Exit.

Keep. My lord, wilt please you to fall to?

K. Rich. Taste of it first as then art went to [ton,

Keep. My lord, I dare not. Sir Pierce of Ex-Who lately came from the king, commands the contrary.

K. Rich. The devil take Henry of Lancaster and thee!

Patience is stale, and I am weary of it. Beats the Keeper.

Reep. Help. help, help!

Enter Exton and Servants, armed.

K. Rich. How now! what means death in this rude assault? Istrument. Villain, thine own hand yields thy death's in-[Snatching a weapon, and killing one.

Go thon, and fill another room in hell. [He kills another, then EXTON strikes him down.

That hand shall burn in never-quenching fire That staggers thus my person.-Exton, thy fierce hand

Hath with the king's blood stain'd the king's own land.

Mount, mount, my soull thy seat is up on high; Whilst my gross flesh sinks downward, here to Dies. die.

Exton. As full of valour as of royal blood: Both have I spilt;-O, would the deed were good!

For now the devil, that told me I did well, Says that this deed is chronicled in hell. This dead king to the living king I'll bear: Take hence the rest, and give them burial here. Exeunt.

SCENE VI.-WINDSOR. A Room in the Castle.

Flourish. Enter BOLINGBROKE as King, YORK, LORDS, and Attendants.

Boling. Kind uncle York, the latest news we hear Is that the rebels have consum'd with fire

To-day will I set forth, to-morrow you.-Will this content you, Kate? Lady. It must, of force. Exeunt.

SCENE IV .- EASTCHEAP. A Room in the Boar's Head Tavern.

Enter PRINCE HENRY.

P. Hen. Ned, pr'ythee, come ont of that fat room, and lend me thy hand to laugh a little.

Enter Poins.

Poins. Where hast been, Hal? P. Hen. With three or four loggerheads amongst three or fourscore hogsheads. I have sounded the very base string of humility. Sirrah, I am sworn brother to a leash of drawers; and can call them all by their Christian names, as-Tom, Dick, and Francis. They take it already upon their salvation, that though I be but Prince of Wales, yet I am the king of courtesy; and tell me fiatly I am no proud Jack, like Falstaff, but a Corinthian, a lad of mettle, a good boy, -by the Lord, so they call me,—and when I am king of England I shall command all the good lads in Eastcheap. They call drinking deep, dying scarlet; and when you breathe in your watering, they cry hem! and bid you play it off. To conclude, I am so good a proficient in one quarter of an hour, that I can drink with any tinker in his own language during my life. I tell thee, Ned, thou hast lost much honour, that thou wert not with me in this action. But, sweet Ned,-to sweeten which name of Ned, I give thee this pennyworth of sugar, clapped even now into my band by an under-skinker; one that never spake other English in his life than Eight shillings and sixpence, and You are welcome; with this shrill addition, Anon, anon, sir! Score a pint of bastand in the Half-moon, or so. But, Ned, to drive away the time till Falstaff come, I pr'ythee, do thou stand in some by-room, while I question my puny drawer to what end he gave me the sugar; and do thou never leave calling Francis, that his tale to me may be nothing but anon. Step aside, and I'll show thee a pre-Exit Poins. cedent.

Poins. [Within.] Francis! P. Hen. Thou art perfect. Poins. [Within.] Francis!

Enter FRANCIS.

Fran. Anon, anon, sir.—Look down into the issue? Pomegranate, Ralph.

P. Hen. Come hither, Francis.

Fran. My lord?

P. Hen. How long hast thou to serve, Francis? Fran. Forsooth, five years, and as much as Poins. [Within.] Francis! Fran. Anon, anon, sir.

P. Hen. Five years! by'r lady, a long lease for the clinking of pewter. But, Francis, darest thou be so valiant as to play the coward with thy indenture, and show it a fair pair of heels and run from it?

Fron. O Lord, sir, I'll be sworn upon all the books in England, I could find in my heart,

Poins. [Within.] Francis1

Fran. Anon, anon, sir. P. Hen. How old art thou, Francis? Fran. Let me see,-about Michaelmas nert I shall be, Poins. [Within.] Francis! Fron. Anon, sir. Pray you, stay a little, my lord.

P. Hen. Nay, but hark you, Francis: for the sugar thou gavest me,-'twas a pennyworth. was't not?

Fran. O Lord, sir, I would it had been two! P. Hen. I will give thee for it a thousand pound: ask me when thou wilt, and thou shalt have it.

Poins. [Within.] Francis!

Fran. Anon, anon.

P. Hen. Anon, Francis? No, Francis; but to-morrow, Francis; or, Francis, on Thursday: or, indeed, Francis, when thou wilt. But Francis,

Fran. My lord?

P. Hen. Wilt thou rob this leathern-jerkin, crystal-button, nott-pated, agate-ring, pukestocking, caddis-garter, smooth-tongue, Spanish-pouch.

Fran. O Lord, sir, who do you mean? P. Hen. Why, then, your brown bastard is your only drink; for, look you, Francis, your white canvas doublet will sully: in Barbary, sir.

it cannot come to so much.
Fran. What, sir?
Poins. [Within.] Francis!

P. Hen. Away, you rogue! dost thou not hear them call?

[Here they both call him: FRANCIS stands amazed, not knowing which way to co.

Enter Vintner.

Vint. What, standest thou still, and hearest such a calling? Look to the guests within. [Exit FRAN.] My lord, old Sir John, with half-a-dozen more, are at the door: shall I let them in?

P. Hen. Let them alone awhile, and then open the door. [Exit Vintner.] Poins!

Re-enter Poins.

Poins. Anon, anon, sir.

P. Hen. Sirrah, Falstaff and the rest of the thieves are at the door: shall we be merry?

Poins. As merry as crickets, my lad. hark he; what cunning match have you made with this jest of the drawer? come, what's the

P. Hen. I am now of all humours that have showed themselves humours since the old days of goodman Adam to the pupil-age of this present twelve o'clock at midnight.-What's o'clock, Francis?

Fran. [Within.] Anon, anon, sir. P. Hen. That ever this fellow should have fewer words than a parrot, and yet the son of a woman! His industry is upstairs and downstairs; his oloquence the parcel of a reckoning. I am not yet of Percy's mind, the Hotspur of the north; he that kills me some six or seven dozen Scots at a breakfast, washes his hands, and says to his wife, Fie upon this quiet life! I want work. O my sweet Harry, says she, how many hast thou killed to-day? Give my

ACT I.

Enter KING HENRY, WESTMORELAND, SIR; WALTER BLUNT, and others.

K. Hen. So shaken as 've are, so wan with ! care, Find we a time for frighted peace to pant, And breathe short-winded accents of new broils To be commenc'd in strands afar remote. No more the thirsty entrance of this soil blood;

Nor bruise her flowerets with the armed hoofs Of hostile pares: those opposed eyes Scene L.-London. A Room in the Pelece. Which, like the meteors of a troubled heaven, All of one nature, of one substance bred, Did lately meet in the intestine shock And furious close of civil butchery, Shall now, in mutual well-beseeming ranks, . March all one way, and be no more oppos'd Against acquaintance, kindred, and allies: The edge of war, like an ill-sheathed knife, No more shall cut his master. friends.

Shall daub her lips with her own children's As far as the segulchre of Christ,-Whose soldier now, under whose blessed cross No more shall trenching war channel her fields, i We are impressed and engag'd to Saht,-

P. Hen. Why, how couldst thou know these men in Kendal green, when it was so dark thou couldst not see thy hand? come, tell us your reason: what sayest thou to this? reason.

Poins. Come, your reason, Jack,—your Fal. What, upon compulsion? No; were I at the strappado, or all the racks in the world, I would not tell you on compulsion. Give a reason on compulsion! if reasons were as plenty as blackberries I would give no man a reason on compulsion, I.

P. Hen. I'll be no longer guilty of this sin; this sanguine coward, this bed-presser, this horse back-breaker, this huge hill of flesh,-

Fal. Away, you starveling, you elf-skin, you dried neat's tongue, bull's pizzle, you stock-fish, -O for breath to utter what is like thee!-you tailor's yard, you sheath, you bow-case, you vile standing-tuck,-

P. Hen. Well, breathe awhile, and then to it again: and when thou hast tired thyself in base comparisons, hear me speak but this.

Poins. Mark, Jack.

P. Hen. We two saw you four set on four; you bound them, and were masters of their wealth.—Mark now, how a plain tale shall put you down .- Then did we two set on you four; and, with a word, out-faced you from your prize, and have it: yea, and can show it you here in the house:-and, Falstaff, you carried your guts away as nimbly, with as quick dexterity, and roared for mercy, and still ran and roared, as ever I heard bull-calf. What a slave art thou, to hack thy sword as thou hast done, and then say it was in fight! What trick, what device, what starting-hole, canst thou now find out to hide thee from this open and apparent

Poins. Come, let's hear, Jack; what trick hast thou now?

Fal. By the Lord, I knew ye as well as he that made ye. Why, hear ye, my masters: was it for me to kill the heir-apparent? Should I turn upon the true prince? Why, thou knowest I am as valiant as Hercules: but beware instinct; the lion will not touch the true prince. Instinct is a great matter; I was a coward on in-I shall think the better of myself and thee during my life; I for a valiant lion, and thou for a true prince. But, by the Lords, lads, I am glad you have the money .- Hostess, clap to the doors to Hostess within! -- watch tonight, pray to-morrow.-Gallants, lads, boys, hearts of gold, all the titles of good fellowship come to you! What, shall we be merry! Shall we have a play extempore?

P. Hen. Content;—and the argument shall be thy running away.

Fal. Ah, no more of that, Hal, an thou lovest me!

Enter Hostess.

Host. O Jesu, my lord the prince,— P. Hen. How now, my lady the hostess!—

What sayest thou to me?

Host. Marry, my lord, there is a nobleman of the court at door would speak with you: he says he comes from your father.

P. Hen. Give him as much as will make him a royal man, and send him back again to my mother.

Fal. What manner of man is he? Host. An old man.

Fal. What doth gravity out of his bed at midnight?-Shall I give him his answer?

P. Hen. Pr'ythee, do, Jack.

Fal. Faith, and I'll send him packing.

P. Hen. Now, sirs:-by'r lady, you fought fair; -- so did you, Peto; -- so did you, Bardolph: you are lions too, you ran away upon instinct. you will not touch the true prince; no,-fie!

Bard. Faith, I ran when I saw others run. P. Hen. Tell me now in earnest, how came Falstafi's sword so hacked?

Peto. Why, he hacked it with his dagger; and said he would swear truth out of England, but he would make you believe it was done in fight; and persuaded us to do the like.

Bord. Yea, and to tickle our noses with speargrass to make them bleed; and then to beslubber our garments with it, and swear it was the blood of true men. I did that I did not this seven year before,-I blushed to hear his monstrous devices.

P. Hen. O villain, thou stolest a cup of sack eighteen years ago, and wert taken with the manner, and ever since thou hast blushed extempore. Thou hadst fire and sword on thy side, and yet thou rannest away: what instinct hadst thou for it?

Bord. My lord, do you see these meteors?

do you behold these exhalations?

P. Hen. 1 do.

Bord. What think you they portend? P. Hen. Hot livers and cold purses. Bard. Choler, my lord, if rightly taken. P. Hen. No, if rightly taken, halter.—Here comes lean Jack, here comes bare-bone.

Re-enter FALSTAFF.

How now, my sweet creature of bombast! How long is't ago, Jack, since thou sawest thine own knee?

Fol. My own kneel when I was about thy years, Hal. I was not an eagle's talon in the waist; I could have crept into any alderman's thumb-ring: a plague of sighing and griefl it blows a man up like a bladder.—There's villanous news abroad: here was Sir John Bracy from your father; you must to the court in the morning. That same mad fellow of the north, Percy; and he of Wales, that gave Amaimon the bastinado, and made Lucifer cuckold, and swore the devil his true liegeman upon the cross of a Welsh hook,—what, a plague, call you him?-

Poins. O, Glendower. Fal. Owen, Owen, - the same; and his sonin-law, Mortimer; and old Northumberland; and that sprightly Scot of Scots, Douglas, that runs o' horseback up a hill perpendicular,

P. Hen. He that rides at high speed, and with his pistol kills a sparrow flying?

Fal. You have hit it. P. Hen. So did he never the sparrow. Fal. Well, that rascal hath good mettle in him; he will not run;-

P. Hen. Why, what a rascal art thon, then, to praise him so for running.

men doth ebb and flow like the sea, being governed, as the sea is, by the moon. As, for proof, now: a purse of gold most resolutely snatched on Monday night, and most dissolutely spent on Tnesday morning; got with swearing lay by, and spent with crying bring in; now in as low an ebb as the foot of the ladder, and by and by in as high a flow as the ridge of the gallows

Fal. By the Lord, thon sayest true, lad. And is not my hostess of the tavern a most sweet weach?

P. Hen. As the honey of Hybla, my old lad And is not a buff jerkin a most of the castle. sweet robe of durance?

Fal. How now, how now, mad wag! what, in thy quips and thy quiddities? what a plague have I to do with a buff jerkin?

P. Hen. Why, what a pox have I to do with my hostess of the tavern?

Fal. Well, thou hast called her to a reckoning many a time and oft. P. Hen. Did I ever call for thee to pay thy part?

Fal. No; I'll give thee thy due, thou hast paid all there.

P. Hen. Yea, and elsewhere, so far as my coin would stretch; and where it would not, I have used my credit.

Fal. Yes, and so used it that, were it not here apparent that thou art heir-apparent,-but I prythee, sweet wag, shall there be gallows standing in England when thou art king? and resolution thus fobbed as it is with the rusty curb of old father antic the law? Dost thou not, when thou art king, hang a thief.

P. Hen. No; thou shalt.
Fol. Shall I? O rare! By the Lord, I'll be a brave judge.

P. Hen. Thou judgest false already: I mean, thon shalt have the hanging of the thieves, and so become a rare hangman.

Fal. Well, Hal, well; and in some sort it jumps with my honour as well as waiting in the court, I can tell you.

P. Hen. For obtaining of suits?
Fal. Yea, for obtaining of suits, whereof the 'Sblood, I hangman hath no lean wardrobe. am as melancholy as a gib-cat or a lagged bear.

P. Hen. Or an old lion, or a lover's lute. Fal. Yea, or the drone of a Lincolnshire bagpipe. P. Hen. What sayest thou to a hare, or the melancholy of Moor-ditch?

Fal. Thou hast the most unsavoury similes, and art, indeed, the most comparative, rascallest,—sweet young prince,—bnt, Hal, pr'ythee, trouble me no more with vanity. would to God thou and I knew where a commodity of good names were to be bought. old lord of the council rated me the other day in the street about you, sir,—but I marked him not; and yet he talked very wisely,—but I regarded him not; and yet he talked wisely, and in the street too.

P. Hen. Thou didst well; for wisdom cries out in the streets, and no man regards it.

Fal. O, thou hast damnable iteration, and art, indeed, able to corrupt a saint. Thou hast done much harm upon me, Hal, -God forgive sion, and him the ears of profiting, that what thee for it! Before I knew thee, Hal, I knew nothing; and now am I, if a man should speak truly, little better than one of the wicked. I must give over this life, and I will give it over; by the Lord, an I do not, I am a villain: I'll be damned for never a king's son in Christendom.

P. Hen. Where shall we take a purse tomorrow, Jack?

Fal. Where thou wilt, lad; I'll make one;

an I do not, call me villain, and baffle me P. Hen. I see a good amendment of life in thee,—from praying to purse-taking.

Enter Poins at a distance.

Fal. Why, Hal, 'tis my vocation, Hal; 'tis no sin for a man to labour in his vocation .- Poins! -Now shall we know if Gadshill have set a match.—O, if men were to be saved by ment, what hole in hell were hot enough for him? This is the most emnipotent villain that ever cried stand to a true man.

P. Hen. Good-morrow, Ned.

Poins. Good-morrow. Poins. Good-morrow, sweet Hal.—What says Monsieur Remorse? What says Sir John Hal.-What Sack-and-sugar? Jack, how agrees the devil and thee about thy soul, that thou soldest him on Good-Friday last for a cup of Madeira and a cold capon's leg?

P. Hen. Sir John stands to his word,-the devil shall have his bargain for he was never yet a breaker of proverbs,-he will give the devil his due.

Poins. Then art thon damned for keeping thy word with the devil.

P. Hen. Else he had been damned for cozening the devil. Points. But, my lads, my lads, to-morrow morning, by four o'clock, early at Gadshill there are pilgrims going to Canterbury with rich offerings, and traders riding to London with fat purses: I have visards for you all; you have horses for yourselves: Gadshill lies to-night in Rochester: I have bespoke supper to-morrow night in Eastcheap: we may do it as secure as sleep. If you will go, I will stuff your purses full of crowns; if you will not, tarry at home and be hanged. Fal. Hear ye, Yedward; if I tarry at home and go not, I'll hang you for going.

Poins. You will, chops?

Fal. Hal, wilt thou make one? P. Hen. Who, I rob? I a thief? not I, by my faith.

Fal. There's neither honesty, manhood, nor good fellowship in thee, nor thou camest not of the blood royal, if thou darest not stand for ten shillings.

P. Hen. Well, then, once in my days I'll be a madcap.

Fal. Why, that's well said.

P. Hen. Well, come what will, I'll tarry at home.

Fal. By the Lord, I'll be a traitor, then, when thou art king.

P. Hen. I care not.

Poins. Sir John, I pr'ythee, leave the prince and me alone: I will lay him down such reasons for this adventure that he shall go.

Fal. Well, God give thee the spirit of persua-are to be loved. No, my good lord; banish Peto, banish Bardolph, banish Poins: but, for sweet Jack Falstaff, kind Jack Falstaff, true Jack Falstaff, valiant Jack Falstaff, and therefore more valiant, being, as he is, old Jack Falstaff, banish not him thy Harry's company, hanish not him thy Harry's company:-banish plump Jack, and banish all the world.

P. Hen. I do, I will. A knocking heard. [Exeunt Host., FRAN., and BARD.

Re-enter BARDOLPH, running.

Bard. O, my lord, my lord! the sheriff with a most monstrous watch is at the door.

Fal. Out, you rogue!-play out the play:-I have much to say in the behalf of that Falstaff.

Re-enter Hostess, hastily.

Host. O Jesu, my lord, my lord,-

P. Hen. Heigh, heigh! the devil rides upon a fiddle-stick: what's the matter?

Host. The sheriff and all the watch are at the door: they are come to search the house. Shall I let them in?

Fal. Dost thou hear, Hal? never call a true piece of gold a counterfeit: thou art essentially mad, without seeming so.

P. Hen. And thou a natural coward, without instinct.

Fal. I deny your major: if you will deny the sheriff, so; if not, let him enter; if I hecome not a cart as well as another man, a plague on my bringing up! I hope I shall as soon he strangled with a halter as another.

P. Hen. Go, hide thee hehind the arras:the rest walk up above. Now, my masters, for a true face and good conscience.

Fal. Both which I have had; but their date is out, and therefore I'll hide me.

[Exeunt all but the PRINCE and POINS. ' P. Hen. Call in the sheriff.

Enter Sheriff and Carrier.

Now, master sheriff, what is your will with me? Sher. First, pardon me, my lord. A hue and

ACT III.

Scene I.—Bangor. A Room in the Arch DEACON'S House.

Enter Hotspur, Worcester, Mortimer, and Glendower.

Mort. These promises are fair, the partie sure.

And our induction full of prosperous hope. Hot. Lord Mortimer,—and cousin Gle:

dower,-Will you sit down?-

And uncle Worcester:—a plague upon it!

I have forgot the map.

No, here it is. Sit, cousin Percy; sit, good cousin Hotspur, For hy that name as oft as Lancaster Doth speak of you, his cheek looks pale, at with

A rising sigh he wishes you in heaven. Hot. And you in hell, as often as he hea

Owen Glendower spoke of.

Glend. I cannot blame him: at my nativi The front of heaven was full of fiery shapes, Of burning cressets; and at my birth The frame and huge foundation of the earth Shak'd like a coward.

Why, so it would have done, Hot. At the same season, if your mother's cat Had but kitten'd, though yourself had ne'er been horn.

Glend. I say the earth did shake when I was Hot. And I say the earth was not of my mind, If you suppose as fearing you it shook.

Glend. The heavens were all on fire, the earth did tremble.

Hot. O, then the earth shook to see the heavens on fire,

And not in fear of your nativity. P. Hen. I think it is good-morrow, is it not? Diseased nature oftentimes breaks forth o'clock. [Exeunt Sheriff and Carrier. Is with a kind of colic pinch'd and vex'd To see him shine so brisk, and smell so sweet, And talk so like a waiting-gentlewoman Of guns, and drums, and wounds,—God save the mark!—

And telling me the sovereign'st thing on earth Was parmaceti for an inward bruise; And that it was great pity, so it was, This villainous saltpetre sbould be digg'd Out of the bowels of the harmless earth, Which many a good tall fellow had destroy'd So cowardly; and but for these vile guns He would himself have been a soldier. This bald unjointed chat of his, my lord, I answer'd indirectly, as I said; And I beseech you, let not his report Come current for an accusation Betwixt my love and your high majesty. Biunt. The circumstance consider'd, good my lord,

Whatever Harry Percy then had said
To such a person, and in such a place,
At such a time, with all the rest re-told,
May reasonably die, and never rise
To do him wrong, or any way impeach
What then he said, so he unsay it now.

K. Hen. Why, yet he doth deny his prisoners, But with proviso and exception,—
That we at our own charge shall ransom straight His brother-in-law, the foolish Mortimer; Who, on my soul, hath wilfully betray'd. The lives of those that he did lead to fight Against the great magician, damn'd Glendower Whose daughter, as we hear, that Earl of March Hath lately married. Shall our coffers, then, Be emptied to redeem a traitor home?
Shall we buy treason? and indent with fears, When they have lost and forfeited themselves? No, on the barren mountains let him starve; For I shall never hold that man my friend Whose tongue shall ask me for one penny cost To ransom home revolted Mortimer.

Hot. Revolted Mortimer.

He never did fall off, my sovereign liege, But by the chance of war:—to prove that true, Needs no more but one tongue for all those wounds, [took, Those mouthed wounds, which valiantly he When on the gentle Severn's sedgy bank, In single opposition, hand to hand, He did confound the best part of an hour In changing hardiment with great Glendower: Three times they breath'd, and three times did they drink,

Jon agreement, of swift Severn's flood;

Who then, affrighted with their bloody looks,

Ran fearfully among the trembling reeds,

And hid his crisp head in the hollow bank

Blood-stained with these valiant combatants.

Never did base and rotten policy

Colour her working with such deadly wounds;

Nor could the noble Mortimer

Receive so many, and all willingly:

Then let him not be slander'd with revolt.

K. Hen. Thou dost belie him, Percy, thou dost belie him;
He never did encounter with Glendower:
I tell thee,
He durst as well have met the devil alone

As Owen Glendower for an enemy. [forth Or fill up chronicles in time to come, Art thou not asbam'd? But, sirrah, hence- That men of your nobility and power

Let me not hear you speak of Mortimer: Send me your prisoners with the speediest means.

Or you shall hear in such a kind from me As will displease you.—My Lord Northumberland,

We license your departure with your son.— Send us your prisoners, or you'll hear of it. [Exeunt K. Henry, Blunt, and Train.

Hot. And if the devil come and roar for them.

I will not send them:—I will after straight, And tell him so; for I will ease my beart,

And tell him so; for I will ease my beart, \
Albeit I make a hazard of my bead.

North. What, drunk with choler? stay, and pause awhile:

Here comes your uncle.

Re-enter Worcester.

Hot. Speak of Mortimer!
Zounds, I will speak of him; and let my soul
Want mercy, if I do not join with him:
Yea, on his part I'll empty all these veins,
And shed my dear blood drop by drop i' the dust,

But I will lift the down-trod Mortimer As high i' the air as this untbankful king, As this ingrate and canker'd Bolingbroke.

North. Brother, the king hath made your nephew mad. [To Worcester. Wor. Who struck this heat up after I was cone?

Hot. He will, forsooth, have all my prisoners; And when I urg'd the ransom once again Of my wife's brother, then his cheek look'd pale,

And on my face he turn'd an eye of death, Trembling even at the name of Mortimer. Wor. I cannot blame him: was he not pro-

claim'd
By Richard that dead is the next of blood?
North. He was: I heard the proclamation:
And then it was when the unhappy king—
Whose wrongs in us God pardon!—did set forth

Upon his Irisb expedition;
From whence he intercepted did return
To be depos'd and shortly murdered.

To be depos'd, and shortly murdered.

Wor. And for whose death we in the world's wide mouth

Live scandaliz'd and fonlly spoken of. [then Hot. But, soft, I pray you: did King Richard Proclaim my brother Edmund Mortimer Heir to the crown?

North. He did; myself did hear it.

Hot. Nay, then I cannot blame his consin king,

That wish'd him on the barren mountains starve. But shall it be that you that set the crown Upon the head of this forgetful man, And for his sake wear the detested blot Of murderous subornation,—shall it be That you a world of curses undergo, Being the agents, or base second means, The cords, the ladder, or the hangman rather?—O, pardon me, that I descend so low To show the line and the predicament Wherein you range under this subtle king;—Sball it, for shame, be spoken in these days, Or fill up chronicles in time to come, That men of your pobility and nower

Of the dreamer Merlin and his prophecies, And of a dragon and a finless fish, A clip-wing'd griffin and a moulten raven, A couching lion and a ramping cat, And such a deal of skimble-skamble stuff As puts me from my faith. I tell you what,-He held me last night at least nine hours In reckoning up the several devils' names That were his lackeys: I cried hum, and well, go to,

But mark'd him not a word. O, he's as tedious As is a tired horse, a railing wife; Worse than a smoky house:—I had rather live With cheese and garlic in a windmill, far. Than feed on cates and have him talk to me In any summer-house in Christendom.

Mort. In faith, he is a worthy gentleman; Exceedingly well read, and profited In strange concealments; valiant as a lion, And wondrous affable; and as bountiful As mines of India. Shall I tell you, cousin? He holds your temper in high respect, And curbs himself even of his natural scope When you do cross his humour; faith, he does: I warrant you, that man is not alive Might so have tempted him as you have done, Without the taste of danger and reproof: But do not use it oft, let me entreat you.

Wor. In faith, my lord, you are too wilfulblame; And since your coming hither have done enough

To put him quite beside his patience. You must needs learn, lord, to amend this fault:

Though sometimes it show greatness, courage, blood,-

And that's the dearest grace it renders you,-Yet oftentimes it doth present harsh rage, Defect of manners, want of government, Pride, haughtiness, opinion, and disdain: The least of which, haunting a nobleman, Loseth men's hearts, and leaves behind a stain Upon the beauty of all parts besides, Beguiling them of commendation.

Hot. Well, I am school'd: good manners be your speed!

Here come our wives, and let us take our leave.

Re-enter GLENDOWER, with LADY MORTIMER and LADY PERCY.

Mort. This is the deadly spite that angers

My wife can speak no English, I no Welsh. Glend. My daughter weeps: she will not part with you;

She'll be a soldier too, she'll to the wars. Mort. Good father, tell her that she and my aunt Percy Shall follow in your conduct speedily.

. [GLEND. speaks to LADY MORT. in Welsh, and she answers him in the some. Glend. She's desperate here; a peevish, selfwill'd harlotry,

One that no persuasion can do good upon [LADY MORT. speaks to MORT. in Welsh. Mort. I understand thy looks: that pretty Welsh [heavens,

Which thou pour'st down from these welling I am too perfect in; and, but for shame,

In such a parley should I answer thee. [LADY MORT. speaks again. I understand thy kisses, and thou mine. And that's a feeling disputation: But I will never be a truant, love, Till I have learned thy language; for thy toague Makes Welsh as sweet as ditties highly penn'd. Sung by a fair queen in a summer's bower, With ravishing division, to her lute.

Glend. Nay, if you melt, then will she run [LADY MORT. speaks again. Mort. O, I am ignorance itself in this! Glend. She bids you on the wanton rushes lay you down, And rest your gentle head upon her lap And she will sing the song that pleaseth you, And on your eyelids crown the god of sleep, Charming your blood with pleasing heaviness: Making such difference betwixt wake and sleep As is the difference betwirt day and night. The hour before the heavenly harness'd team Begins his golden progress in the east. [siag: Mort. With all my heart I'll sit and hear her By that time will our book, I think, be drawn.

Glend. Do so:

And those musicians that shall play to you Hang in the air a thousand leagues from hence; And straight they shall be here: sit, and attend.

Hot. Come, Kate, thou art perfect in lying down: come, quick, quick, that I may lay my head in thy lap.

Lady P. Go, ye giddy goose.

The music plays. Hot. Now I perceive the devil understands Welsh;

And 'tis no marvel he's so humorous. By'r lady, he's a good musician.

Lady P. Then should you be nothing but musical; for you are altogether governed by Lie still ye thief, and hear the lady humours.

sing in Welsh.

Hot. I had rather hear Lady, my brach, howl in Irish.

Lady P. Wouldst thou have thy head broken?

Hot. No. Lady P. Then be still.

Hot. Neither; 'tis a woman's fault. Lady P. Now God help thee!
Hot. To the Welsh lady's bed.
Lady P. What's that?
Hot. Peace! she sings.

A Welsh Song sung by LADY MORT. Hot. Come, Kate, I'll have your song too.

Lady P. Not mine, in good sooth. Hot. Not yours, in good sooth! 'Heart, you swear like a comfit-maker's wife! Not you, in good sooth; and, As true as I live; and As God shall mend me; and, As sure as day: And giv'st such sarcenet surety for thy oaths, As if thou never walk'dst further than Finsbury. Swear me, Kate, like a lady as thou art, A good mouth-filling oath; and leave in sooth,

And such protest of pepper-gingerbread, To velvet guards and Sunday-citizens.

Come, sing.

Lady P. I will not sing. Hot. 'Tis the next way to turn tailor, or be dbreast teacher. An the indentures be redbreast teacher. drawn, I'll away within these two hours; and so, come in when ye will.

I'll steal to Glendower and Lord Mortimer: Where you and Douglas, and our powers at once

As I will fashion it,—shall happily meet, To bear our fortunes in our own strong arms. Which now we hold at much uncertainty.

North. Farewell, good brother: we shall thrive, I trust.

Hot. Uncle, adieu:-O, let the hours be short, Till fields and blows and groans applaud our sport. Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE L-ROCHESTER. An Inn Yard. Enter a Carrier with a lantern in his hand.

I Car. Heigh-hol an't be not four by the day, I'll be hanged: Charles' wain is over the new chimney, and yet our horse not packed .-What, ostlerl

Ost. [Within.] Anon, anon.

I Car. I pr'ythee, Tom, beat Cut's saddle, put a few flocks in the point; the poor jade is wrong in the withers out of all cess.

Enter another Carrier.

2 Car. Peas and beans are as dank here as a dog, and that is the next way to give poor jades the bots: this house is turned upside down since Robin ostler died.

I Car. Poor fellow! never joyed since the price of oats rose; it was the death of him.

2 Car. I think this be the most villanous house in all London road for fleas: I am stung like a tench.

r Car. Like a tench! by the mass, there is ne'er a king in Christendom could be better bit than I have been since the first cock. 2 Car. Why, they will allow us ne'er a jor-den, and then we leak in your chimney; and your chamber-lie breeds fleas like a loach. I Car. What, ostlerl come away, and be hanged; come away.

2 Car. I have a gammon of bacon and two races of ginger, to be delivered as far as Charing-cross.

I Car. 'Odsbodyl the turkeys in my pannier are quite starved .- What, ostler!-A plague on thee! hast thou never an eye in thy head? canst not hear? An 'twere not as good a deed as drink, to break the pate of thee, I am a very villain.--Come, and be hanged:-hast no faith in thee?

Enter GADSHILL.

Gads. Good-morrow. carriers. What's o'clock?

I Car. I think it be two o'clock.

Gads. I prythee, lend me thy lantern, to see , my gelding in the stable.

I Car. Nay, soft, I pray ye; I know a trick worth two or that, i' faith.

Gads. I pr'ythee, lend me thine.

2 Car. Ay, when? canst tell?—Lend me thy lantern, quoth a?—marry, I'll see thee hanged first.

Gads. Sirrah carrier, what time do you mean to come to London?

2 Car. Time enough to go to bed with a candle, I warrant thee.—Come, neighbour Mings, we'll call up the gentlemen: they will along with company, for they have great charge. Exeunt Carriers.

Gads. What, ho! chamberlain!

Cham. [Within.] At hand, quoth pick-purse. Gads. That's even as fair as—at hand, quoth the chamberlain; for thou variest no more from picking of purses than giving direction doth from labouring; thou layest the plot how.

Enter Chamberlain.

Cham. Good-morrow, Master Gadshill. It holds current that I told you yesternight:— there's a franklin in the wild of Kent hath brought thee hundred marks with him in gold: I heard him tell it to one of his company last night at supper; a kind of auditor; one that hath abundance of charge too, God knows what. They are np already, and call for eggs and butter: they will away presently.

Gads. Sirrah, if they meet not with Saint

Nicholas' clerks, I'll give thee this neck.

Cham. No, I'll none of it: I pr'ythee, keep that for the hangman; for I know thon worshippest Saint Nicholas as truly as a man of falsehood may.

Gads. What talkest thou to me of the hangman? If I hang, I'll make a fat pair of gallows; for it I hang, oh Sir John hangs with me, and thou knowest he's no starveling. Tut! there are other Trojans that thou dreamest not of. the which, for sport-sake, are content to do the profession some grace; that would, if matters should be looked into, for their own credit-sake, make all whole. I sm joined with no foot landrakers, no long-staff sixpenny strikers, none of these mad mustachio purple-hued malt-worms; but with nobility and tranquility; burgomasters and great oneyers, such as can hold in, such as will strike sooner that speak, and speak sooner than drink, and drink sooner than pray: and yet I lie; for they pray continually to their saint, the commonwealth; or, rather, not pray to her, but prey on her; for they ride up and down on her, and make her their boots.

Cham. What, the commonwealth their boots?

will she hold out water in foul way?

Gads. She will, she will; justice hath liquored We steal as in a castle, cock-sure; we have the receipt of fern-seed,—we walk invisible.

Cham. Nay, by my faith, I think you are more beholding to the night than to fern-seed for your walking invisible.

Gads. Give me thy hand: thou shalt have a share in our purchase, as I am a true man. Cham. Nay, rather let me have it, as you are a false thief.

Gads. Go to; homo is a common name to all Bid the ostler bring my gelding out of men. the stable. Farewell, you muddy knave. [Exeunt.

Scene II .- The Road by Gadshill.

Enter PRINCE HENRY and POINS; BARDOLPH and PETO at some distance.

Poins. Come, shelter, shelter: I have re-moved Falstaff's horse, and he frets like a gummed velvet.

[They retire. P. Hen. Stand close.

And shake the peace and safety of our throne. And what say you to this? Percy, Northumber-

The Archbishop's grace of York, Douglas, Mortimer,

Capitulate against us, and are up. But wherefore do I tell these news to thee? Why, Harry, do I tell thee of my foes. Which art my near'st and dearest enemy? Thou that art like enough,-through vassal fear, Base inclination, and the start of spleen. To fight against me under Percy's pay, To dog his heels, and court'sy at his frowns, To show how much thou art degenerate.

P. Hen. Do not think so, you shall not find it so:

And God forgive them that have so much sway'd Your majesty's good thoughts away from mel I will redeem all this on Percy's head. And, in the closing of some glorious day, Be bold to tell you that I am your son; When I will wear a garment all of blood, And stain my favours in a bloody mask, Which, wash'd away, shall scour my shame with And that shall be the day, whene'er it lights, That this same child of honour and renown, This gallant Hotspur, this all-praised knight, And your unthought-of Harry chance to meet. For every honour sitting on his helm, Would they were multitudes, and on my head My shames redoubled! for the time will come That I shall make this northern youth exchange His glorious deeds for my indignities. Percy is but my factor, good my lord, To engross up glorious deeds on my behalf; And I will call him to so strict account. That he shall render every glory up, Yea, even the slightest worship of his time, Or I will tear the reckoning from his heart. This, in the name of God, I promise here: The which if he be pleas'd I shall perform, I do beseech your majesty, may salve The long-grown wounds of my intemperance: If not, the end of life cancels all bands; And I will die a hundred thousand deaths Ere I break the smallest parcel of this vow. Enter SIR WALTER BLUNT.

How now, good Blunt! thy looks are full of (speak of. speed.

Blunt. So hath the business that I come to Lord Mortimer of Scotland hath sent word That Douglas and the English rebels met The eleventh of this month at Shrewsbury: A mighty and fearful head they are, If promises be kept on every hand, As ever offer'd foul play in a state.

K. Hen. The Earl of Westmoreland set forth

to-day;

With him my son, Lord John of Lancaster; For this advertisement is five days old:-On Wednesday next, Harry, you shall set for-

On Thursday we ourselves will march: Our meeting is Bridgenorth: and, Harry, you heart-burn'd.

Shall march through Glostershire; by which account.

Our business valued, some twelve days hence Our general forces at Bridgenorth shall meet. Our hands are full of business: let's away; Advantage feeds him fat while men delay. Exeunt.

SCENE III .- EASTCHEAP. A Room in the Boar's Head Tavern.

Enter FALSTAFF and BARDOLPH.

Fal. Bardolph, am I not fallen away vilely since this last action? do I not bate? do I not dwindle? Why, my skin hangs about me like an old lady's loose gown; I am withered like an old apple-john. Well, I'll repent, and that suddenly, while I am in some liking; I shall be out of heart shortly, and then I shall have no strength to repent. An I have not forgotten what the inside of a church is made of, I am a peppercorn, a brewer's horse: the inside of a church! Company, villanous company, hath been the spoil of me.

Bard. Sir John, you are so fretful, you cannot live long.

Fal. Why, there is it: come, sing me a bawdy song; make me merry. I was as virtuously given as a gentleman need to be; virtuous enough; swore little; diced not above seven times a week; went to a bawdy-house not above once in a quarter—of an hour; paid money that I borrowed—three or four times: lived well, and in good compass: and now I live out of all order, out of all compass.

Bard. Why, you are so fat, Sir John, that you must needs be out of all compass, -out of all reasonable compass, Sir John.

Fal. Do thou amend thy face, and I'll amend my life: thou art our admiral, thou bearest the lantern in the poop,—but 'tis in the nose of thee; thou art the Knight of the Burning Lamp.

Bard. Why, Sir John, my face does you no harm

Fal. No, I'll be sworn; I make as good use of it as many a man doth of a Death's head or a memento mori: I never see thy face but I think upon hell-fire, and Dives that lived in purple; for there he is in his robes, burning, burning. If thou wert any way given to virtue, I would swear by thy face; my oath should be, By this fire, that's God's angel; but thou art altogether given over; and wert indeed, but for the light in thy face, the son of utter darkness. thou rannest up Gadshill in the night to catch my horse, if I did not think thou hadst been an ignis fatuus or a ball of wildfire, there's no purchase in money. O, thou art a perpetual triumph, an everlasting bonfire light! Thou hast saved me a thousand marks in links and torches, walking with thee in the night betwixt tavern and tavern: but the sack that thou hast drunk me would have bought me lights as good cheap at the dearest chandler's in Europe. have maintained that salamander of yours with fire any time this two-and-thirty years; God reward me for it!

Bard. 'Sblood, I would my face were in your Fal. God-a-mercy! so should I be sure to be SCENE III .- WARKWORTH. A Room in the Castle.

Enter HOTSPUR, reading a letter.

Hot.—But, for mine own part, my lord, I could be well contented to be there, in respect of the love I bear your house.—He could be contented,—wby is he not, then? In respect of the love he bears our house:—he shows in this, he loves his own harn better than he loves our house. Let me see some more. The purpose you undertake is dangerous.— Wby, that's certain: 'tis dangerous to take a cold, to sleep, to drink; but I tell you, my lord fool, out of this nettle, danger, we pluck this flower, safety. The purpose you undertake is dangerous; the friends you have named un-certain; the time itself unsorted; and your whole plot too light for the counterpoise of so great an opposition.—Say you so, say you so? I say unto you again, you are a shallow, cowardly hind, and you lie. What a lack-hrain is this! By the Lord, our plot is a good plot as ever was laid; our friends true and constant: a good plot; good friends, and full of expectation; an excel-lent plot, very good friends. What a frostylent plot, very good friends. What a frosty-spirited rogue is this! Why, my Lord of York commends the plot and the general course of the action. Zounds, an I were now hy this rascal, I could brain him with his lady's fan. not my father, my uncle, and myself? Lord Edmund Mortimer, my Lord of York, and Owen Glendower? Is there not, hesides, the Douglas? Have I not all their letters to meet me in arms by the ninth of the next month? and are they not some of them set forward alreadyl What a pagan rascal is thisl an infidell Hal you shall see now, in very sincerity of fear and cold heart, will he to the king, and lay open all our proceedings. O, I could divide myself, and go to buffets, for moving such n dish of skimmed milk with so honourable an action! Hang him! Let bim tell the king: we are prepared. I will set forward to-night.

Enter LADY PERCY.

How now, Katel I must leave you within these two hours. [alone?

Lady. O, my good lord, why are you thus

For what offence have I this fortnight been A banish'd woman from my Harry's bed? Tell me, sweet lord, what is't that takes from thee Thy stomach, pleasure, and thy golden sleep? Why dost thou hend thinc eyes upon the earth, And start so often when thou sitt'st nlone? Why hast thou lost the fresh blood in thy cheeks, And given my treasures and my rights of thee To thick-ey'd-musing and curs'd melancholy? In thy faint slumbers I hy thee have watch'd, And heard thee murmur tales of iron wars;

Speak terms of manage to thy hounding steed; Cry, Courage!-to the field!-And thou hast talk'd

Of sallies and retires, of trenches, tents, Of palisadoes, frontiers, parapets, Of basilisks, of cannon, culverin, Of prisoners' ransom, and of soldiers slain, And all the currents of a heady fight. Thy spirit within thee hath been so at war, And thus hath so bestirr'd thee in thy sleep That beads of sweat have stood upon thy brow, Like bubbles in a late disturbed stream; And in thy face strange motions bave appear'd, Such as we see when men restrain their breath On some great sudden hest. O, what portents are these?

Some heavy business hath my lord in hand, And I must know it, else he loves me not.

Hol. What, bol

Hot. That roan shall he my throne. Well, I will hack him straight: O esperance!-Bid Butler lead him forth into the park.

Lady. But hear you, my lord.

Hot. What say'st thou, my lndy? Lady. What is it carries you away?

Hot. Why, my horse, my love, my horse.

Lady. Out, you mad-headed apel A weasel hath not such a deal of spleen As you are toss'd with. In faith, I'll know your husiness, Harry,—that I will. I fear my hrother Mortimer doth stir Ahout his title, and hath sent for you

To line his enterprise: but if you go,— Ho!. So far a-foot, I shall be weary, love. Lady. Come, come, you paraquito, answer.

Away, you trifler!-Love?-I love thee not, I care not for thee, Kate: this is no world To play with mammets and to tilt with lips: We must have bloody noses and crack'd crowns, And pass them current too .- Gods me, my with me? borse!-What say'st thou, Kate? what wouldst thou have

Lady. Do you not love me? do you not, indeed? Well, do not, then; for since you love me not,

I will not love myself. Do you not love me? Nay, tell me if you speak in jest or no. Hot. Come, wilt thou see me ride? And when I am o' horseback, I will swear I love thee infinitely. But bark you, Kate; I must not have you benceforth question me Whither I go, nor reason whereabout: Whitber I must, I must; and, to conclude, This evening must I leave you, gentle Kate. I know you wise; hut yet no further wise Than Harry Percy's wife: constant you are: But yet a woman: and for secrecy, No lady closer; for I well helieve Thou wilt not utter what thou dost not know,-

And so far will I trust thee, gentle Kate. Lady. How! so far? Hot. Not an inch further. But hark you,

Whither I go, thitber shall you go too;

P. Hen. It appears so by the story.

Fal. Hostess, I forgive thee: go, make ready breakfast; love thy husband, look to thy servants, cherish thy guests: thou shalt find me tractable to any honest reason: thou seest I am pacified.—Still?—Nay, prythee, be gone. [Exit Hostess.] Now, Hal, to the news at court: for the robbery, lad,—how is that answered?

P. Hen. O, my sweet beef, I must still be good angel to thee:—the money is paid back again.

Fal. O, I do not like that paying back; 'tis a double labour.

P. Hen. I am good friends with my father, and may do anything.

Fal. Rob me the exchequer the first thing thou doest, and do it with unwashed hands too.

Bard. Do, my lord.

P. Hen. I have procured thee, Jack, a charge Fal. I would it had been of horse. Where

P. Hen. I have procured thee, Jack, a charge Fal. I would it had been of horse. Where shall I find one that can steal well? O for a fine thief, of the age of two-and-twenty or thereabouts! I am heinously unprovided. Well, God be thanked for these rebels,—they offend none but the virtuous: I laud them, I praise them.

P. Hen. Bardolph,-

Bard. My lord. [Lancaster, P. Hen. Go bear this letter to Lord John of To my brother John; this to my Lord of West-Exit BARDOLPH.

ACT IV.

Scene I.—The Rebel Camp near Shrewsbury.

Enter Hotspur, Worcester, and Douglas.

Hot. Well said, my noble Scot: if speaking truth

In this fine age were not thought flattery, Such attribution should the Douglas have, As not a soldier of this season's stamp Should go so general current through the world. By heaven, I cannot flatter; I defy The tongues of soothers; but a braver place In my heart's love hath no man than yourself: Nay, task me to my word; approve me, lord. Doug. Thou art the king of honour:

No man so potent breathes upon the ground

But I will beard him.

Hot. Do so, and 'tis well.—

Enter a Messenger with letters.

What letters hast thou there?—I can but thank

Mess. These letters come from your father,— Hol. Letters from himl why comes he not Mess. He cannot come, my lord; he's grievous sick.

Hot. Zounds! how has he the leisure to be sick

In such a justling time? Who leads his power?
Under whose government come they along?

Mess. His letters bear his mind, not I, my
lord. |

Wor. I pr'ythee, tell me, doth he keep his Mess. He did, my lord, four days ere I set forth:

And at the time of my departure thence He was much fear'd by his physicians. Wor. I would the state of time had first been whole Ere he by sickness had been visited:

His health was never better worth than now.

Hot. Sick now! droop now! this sickness

doth infect
The very life-blood of our enterprise;
'Tis catching hither, even to our camp.—
He writes me here that inward sickness,—
And that his friends by deputation could not
So soon be drawn; nor did he think it.meet
To lay so dangerous and dear a trust
On any soul remov'd, but on his own.
Yet doth he give us bold advertisement,
That with our small conjunction we should oa,
To see how fortune is dispos'd to us;
For, as he writes, there is no quailing now,
Because the king is certainly possess'd

Of all our purposes. What say you to it?
Wor. Your father's sickness is a maim to us.
Hot. A perilous gash, a very limb lopp'd

And yet, in faith, 'tis not; his present want Seems more than we shall find it:—were it good To set the exact wealth of all our states All at one cast? to set so rich a main On the nice hazard of one doubtful hour? It were not good; for therein should we read The very bottom and the soul of hope, The very list, the very utmost bound Of all our fortunes.

Doug. Faith, and so we should; Where now remains a sweet reversion: We may boldly spend upon the hope of what

Is to come in:

A comfort of retirement lives in this.

Hot. A rendezvous, a home to fly unto,

If that the devil and mischance look big

Upon the maidenhead of our affairs. | here.

Wor. But yet I would your father had been The quality and hair of our attempt Brooks no division: it will be thought By some, that know not why he is away, That wisdom, loyalty, and mere dislike Of our proceedings, kept the earl from hence: And think how such an apprehension May turn the tide of fearful faction, And breed a kind of question in our cause; For well you know we of the offering side Must keep aloof from strict arbitrement, And stop all sight-holes, every loop from whence The eye of reason may pry in upon us: This absence of your father's draws a curtain That shows the ignorant a kind of fear Before not dreamt of. You strain too far.

Hot. You strain too in.
L, rather, of his absence make this use:-

himself?

roonhorse o drench, says he; and answers, Some fourteen, an hour after,—a trifle, a trifle. I pr'ythee, call in Falstaff: I'll play Percy, and that damned hrawn shall play Dame Mortimer his wife. Rivo says the drunkard. Call in rihs, call in tallow.

Enter Falstaff, Gadshill, Bardolph, and PETO; followed by FRANCIS with wine.

Poins. Welcome, Jack: where hast thou been? Fal. A plague of all cowards, I say, and a vengeance tool marry, and amen!—Give me a cup of sack, boy.—Ere I lead this life long, I'll sew nether-stocks, and mend them and foot them too. A plague of all cowards!-Give me a cup of sack, rogue.—Is there no virtue extant? [He drinks.

P. Hen. Didst thou never see Titan kiss a dish of hutter? pitiful-hearted Titan, that melted at the sweet tale of the sun! if thou didst, then hehold that compound.

Fal. You rogue, here's lime in this sack too: there is nothing but roguery to he found in villanous man; yet a coward is worse than a cup of sack with lime in it,—a villanous coward.—Go thy ways, old Jack; die when thou wilt, if manhood, good manhood, be not forgot upon the face of the earth, then am I a shotten her-There live not three good men unhanged in England; and one of them is fat, and grows old: God help the while! a had world, I say. I would I were a weaver; I could sing psalms or anything. A plague of all cowards, I say still. P. Hen. How now, woolsack! what mutter

you?

Fal. A king's son! If I do not beat thee out of thy kingdom with a dagger of lath, and drive all thy subjects afore thee like a flock of wild geese, I'll never wear hair on my face more. You Prince of Wales!

P. Hen. Why, you whoreson round man, what's the matter?

Fal. Are you not a coward? answer me to that:—and Poins there?

Poins. Zounds, ye fat paunch, an ye call me coward, I'll stah thee.

Fal. I call thee coward! I'll see thee damned ere I call thee coward: but I would give a thousand pound I could run as fast as thou canst. You are straight enough in the shoulders,-you care not who sees your hack: call you that hacking of your friends? A plague upon such hacking! give me them that will face ine.—Give me a cup of sack:—I am a rogue if I drunk to-day.

P. Hen. O villain! thy lips are scarce wiped since thou drunkest last.

Fol. All's one for that. A plague of all cowards, still say I. He drinks.

P. Hen. What's the matter? Fol. What's the matter! there he four of us here have ta'en a thousand pound this day morning.

P. Hen. Where is it, Jack? where is it? Fol. Where is it! taken from us it is: a hundred upon poor four of us.

P. Hen. What, a hundred, man?

Fol. I am a rogue, if I were not at halfsword with a dozen of them two hours to- not the truth the truth?

gether. I have 'scaped by miracle. I am eight times thrust through the doublet, four I am through the hose; my huckler cut through and through; my sword hacked like a hand-saw,— ecce signum! I never dealt hetter since I was a man; all would not do, A plague of all cow-ards!—Let them speak; if they speak more or less than truth, they are villains, and the sons of darkness.

P. Hen. Speak, sirs; how was it? Gods. We four set upon some dozen,— Fol. Sixteen at least, my lord.

Gods. And hound them.

Peto. No, no, they were not bound.

Fol. You rogue, they were hound, every man of them; or I am a Jew else, an Ehrew Jew. Gods. As we were sharing, some six or seven fresh men set upon us,-

Fol. And unbound the rest, and then come in the other.

P. Hen. What, fought ye with them all? Fol. All! I know not what ye call all; hat if I fought not with fifty of them, I am a hunch of radish: if there were not two or three and fifty upon poor old Jack, then am I no two-legged some of them. creature.

P. Hen. Pray God, you have not murdered Fal. Nay, that's past praying for: I have peppered two of them; two I am sure I have paid,—two rogues in buckram suits. I tell thee what, Hal,—if I tell thee a lie, spit in my face, call me horse. Thou knowest my old ward;-here I lay, and thus I hore my point. Four rogues in buckram let drive at me,

P. Hen. What, four? thou saidst hut two even now.

Fal. Four, Hal; I told thee four.

Poins. Ay, ay, he said four.

Fal. These four came all a-front, and mainly thrust at me. I made me no more ado hut took all their seven points in my target, thus.

P. Hen. Seven? why, there were hut four even now in buckram.

Poins. Ay, four in buckram suits. Fal. Seven, hy these hilts, or I am a villain P. Hen. Pr'ythee, let him alone; we shall have more anon.

Fal. Dost thou hear me, Hal?

P. Hen. Ay, and mark thee too, Jack. Fol. Do so, for it is worth the listening to-These nine in buckram that I told thee of,-

P. Hen. So, two more already. Fal. Their points heing hroken-

Poins. Down fell their hose.

Fal. Began to give me ground: but I followed me close, came in foot and hand; and with a thought seven of the eleven I paid.

P. Hen. O monstrous! eleven huckram men grown out of two!

Fal. But, as the devil would have it, three mishegotten knaves in Kendal green came at my back and let drive at me;-for it was so dark, Hal, that thou couldst not see thy hand.

P. Hen. These lies are like the father that begets them,—gross as a mountain, open, palpable. Why, thou clay-brained guts, thou nott-pated fool, thou whoreson, obscene, greasy tallow-keech,-

Fal. What, art thou mad? art thou mad? is

Fal. What, Hall how now, mad wagl what a devil dost thou in Warwickshire?—My good Lord of Westmoreland, I cry you mercy: I thought your honour had already heen at Shrewsbury.

West. Faith, Sir John, 'tis more than time that I were there, and you too; hut my powers are there already. The king, I can tell you, looks for us all: we must away all night.

Fal. Tut, never fear me: I am as vigilant as a cat to steal cream.

P. Hen. I think, to steal cream, indeed; for thy theft hath already made thee butter. But tell me, Jack, whose fellows are these that come after?

Fal. Mine, Hal, mine.

P. Hen. I did never see such pitiful rascals. Fal. Tut, tut; good enough to toss; food for powder, food for powder; they'll fill a pit as well as better: tush, man, mortal men, mortal men.

West. Ay, but, Sir John, methinks they are exceeding poor and hare, too beggarly.

Fal. Faith, for their poverty, I know not where they had that; and for their hareness, I am sure they never learned that of me.

P. Hen. No, I'll be sworn; unless you call three fingers on the ribs bare. But, sirrah, make haste: Percy is already in the field.

Fal. What, is the king encamped?

West. He is, Sir John: I fear we shall stay too long.

Fal. Well, [a feast To the latter end of a fray and the beginning of Fits a duli fighter and a keen guest. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Rebel Camp near Shrewsbury.

Enter Hotspur, Worcester, Douglas, and Vernon.

Hot. We'll fight with him to-night.

Wor. It may not be.

Doug. You give him, then, advantage.

Ver. Not a whit.

Hot. Why say you so? looks he not for supply?

Ver. So do we.

Hot. His is certain, ours is doubtful.

Hot. His is certain, ours is doubtful. Wor. Good cousin, be advis'd; stir not tonight.

Ver. Do not, my lord.

Doug. You do not counsel well: You speak it out of fear and cold heart. Ver. Do me no slander, Douglas: by my life.—

And I dare well maintain it with my life,—
If well-respected honour bid me on,
I hold as little counsel with weak fear
you, my lord, or any Scot that lives:—
Let it he seen to-morrow in the hattle
Which of us fears.

Doug. Yea, or to-night.

Ver. Content.

Hot. To-night, say I. [much, Ver. Come, come, it may not he. I wonder Being men of such great leading as you are, That you foresee not what impediments Drag back our expedition: certain horse Of my cousin Vernon's are not yet come up: Your uncle Worcester's horse came but to-day;

And now their pride and mettle is asleep, Their courage with hard lahour tame and dull, That not a horse is half the half of himself,

Hot. So are the horses of the enemy In general, journey-hated and brought low: The better part of ours is full of rest.

Wor. The number of the king exceedeth ours. For God's sake, cousin, stay till all come in.

[The trumpet sounds a parley.

Enter SIR WALTER BLUNT.

Blunt. I come with gracious offers from the king,

If you vouchsafe me hearing and respect.

Hot. Welcome, Sir Walter Blunt; and would to God

You were of our determination!
Some of us love you well; and even those some Envy your great deservings and good name,
Because you are not of our quality,

But stand against us like an enemy. Istand so,
Blunt. And God defend hut still I should
So long as out of limit and true rule

You stand against anointed majesty! But, to my charge.—The king hath sent to know

The nature of your griefs; and whereupon
You conjure from the hreast of civil peace
Such bold hostility; teaching his duteous land.
Audacious cruelty. If that the king
Have any way your good deserts forgot,—
Which he confesseth to he manifold,—
He hids you name your griefs; and with all speed
You shall have your desires with interest,
And pardon absolute for yourself, and these
Herein misled by your suggestion. [king

Hot. The king is kind; and well we know the Knows at what time to promise, when to pay. My father and my uncle and myself Did give him that same royalty he wears; And when he was not six-and-twenty strong Sick in the world's regard, wretched and low, A poor unminded outlaw sneaking home, My father gave him welcome to the shore; And when he heard him swear, and vow to God, He came hut to he Duke of Lancaster, To sue his livery and heg his peace, With tears of innocency and terms of zeal,-My father, in kind heart and pity mov'd, Swore him assistance, and perform'd it too. Now, when the lords and barons of the realm Perceiv'd Northumberland did lean to him, The more and less came in with cap and knee; Met him in boroughs, cities, villages; Attended him on bridges, stood in lanes, Laid gifts before him, proffer'd him their oaths, Gave him their heirs as pages, follow'd him Even at the heels in golden multitudes. He presently,—as greatness knows itself,— Steps me a little higher than his vow Made to my father, while his blood was poor, Upon the naked shore at Ravenspurg; And now, forsooth, takes on him to reform Some certain edicts, and some strait decrees, That lie too heavy on the commonwealth; Cries out upon abuses, seems to weep Over his country's wrongs; and, by this face,

This seeming brow of justice, did he win

The hearts of all that he did angle for:

will not budge a foot.

P. Hen. Yes, Jack, upon instinct.

Fal. I grant ye, upon instinct.—Well, he is there too, and one Mordake, and a thousand blue-caps more: Worcester is stolen away tonight; thy father's heard is turned white with the news: you may buy land now as cheap as stinking mackerel.

P. Hen. Why, then, it is like, if there come a hot June, and this civil buffeting hold, we shall buy maidenheads as they buy hob-nails, by the hundreds.

Fel. By the mass, lad, thou sayest true; it is like we shall have good trading that way. - But tell me, Hal, art thou not horribly afeard? thou being heir-apparent, could the world pick thee out three such enemies again as that fiend Douglas, that spirit Percy, and that devil Glendower? Art thou not horribly afreid? doth not thy blood thrill at it?

thy instinct.

Fal. Well, thou wilt be harribly chid tomorrow when thou comest to thy father: if thou love me, practise an answer.

P. Hen. Do thou stand for my father! and examine me upon the particulars of my life.

my state, this dagger my accepte, and this custion my crown.

P. Hen. Thy state is taken for a joint-stool, thy golden sceptre for a leaden dagger, and thy precious rich crown for a pitiful hald crown!

Fal. Well, an the fire of grace he not quite out of thee, now shalt thou be moved. - Give me a cup of sack to make mine eyes look red, that it may be thought I have wept; for I must speak in passion, and I will do it in King Camhyses' vein.

P. Hen. Well, here is my leg.

Fel. And here is my speech.-Stand aside, nobility.

Host. O Jesu, this is excellent sport, i'faith! Fal. Weep not sweet queen; for trickling tears are vain. Host. O' the father, how he holds his countenancel [ful queen;

Fal. For God's sake, lords, convey my trist-For tears do stop the floodgates of her eyes.

Host. O Jesu, he doth it as like one of these harlotry players as ever I see! Fal. Peace, good pint-pot; peace, good tickle-brain.—Harry, I do not only marvel where thou spendest thy time, hut also bow thou art accompanied: for though the camomile, the more it is trodden on, the faster it grows, yet youth, the more it is wasted, the sooner it wears. That thou art my son, I have partly thy mother's word, partly my own opinion; hut chiefly a villainous trick of thine eye, and a foolish hanging of thy nether lip, that doth warrant me. If, then, thou be son to me, here lies the point;—why, being son to me, art thou so pointed at? Shall the blessed sun of heaven prove a micber, and eat blackberries? a question not to be asked. Shall the son of England prove a thief, and take purses? a question to be asked. There is a thing, Harry, which many an old bost that I know is damned: if to thou hast often heard of, and it is known to ho fat be to be hated, then Pharaoh's lean kine

Fal. O' horsehack, ye cuckoo; but a foot he | many in our land by the name of pitch: this pitch, as ancient writers do report, doth defile; so doth the company thou keepest: for, Harry, now I do not speak to thee in drink, but in tears; not in pleasure, but in passion; not in words only, but in woes also:-and yet there is a virtuous man whom I have often noted in thy company, but I know not his name.

P. Hen. What manner of man, an it like your majesty?

Fal. A goodly portly man, i'faith, and corpulent; of a cheerful look, a pleesing eye, and a most noble carriage; and, as I think, his age some fifty, or, by'r lady, inclining to three-score; and now I remember me, his name is Falstaff: if that man should be lewdly given, he deceiveth me; for, Harry, I see virtue in his looks. If, then, the tree may he known by the fruit, as the fruit by the tree, then, peremptorily I speak it, there is virtue in that Falstaff: him keep with, the rest banish. And tell me now, P. Hen. Not a whit, i'faith; I lack some of | thou nanghty variet, tell me, where hast thou heen this month?

P. Hen. Dost thou speak like a king? Do thou stand for me, and I'll play my father.

Fal. Depose me? if thou dost it half so gravely, so majestically, both in word and matter, hang me up by the heels for a rabbit-sucker or a poulter's hare.

P. Hen. Well, here I am set.

Fal. And here I stand:-judge, my masters. P. Hen. Now, Harry, whence come you?
Fal. My noble lord, from Eastcheap.
P. Hen. The complaints I hear of thee are grievous.

Fal. 'Sblood, my lord, they are false:-nay,

I'll tickle ye for a young prince, i' faith.

P. Hen. Swearest thou, ungracious boy?
henceforth ne'er look on me. Thou art violently earried away from grace: there is a devil haunts thee, in the likeness of a fat old man,a tun of man is thy companion. Why dost thou converse with that trunk of humours, that bolting-hutch of beastliness, that swollen parcel of dropsies, that hugo hombard of sack, that stuffed cloak-bag of guts, that roasted Manningtree ox, with the pudding in his belly, that reverend vice, that gray iniquity, that father ruffian, that vanity in years? Wherein is be good, hut to taste sack and drink it? wherein neat and cleanly, but to carve a capon and eat it? wherein cumning, but in craft? wherein crafty, but in villany? wherein villanous, but in all things? wherein wortby, hut in nothing?

Fcl. I would your grace would take me with you: whom means your grace?

P. Hen. That villanous ahominable misleader of youth, Falstaff, that old white-hearded Satan.

Fal. My lord, the man I know. P. Hen. I know thou dost.

Fal. But to say I know more harm in him than in myself, were to say more than I know. That he is old,—the more the pity,—his white hairs do witness it; but that he is, -saving your reverence, - a whoremaster, that I utterly deny. If sack and sugar he a fault, God help the wicked! If to he old and merry be a sin, then

In Richard's time; and posted day and night To meet you on the way, and kiss your hand, When yet you were in place and in account. Nothing so strong and fortunate as I. It was myself, my brother, and his son, That brought you home, and boldly did outdare The dangers of the time: you swore to us, And you did swear that oath at Doncaster, That you did nothing purpose 'gainst the state; Mor claim no further than your new-fall'n right, The seat of Gaunt, dukedom of Lancaster: To this we swore our aid. But in short space It rain'd down fortune showering on your head; And such a flood of greatness fell on you, What with our help, what with the absent king, What with the injuries of a wanton time, The seeming sufferances that you had borne. And the contrarious winds that held the king So long in his unlucky Irish wars That all in England did repute him dead,-And, from this swarm of fair advantages, You took occasion to be quickly woo'd To gripe the general sway into your hand; Forgot your oath to us at Doncaster; And, being fed by us, you us'd as so As that ungentle gull, the cuckoo's bird, Useth the sparrow,-did oppress our nest, Grew by our feeding to so great a bulk [sight That even our love durst not come near your For fear of swallowing; but, with nimble wing We were enforced, for safety-sake, to fly Out of your sight, and raise this present head: Whereby we stand opposed by such means As you yourself have forg'd against yourself; By unkind usage, dangerous countenance, And violation of all faith and troth Sworn to us in your younger enterprise.

K. Hen. These things, indeed, you have articulated,
Proclaim at market-crosses, read in churches;
To feed the surment of rehellion

To face the garment of rebellion

With some fine colour that may please the eye
Of fickle changelings and poor discontents,
Which gape and rub the elbow at the news
Of hurlyburly innovation:

And never yet did insurrection want
Such water-colours to impaint his cause;
Hor moody beggars, starving for a time
Of pellmell havoc and confusion. [a soul

P. Hen. In both our armies there is many Shall pay full dearly for this encounter, If once they join in trial. Tell your nephew, The Prince of Wales doth join with all the world

In praise of Henry Percy: by my hopes, This present enterprise set off his head, I do not think a braver gentleman, More active-valiant or more valiant-young, More daring or more bold, is now alive To grace this latter age with noble deeds. For my part, I may speak it to my shame, I have a truant been to chivalry; And so I hear he doth account me too: Yet this before my father's majesty,—I am content that he shall take the odds, Of his great name and estimation, And will, to save the blood on either side, Try fortune with him in a single fight.

K. Hen. And, Prince of Wales, so dare we venture thee,

Albeit considerations infinite
Do make against it.—No, good Worcester, no,
We love our people well; even those we love
That are misled upon your cousin's part;
And, will they take the offer of our grace,
Both he, and they, and you, yea, every man
Shall be my friend again, and I'll be his:
So tell your cousin, and bring me word
What he will do: bnt if he will not yield,
Rebuke and dread correction wait upon us,
And they shall do their office. Do, be gone;
We will not now be troubled with reply:
We offer fair; take it advisedly.

[Exeunt WOR. and VER.
P. Hen. It will not be accepted, on my life:
The Douglas and the Hotspur both together
Are confident against the world in arms.
K. Hen. Hence, therefore, every leader to his charge; or, on their answer, will we

For, on their answer, will we set on them: And God befriend us, as our cause is justl [Exeunt King, Blunt, and P. John. Fal. Hal, if thou see me down in the battle, and bestride me, so; 'tis a point of friendship.

P. Hen. Nothing but a colossus can do thee that friendship. Say thy prayers, and farewell.
Fal. I would it were bed-time, Hal, and all well.

P. Hen. Why, thou owest God a death.

Fal. 'Tis not due yet; I would be loth to pay him before his day. What need I be so forward with him that calls not on me? Well, Yez, but 'tis no matter; honour pricks me on, how if honour prick me off when I come on? how then? Can honour set-to a leg? no: or an arm? no: or take away the grief of a wound? no. Honour bath no skill in surgery, then? What is honour? a word. What is in that word, honour? What is that honour? eir. trim reckoning!—Who hath it? he that died o' Doth he feel it? no. Doth he Wednesday. Is it insensible, then? yea, to the hear it? no. But will it not live with the living? no. dead. Why? detraction will not suffer it:—therefore I'll none of it: honour is a mere scutcheon: and so ends my catechism.

Scene II.—The Rebel Comp.

Enter Worcester and Vernon.

Wor. O, no, my nephew must not know, Sir Richard, The liberal kind offer of the king.

The liberal kind offer of the king.
Ver. 'Twere best he did.

Wor. Then are we all undone. It is not possible, it cannot be,
The king should keep his word in loving us;
He will suspect us still, and find a time
To punish this offence in other faults:
Suspicion shall be all stuck full of eyes:
For treason is but trusted like the for,
Who, ne'er so tame, so cherish'd, and lock'd up,
Will have a wild trick of his ancestors.
Look how we can, or sad or merrily,
Interpretation will misquote our looks;
And we shall feed like oren at a stall,
The better cherish'd still the nearer death.
My nephew's trespass may be well forgot,—
It hath the excuse of youth and heat of blood,

By the imprisoning of unruly wind striving, Within her womb; which, for enlargement Shakes the old beldame earth, and topples down Steeples and moss-grown towers. At your birth. Our grandam earth, having this distemperature,

In passion shook. Glend. Cousin, of many men I do not bear these crossings. Give me leave To tell you once again that at my birth The front of heaven was full of fiery shapes; The goats ran from the mountains, and the herds Were strangely clamorous to the frighted fields. These signs have mark'd me extraordinary; And all the courses of my life do show I am not in the roll of common men Where is he living,—clipp'd in with the sea That chides the banks of England, Scotland, Wales,

Which calls me pupil, or hath read to me? And bring him ont that is but woman's son Can trace me in the tedious ways of art, And hold me pace in deep experiments.

Hol. I think there is no man speaks better

Welsh.~

I'll to dinner. Imad. Mort. Peace, consin Percy; you will make him I can call spirits from the vasty deep. Hot. Why, so can I, or so can any man;

But will they come when you do call for them? Glend. Why, I can teach thee, cousin, to command

The devil. Hot. And I can teach thee, coz, to shame

the devil

By felling truth: tell truth, and shame the devil! If thon have power to raise him, bring him hither, And I'll be sworn I have power to shame him hence. [devil!

O, while you live, tell truth, and shame the Mor. Come, come,

No more of this unprofitable chat.

Glend. Three times hath Henry Bolinghroke made head

Against my power; thrice from the banks of And sandy-bottom'd Severn have I sent him Bootless home and weather-beaten back. [too! Hot. Home without boots, and in foul weather

How 'scapes he agues, in the devil's name? Glend. Come, here's the map: shall we divide our right

According to our threefold order ta'en?

Mort. The archdeacon hath divided it Into three limits very equally: England, from Trent and Severn hitherto, By south and east is to my part assign'd: All westward, Wales beyond the Severn shore, And all the fertile land within that hound, To Owen Glendower:—and, dear coz, to you The remnant northward, lying off from Trent. And our indentures tripartite are drawn; Which being sealed interchangeably,— A business that this night may execute, To-morrow, cousin Percy, you, and I, And my good Lord of Worcester, will set forth To meet your father and the Scottish power, As is appointed us, at Shrewsbury. My father Glendower is not ready yet,

Norshall we need his help these fourteen days: Within that space [fo GLEND.] you may have drawn together

Your tenants, friends, and neighbouring gentlemen

Glend. A shorter time shall send me to you, lords:

And in my conduct shall your ladies come; From whom you now must steal, and take no leave

For there will be a world of water shed Upon the parting of your wives and you. Hot. Methinks my moiety, north from Burton here, In quantity equals not one of yours: See how this river comes me cranking in, And cuts me from the best of all my land A huge half-moon, a monstrous cantle out.

I'll have the current in this place damm'd up; And here the smug and silver Trent shall run In a new channel, fair and evenly: It shall not wind with such a deep indent, To roh me of so rich a bottom here.

Glend. Not wind! it shall, it must; you see it doth

Mort. Yea. But mark how he bears his course and runs me With like advantage on the other side; Gelding the opposite continent as much As on the other side it takes from you.

Wor. Yea, but a little charge will trench him here,

And on this north side win this cape of land; And then he runs straight and even.

Hot. I'll have it so: a little charge will do it. Glend. I will not have it alter'd. Hot.

Will not you? Glend. No, nor you shall not. Hot. Who shall say me'nay?

Glend. Why, that will I. Let me not understand you, then; Hot.

Speak in Welsh. rou: Glend. I can speak English, lord, as well as For I was train'd up in the English court;

Where, being hut young, I framed to the harp Many an English ditty, lovely well, And gave the tongue a helpful ornament

A virtue that was never seen in yon. Hot. Marry, and I am glad of it with all my I had rather be a kitten and cry mew, That one of these same metre ballad-mongers; I had rather hear a brazen candlestick turn'd, Or a dry wheel grate on the axie-tree; And that would set my teeth nothing on edge,

Nothing so much as mincing poetry:—
'Tis like the forc'd gait of a shuffling mag. Glend. Come, you shall have Trent turn'd.

Hot. I do not care; I'll give thrice so much land To any well-deserving friend;

But in the way of bargain, mark ye me, I'll cavil on the ninth part of a hair.

Are the indentures drawn? shall we be gone? Glend. The moon shines fair; you may away by night:

I'll haste the writer, and withal Break with your wives of your departure hence: I am afraid my daughter will run mad, So much she doteth on her Mortimer.

Mort. Fie, consin Percy! how you cross my father! [me

Hof. I cannot choose: sometimes he angers With telling me of the moldwarp and the ant,

Hot. The king hath many masking in his

Doug. Now, by my sword, I will kill all his I'll murder all his wardrobe, piece by piece, Until I meet the king. Hot.

Up, and away! Our soldiers stand full fairly for the day. Exeunt.

Other alarums. Enter Falstaff.

Fal. Though I could 'scape shot-free at London, I fear the shot here: here's no scoring but upon the pate. - Soft! who art thou? Sir Walter Blunt:- there's honour for you: here's no vanity!—I am as hot as molten lead, and as heavy too: God keep lead out of mel I need no more weight than mine own bowels.-- I have led my raggamuffins where they are peppered: , there's not three of my hundred and fifty left alive; and they are 'for the town's end, to beg during life.—But who comes here?

Enter PRINCE HENRY.

P. Hen. What, stand'st thou idle here? lend me thy sword:

Many a nobleman lies stark and stiff Under the hoofs of vaunting enemies, Whose deaths are unreveng'd: pr'ythee, lend me thy sword. Fal. O Hal, I pr'ythee, give me leave to breathe awhile.—Turk Gregory never did such deeds in arms as I have done this day. I have paid Percy, I have made him sure. P. Hen. He is, indeed; and living to kill Lend me thy sword, I pr'ythee.

Fal. Nay, before God, Hal, if Percy be alive thou gettest not my sword; but take my pistol, if thou wilt.

P. Hen. Give it me: what, is it in the case? Fal. Ay, Hal; 'tis hot, 'tis hot; there's that will sack a city.

[The PRINCE draws out a bottle of sack. P. Hen. What, is't a time to jest and dally now? [Throws it at him, and exit.

Fal. Well, if Percy be alive, I'll pierce him. If he do come in my way, so; if he do not, if I come in his willingly, let him make a carbonado of me. I like not such grinning honour as Sir Walter hath: give me life: which if I can save, so; if not, honour comes unlooked for, and there's an end.

Scene IV.—Another part of the Field.

Alarums. Excursions. Enter KING HENRY. PRINCE HENRY, PRINCE JOHN, and WEST-MORELAND.

K. Hen. I prythee,

Harry, withdraw thyself; thou bleed'st too much.

Lord John of Lancaster, go you with him P. John. Not I, my lord, unless I did bleed

P. Hen. I do beseech your majesty, make up, Lest your retirement do amaze your friends.

K. Hen. I will do so.-My Lord of Westmoreland, lead him to his tent.

West. Come, my lord, I will lead you to your tent.

P. Hen. Lead me, my lord? I do not need your help:

And God forbid a shallow scratch should drive The Prince of Wales from such a field as this. Where stain'd nobility lies trodden on And rebels' arms triumph in massacres!

P. John. We breathe too long:-come, cousin Westmoreland,

Our duty this way lies; for God's sake, come. [Exeunt P. JOHN and West

P. Hen. By heaven, thou hast deceived me. Lancaster; I did not think thee lord of such a spirit: Before, I lov'd thee as a brother, John; But now I do respect thee as my soul.

K. Hen. I saw him hold Lord Percy at the point With lustier maintenance than I did look for Of such an ungrown warrior.

P. Hen.O, this boy Lends mettle to us all. Exit.

Alarums. Enter Douglas.

Doug. Another king! they grow like Hydra's heads:

I am the Douglas, fatal to all those That wear those colours on them:-What art thou. That counterfeit'st the person of a king? K. Hen. The king himself, who, Douglas, grieves at heart, So many of his shadows thou hast met, And not the very king. I have two boys And not the very king. I have two boy Seek Percy and thyself about the field: But, seeing thou fall'st on me so luckily, I will assay thee; so, defend thyself!

Doug. I fear, thou art another counterfeit; And yet, in faith, thou bear'st thee like a king: But mine I am sure thou art, whoe'er thou be, And thus I win thee.

[They fight; the KING being in danger.

Re-enter P. HENRY.

P. Hen. Hold up thy head, vile Scot, or thou art like Never to hold it up again! the spirits Of Shirley, Stafford, Blunt, are in my arms: It is the Prince of Wales that threatens thee; Who never promiseth but he means to pay. They fight; DOUGLAS flies.

Cheerly, my lord: how fares your grace?-Sir Nicholas Gawsey hath for succour sent, And so hath Clifton: I'll to Clifton straight.

K. Hen. Stay, and breathe awhile:-Thou hast redeem'd thy lost opinion; And show'd thou mak'st some tender of my life In this fair rescue thou hast brought to me.

P. Hen. O God, they did me too much injury

That ever said I hearken'd for your death! If it were so, I might have let alone The insulting hand of Douglas over you, Which would have been as speedy in your end As all the poisonous potions in the world, And sav'd the treacherous labour of your son.

K. Hen. Make up to Clifton, I'll to Sir Exit.

Nicholas Gawsey.

Glend. Come, come, Lord Mortimer; you are as slow
As hot Lord Percy is ou fire to go.
By this our book is drawn; we will but seal,
And then to horse immediately.

Mort. With all my heart.

Scene II.—London. A Room in the Palace Enter King Henry, Prince Henry, and Lords.

K. Hen. Lords, give us leave; the Prince of Wales and I hand. Must have some conference; but be near at For we shall presently have need of you.

I know not whether God will have it so,
For some displeasing service I have done,
For some displeasing service I have done,
That, in his secret doom, out of my blood
He'll breed revengement and a scourge for me;
But thou dost, in thy passages of life,
Make me believe that thon art only mark'd
For the hot vengeance and the rod of heaven
To punish my mistreadings. Tell me else,
Could such inordinate and low desires,
Such poor, such bere, such lewd, such mean attempts,

Such barren pleasures, rude society,
As thou art match'd withal and grafted to,
Accompany the greatness of thy blood,
And hold their level with thy princely heart?
P. Hen. So please your majesty, I would I could

could

Quit all offences with as clear excuse,
As well as I am doubtless I can purge

Myself of many I am charg'd withal:
Yet such extenuation let me beg.
As, in reproof of many tales devis'd,—
Which oft the ear of greatness needs must hear,—

By smiling pick-thanks and base newsmongers, I may, for some things true, wherein my youth Hath faulty wander'd and irregular, Find pardon on my true submission.

K. Hen. God pardon thee!—yet let me wonder, Harry,

At thy affections, which do hold a wing Quite from the flight of all thy ancestors. Thy place in council thou hast rudely lost, Which by thy younger brother is supplied; And art almost an alien to the hearts Of all the court and princes of my blood: The hope and expectation of thy time Is ruin'd; and the soul of every man Prophetically does forethink thy fall. Had I so lavish of my presence been, So common-backney'd in the eyes of men, So stale and cheap to rulgar company,— Opinion, that did help me to the crown, Had still kept loyal to possession, And left me in reputeless banishment, A fellow of no mark nor likelihood. By being seldom seen, I could not stir But, like a comet, I was wonder'd at; That men would tell their children, This is he, Others would say,—Where, which is Bolingbroke?

And then I stole all courtesy from heaven, And dress'd myself in such humility

That I did pluck allegiance from men's hearts, Loud shouts and salutations from their mouths, Even in the presence of the crowned king. Thus did I keep my person fresh and new; My presence, like a robe pontifical, Ne'er seen but wonder'd at: and so my state, Seldom but sumptuous, showed like a feast, And won by rareness such solemnity. The shipping king, he ambled up and down With shallow jesters and rash bavin wits. Soon kindled and soon burn'd: carded his state; Mingled his royalty with carping fools; Had his great name profaned with their scorns; And gave his countenance, against his name, To laugh at gibing boys, and stand the push Of every beardless vain comparative: Grew a companion to the common streets, Enfeoff'd himself to popularity; That, being daily swallow'd by men's eyes, They surfeited with honey, and began To loathe the taste of sweetness, whereof a little More than a little is by much too much. So, when he had occasion to be seen, He was but as the cuckoo is in June, Heard, nor regarded, - seen, but with such eyes, As, sick and blunted with community, Afford no extraordinary gaze, Such as is bent on sun-like majesty When it shines seldom in admiring eyes: But rather drowz'd, and hung their eyelids down, Stept in his face, and render'd such aspect As cloudy men use to their adversaries, Being with his presence, glutted, gorg'd, and full.

And in that very line, Harry, stand'st thon;
For thou hast lost thon princely privilege
With rile participation: not an eye
But is a-weary of thy common sight,
Sare mine, which hath desir'd to see thee more;
Which now doth that I would not have it do,
Make blind itself with foolish tenderness.

P. Hen. I shall hereafter, my thrice-gracions lord.

Be more myself.

K. Hen. For all the world, As then art to this hour, was Richard then When I from France set foot at Ravenspurg; And even as I was then is Perry now. Now, by my sceptre, and my soul to boot, He hath more worthy interest to the state Than thou, the shadow of succession: For, of no right, nor colour like to right, He doth fill fields with harness in the realm; Turns heads against the lion's armed jaws; And, being no more in debt to years than thon, Leads ancient lords and reverend bishops on To bloody battles and to bruising arms. What never-dying honour hath he got Against renowned Douglas! whose high deeds, Whose hot incursions, and great name in arms, Holds from all soldiers chief majority And military title capital [Christ: Through all the kingdoms that acknowledge Thrice bath this Hotspur Mars in swathingclothes,

This infant werrior, in his enterprises
Discomfited great Dougles; ta'en him once,
Enlarged him, and made a friend of him,
To fill the mouth of deep defiance up,

The trumpet sounds retreat; the day is ours. Come, brother, let's to the highest of the field, To see what friends are living, who are dead.

Exeunt P. HENRY and P. JOHN. Fal. I'll follow, as they say, for reward. that rewards me, God reward him! If I do grow great, I'll grow less; for I'll purge, and leave sack, and live cleanly, as a nobleman should do. [Exit, bearing off the body.

Scene V.—Another part of the Field.

Enter KING HENRY, The Trumpets sound. PRINCE HENRY, PRINCE JOHN, WESTMORE-LAND, and others, with Worcester and VERNON prisoners.

K. Hen. Thus ever did rebellion find rebuke.-Ill-spirited Worcester! did we not send grace, Pardon, and terms of love to all of you? And wouldst thou turn our offers contrary? Misuse the tenor of thy kinsman's trust? Three knights upon our party slain to-day, A noble earl, and many a creature else, Had been alive this hour, If, like a Christian, thou hadst truly borne Betwixt our armies true intelligence Wor. What I have done my safety urg'd me to. And I embrace this fortune patiently, Since not to be avoided it falls on me. K. Hen. Bear Worcester to the death, and Vernon too: Other offenders we will pause upon.

(Exeunt Wor. and VER., guarded. How goes the field?

P. Hen. The noble Scot, Lord Douglas. when he saw The fortune of the day quite turn'd from him. The noble Percy slain, and all his men Upon the foot of fear,—fled with the rest; And falling from a hill, he was so bruis'd That the pursuers took him. At my tent The Douglas is; and I beseech your grace I may dispose of him.

K. Hen. With all my heart.
P. Hen. Then, brother John of Lancaster, to you

This honourable bounty shall belong: Go to the Douglas, and deliver him Up to his pleasure, ransomless and free: His valour, shown upon our crests to-day Hath taught us how to cherish such high deeds Even in the bosoms of our adversaries.

P. John. I thank your grace for this high courtesy,

Which I shall give away immediately. K. Hen. Then this remains,—that we divide our power. You, son John, and my cousin Westmoreland,

Towards York shall bend you with your dearest speed, To meet Northumberland and the prelate

Scroop,

Who, as we hear, are busily in arms: Myself,-and you, son Harry,-will towards Wales,

To fight with Glendower and the Earl of March. Rebellion in this land shall lose his sway, Meeting the check of such another day: And since this business so fair is done, Let us not leave till all our own be won. iExeunt.

Enter Hostess.

How now, Dame Partlet the ben! have you inquired yet who picked my pocket?

Host. Why, Sir John, what do you think, Sir John? do you think I keep thieves in my house? I have searched, I have inquired, so has my hushand, man by man, boy by boy, servant by servant: the tithe of a hair was never lost in my house hefore.

Fal. You lie, hostess: Bardolph was shaved, and lost many a hair; and I'll be sworn my pocket was picked. Go to, you are a woman,

Host. Who, I? no; I defy thee: God's light, I was never called so in mine own house hefore.

Fal. Go to, I know you well enough.

Host. No, Sir John; you do not know me,
Sir John. I know you, Sir John: you owe me money, Sir John; and now you pick a quarrel to beguile me of it: I hought you a dozen of shirts to your hack.

Fal. Dowlas, filthy dowlas: I have given them away to bakers' wives, and they have made holters of them.

Host. Now, as I am a true woman, holland of eight shillings an ell. You owe money here hesides, Sir John, for your diet and by-drink-ings, and money lent you, four-and-twenty pound.

Fal. He had his part of it; let him pay.

Host. He? alas, he is poor; he hath nothing. Fal. How, poor? look upon his face; what call you rich? let them coin his nose, let them coin his cheeks: I'll not pay a denier. will you make a younker of me? shall I not take mine ease in mine inn, hut I shall have my pocket picked? I have lost a seal-ring of my grandfather's worth forty mark.

Host. O Jesu, I have heard the prince tell him, I know not how oft, that that ring was

Fal. Howl the prince is a Jack, a sneak-cup: 'sblood, an he were here I would cudgel him like a dog if he would say so.

Enter PRINCE HENRY and Poins, marching. FALSTAFF meets the PRINCE, playing on his truncheon like a fife.

Fal. How now, ladl is the wind in that door,

i' faith? must we all march?

Bard. Yea, two and two, Newgate-fashion.
Host. My lord, I pray you, hear me.
P. Hen. What sayest thou, Mistress Quickly? How does thy hushand? I love him well; he is an honest man.

Host. Good my lord, hear me.

Fal. Prythee, let her alone, and list to me.

P. Hen. What sayest thou, Jack?

Fal. The other night I fell asleep here hehind the arras, and had my pocket picked: this house is turned bawdy-house; they pick pockets.

P. Hen. What didst thou lose, Jack?
Fal. Wilt thou helieve me, Hal? three or four honds of forty pound a-piece, and a seal-ring of my grandfather's.

P. Hen. A trifle, some eight-penny matter.

Host. So I told him, my lord; and I said I heard your grace say so: and, my lord, he confess, then, you picked my pocket?

speaks most vilely of you, like a foul-mouthed man as he is, and said he would cudgel you. P. Hen. Whatl he did not?

Host. There's neither faith, truth, nor wom-anhood in me else.

Fal. There's no more faith in thee than in a stewed prune; nor no more truth in thee than in a drawn fox; and for womanhood, Maid Marian may he the deputy's wife of the ward to thee. Go, you thing, go.

Host. Say, what thing? what thing?

Fal. What thing! why, a thing to thank God

Host. I am no thing to thank God on, I would thou shouldst know it; I am an honest man's wife; and, setting thy knighthood aside, thou art a knave to call me so.

Fal. Setting thy womanhood aside, thou art a heast to say otherwise.

Host. Say, what heast, thou knave, thou? Fal. What beast! why, an otter. P. Hen. An otter, Sir John! why an otter?

Fal. Why, she's neither fish nor flesh; a man knows not where to have her.

Host. Thou art an unjust man in saying so: thou or any man knows where to have me, thou knave; thou!

P. Hen. Thou sayest true, hostess; and he slanders thee most grossly.

Host. So he doth you, my lord; and said this other day you ought him a thousand pound.

P. Hen. Sirrah, do I owe you a thousand

Fal. A thousand pound, Hal! a million: thy love is worth a million; thou owest me thy love. Host. Nay, my lord, he call'd you Jack, and said he would cudgel you.

Fal. Did I, Bardolph?

Bard. Indeed, Sir John, you said so.
Fal. Yea,—if he said my ring was copper.
P. Hen. I say 'tis copper: darest thou he as good as thy word now?

Fal. Why, Hal, thou knowest, as thou art hut man, I dare: hut as thou art prince, I fear thee, as I fear the roaring of the lion's whelp.

P. Hen. And why not as the lion? Fal. The king himself is to he feared as the lion: dost thou think I'll fear thee as I fear thy father? nay, an I do, I pray God my girdle break.

P. Hen. O, if it should, how would thy gutsfall about thy knees! But, sirrah, there's no room for faith, truth, nor honesty, in this hosom of thine,-it is all filled up with guts and midriff. Charge an honest woman with picking thy pocket! Why, thou whoreson, impudent, embossed rascal, if there were anything in thy pocket hat tavern-reckonings, memorandums of bawdy-houses, and one poor penny-worth of sugar-candy to make thee long-winded,-if thy pocket were enriched with any other injuries hut these, I am a villain: and yet you will stand to it; you will not pocket-up wrong: art thou not asbamed?

Fal. Dost thou hear, Hal? thou knowest in the state of innocency Adam fell; and what should poor Jack Falstaff do in the days of villainy? Thou seest I have more flesh than another man, and therefore more frailty.

I speak of peace, while covert enmity, Under the smile of safety, wounds the world: And who but Rumour, who but only I, Make fearful musters and prepar'd defence; Whilst the big year, swoln with some other grief, Is thought with child by the stern tyrant war, And no such matter? Rumour is a pipe Blown by surmises, jealousies, conjectures; And of so easy and so plain a stop That the blunt monster with uncounted heads, The still-discordant wavering multitude, Can play upon it. but what need I thus My well-known body to anatomize Among my household? Why is Rumour here? I run before King Harry's victory; Who, in a bloody field by Shrewsbury, [troops, Hath beaten down young Hotspur and his Quenching the flame of bold rebellion Even with the rebel's blood. But what mean I To speak so true at first? my office is To noise abroad that Harry Monmouth fell Under the wrath of noble Hotspur's sword; And that the king before the Douglas' rage Stoop'd his anointed head as low as death. This have I rumour'd through the peasant tawns

Between that royal field of Shrewsbury And this worm-eaten hold of ragged stone, Where Hotspur's father, old Northumberland, Lies crafty-sick: the posts come tiring on, And not a man of them brings other news Than they have learn'd of me: from Rumour's true wrongs. tongues They bring smooth comforts false, worse than Exit.

ACT I.

Scene I .- The same.

. The Porter before the Gate; enter LORD BARDOLPH.

L. Bord. Who keeps the gate here, ho?-Where is the earl?

Port. What shall I say you are?

L. Bard. Tell thou the earl That the Lord Bardolph doth attend him here. Port. His lordship is walk'd forth into the orchard:

Please it your honour, knock but at the gate, And he himself will answer.

L. Bard.

Here comes the earl. Exit Porter.

Enter Northumberland.

North. What news, Lord Bardolph? every minute now

Should be the father of some stratagem: The times are wild; contention, like a horse, Full of high feeding, madly hath broke loose And bears down all before him.

L. Bard. Noble earl. I bring you certain news from Shrewsbury.

North. Good, an God will!

As good as heart can wish:-The king is almost wounded to the death; And, in the fortune of my lord your son Prince Harry slain outright; and both the Hohn, Blunts

And Westmoreland, and Stafford, fled the field: And Harry Monmouth's brawn, the hulk Sir John,

Is prisoner to your son: O, such a day, So fought, so follow'd, and so fairly won, Came not till now to dignify the times, Since Caesar's fortunes!

North. How is this deriv'd? Saw you the field? came you from Shrewsbury? L. Bard. I spake with one, my lord, that came from thence; A gentleman well bred and of good name,

That freely render'd me these news for true. North. Here comes my servant Travers, whom I sent

On Tuesday last to listen after news.

L. Bard. My lord, I over-rode him on the way;

And he is furnish'd with no certainties More than he haply may retail from me.

Enter TRAVERS.

North. Now, Travers, what good tidings come with you? fback Tra. My lord, Sir John Umfrevile turn'd me With joyful tidings; and, being better hors'd, Out-rode me. After him came spurring hard A gentleman, almost forspent with speed, That stopp'd by me to breathe his bloodied horse.

He ask'd the way to Chester; and of him I did demand what news from Shrewsbury. He told me that rebellion had bad luck, And that young Harry Percy's spur was cold. With that, he gave his able horse the head, And, bending forward, struck his armed heels Against the panting sides of his poor jade Up to the rowel-head; and starting so, He seem'd in running to devour the way, Staying no longer question. Ha!-Again: North.

Said he young Harry Percy's spur was cold? Of Hotspur, coldspur? that rebellion Had met ill-luck?

My lord, I'll tell you what; L. Bord. If my young lord your son have not the day, Upon mine honour, for a silken point

I'll give my barony: never talk of it.

North. Why should the gentleman that rode by Travers

Give, then, such instances of loss? Who, he? L. Bord. He was some hilding fellow, that had stolea The horse he rode on; and, upon my life, Spoke at a venture.—Look, here comes more news.

Enter MORTON.

North. Yea, this man's brow, like to a title-leaf, Foretells the nature of a tragic volume:

So looks the strand, whereon the imperious flood

Hath left a witness'd usurpation,-Say, Morton, didst thou come from Shrewsbury?

Mor. I ran from Shrewsbury, my noble lord; Where hateful death put on his ugliest mask Kill'd by the hand of Douglas: young Prince | To fright our party.

It lends a lustre and more great opinion, A larger dare to our great enterprise, Than if the earl were here: for men must think, If we, without his help, can make a head To push against the kingdom, with his help We shall o'erturn it topsy-turvy down.

Yet all goes well, yet all our joints are whole.

Doug. As heart can think: there is not such e word

Spoke in Scotland as this term of fear.

Enter SIR RICHARD VERNON.

Hot. My cousin Vernon! welcome, by my soul.

Soul.

Wer. Pray God my news be worth a welcome, be Earl of Westmoreland, seven thousand he Earl of Westmoreland, seven thousand learn. This bottle makes an angel. The Earl of Westmoreland, seven thousand

Is marching hitherwards; with him Prince -John.

Hot. No harm:-what more? And further, I have learn'd Ver. The king himself in person is set forth, Or hitherwards intended speedily, With strong and mighty preparation ison.

The nimble-footed madcap Prince of Wales And his comrades, that daff'd the world aside, And bid it pass?

All fornish'd, all in arms; Ver. All plum'd like estridges, that wing the wind; Bated like eagles having lately bath'd; Glittering in golden coats, like images; As full of spirit as the month of May, And gorgeous as the sun at midsummer; Wanton 25 youthful gosts, wild as young buils. I saw young Harry,—with his beaver on, His cuisses on his thighs, gallantly arm'd,— Rise from the ground like feather'd Mercury, And vaulted with such ease into his seat, As if an angel dropp'd down from the clouds. To turn and wind a fiery Pegasus, And witch the world with noble horsemanship.

Hof. No more, no more; worse than the sun in March,

This praise doth nourish agues. Let them come.

They come like sacrifices in their trim, And to the fire'ey'd maid of smoky war. All hot and bleeding, will we offer them: The mailed Mars shall on his altar sit, Up to the ears in blood. I am on fire To hear this rich reprisal is so nigh.

horse, Who is to bear me, like a thunderbolt, Against the bosom of the Prince of Wales: Harry to Harry shall, hot horse to horse, Meet, and ne'er part till one drop down a corse.-O that Glendower were come!

There is more news: Ver. I learn'd in Worcester, as I rode glong, He cannot draw his power this fourteen days. Doug. That's the worst tidings that I hear (sound. of yet.

Wor. Ay, by my faith, that bears a frosty! Hot. What may the king's whole battle reach; unto?

Ver. To thirty thousand.

Hot. Forty let it be: My father and Glendower being both away. The powers of us may serve so great a day. Come, let us take a muster speedily: Doomsday is near; die all, die merrily.

Doug. Talk not of dying; I am out of fear

Of death or death's hand for this one half-year.

Scene II .- A Public Road near Coventry.

Enter Falstaff and Bardolph.

Fcl. Bardolph, get thee before to Coventry; fill me a bottle of sack; our soldiers shall march

Fcl. An if it do, take it for thy labour; and if it make twenty, take them all; I'll answer the coinage. Bid my lieutenant Peto meet me at the town's end.

Bard. I will, captain: farewell. Exit. Fal. If I be not ashamed of my soldiers. I am a soused gurnet. I have misused the king's Hot. He shall be welcome too. Where is his hundred and fifty soldiers, three hundred and press damnably. I have got, in exchange of a odd pounds. I press me none but good householders, yeomen's sons; inquire me out contracted bachelors, such as had been asked twice on the bans; such a commodity of warm slaves as had as lief hear the devil as a drum; such as fear the report of a caliver worse than a struck fowl or a hurt wild-duck. I pressed me none but such toasts-and-butter, with hearts in their bellies no bigger than pins' heads, and they have bought out our services; and now my whole charge consists of ancients, corporals, lientenants, gentlemen of companies, slaves as ragged as Lezarus in the painted cloth, where the glutton's dogs licked his sores; and such as, indeed, were never soldiers, but discarded unjust serving-men, younger sons to younger brothers, revolted tapsters, and ostlers tradefallen; the cankers of a calm world and a long peace; ten times more dishonourable ragged than an old-faced ancient; and such have I, to fill up the rooms of them that have bought out their services, that you would think that I had a hundred and fifty tattered prodigals lately come from swine-keeping, from eating draff and husks. A mad fellow met me on the way, and told me I had unloaded all the gibbets, and And yet not ours.—Come, let me taste my pressed the dead bodies. No eye hath seen such scarecrows. I'll not march through Coventry with them, that's fist:-nsy, and the villains march wide betwirt the legs, as if they had gives on; for, indeed, I had the most of them out of prison. There's but a shirt and n half in all my company; and the half-shirt is two napkins tacked together and thrown over the shoulders like a herald's cost without sleeves; and the shirt, to say the truth, stolen from my host at Saint Alban's, or the red-nose innkeeper of Daventry. But that's all one; they'll find linen enough on every hedge.

Enfer PRINCE HENRY CHI WESTMORELAND.

P. Hen. How now, blown Jack! how now, [quilt!

Or what hath this bold enterprise brought forth, More than that being which was like to be?

L. Bard. We all that are engaged to this loss Knew that we ventur'd on such dangerous seas, That if we wrought out life, 'twas ten to one: And yet we ventur'd, for the gain propos'd Chok'd the respect of likely peril fear'd; And since we are o'erset, venture again. Come, we will all put forth, body and goods.

Mor. 'Tis more than time: and, my most noble lord, I hear for certain, and do speak the truth,— The gentle Archbisbop of York is up With well-appointed powers: he is a man Who with a double surety binds his followers. My lord your son had only but the corpse, But shadows and the shows of men, to fight: For that same word, rebellion, did divide The action of their bodies from their souls; And they did fight with queasiness, constrain'd. As men drink potions; that their weapons only Seem'd on our side, but, for their spirits and souls,

This word, rebellion, it had froze them up, As fish are in a pond. But now the archbishop Turns insurrection to religion: Suppos'd sincere and holy in his thoughts, He's follow'd both with body and with mind; And doth enlarge his rising with the blood Of fair King Richard, scrap'd from Pomfret stones;

Derives from heaven his quarrel and his cause; Tells them he doth bestride a bleeding land, Gasping for life under great Bolingbroke; And more and less do flock to follow him.

North. I knew of this before; but, to speak

This present grief had wip'd it from my mind. Go in with me; and counsel every man The aptest way for safety and revenge. Get posts and letters, and make friends with speed.-

Never so few, and never yet more need.

(Exeunt.

Scene II .- London. A Street.

Enter Sir John Falstaff, with his Page.

bearing his sword and buckler. Fal. Sirrah, you giant, what says the doctor to my water?

Page. He said, sir, the water itself was a good healthy water; but, for the party that owed it, he might have more diseases than he knew

Fal. Men of all sorts take a pride to gird at me: the brain of this foolish-compounded clay, man, is not able to invent anything that tends to laughter, more than I invent or is invented on me: I am not only witty in myself, but the cause that wit is in other men. I do here walk before thee like a sow that hath overwhelmed all her litter but one. If the prince put thee into my service for any other reason than to set me off, why then I have no judgment. whoreson mandrake, thou art fitter to be worn in my cap than to wait at my heels. set you neither in gold nor silver, but in vile | Doth not the king lack subjects? Do not the set you neither in gold nor silver, but in vile | rebels need soldiers? Though it be a shame to apparel, and send you back again to your master, for a jewel, the juvenal, the prince your master, whose chin is not yet fledged. I will sooner have a beard grow in the palm of my hand than he shall get one on his cheek; and yet he will not stick to say his face is a faceroyal: God may finish it when he will, it is not a hair amiss yet: he may keep it still as a faceroyal, for a barber shall never earn sixpence out of it; and yet he will be crowing as if he had writ man ever since his father was a bachelor. He may keep his own grace, but he is almost out of mine, I can assure him.—What said Master Dumbleton about the satin for my short clock and my slops?

Page. He said, sir, you should procure him better assurance than Bardolph: he would not take his bond and yours; he liked not the security.

Fal. Let him be damned, like the glutton! may his tongue be hotter!-A whoreson Achitophel! a rascally yea-forsooth knavel to bear a gentleman in hand, and then stand upon security!--The whoreson smooth-pates do now wear nothing but high shoes, and bunches of keys at their girdles; and if a man is thorough with them in honest taking up, then they must stand upon security. I had as lief they would put ratsbane in my mouth as offer to stop it with Ilooked he should have sent me twosecurity. and-twenty yards of satin, as I am a true knight, and he sends me security. Well, he may sleep in security; for he bath the horn of abundance, and the lightness of his wife shines through it: and yet cannot he see, though he have his own lantern to light him.—Where's Bardolph?

Page. He's gone into Smithfield to buy your worship a horse.

Fal. I bought him in Paul's, and he'll buy me a horse in Smithfield: an I could get me but a wife, in the stews, I were manned, horsed, and wived.

Page. Sir, here comes the nobleman that committed the prince for striking him about Bardolph.

Fal. Wait close; I will not see him.

Enter the Lord Chief-Justice and an Attendant.

Ch. Just. What's he that goes there? Atten. Falstaff, an't please your lordship. Ch. Just. He that was in question for the robbery?

Atten. He, my lord: but he hath since done good service at Shrewsbury; and, as I hear, is now going with some charge to the Lord John of Lancaster.

Ch. Just. What, to York? Call him back

again.

Atten. Sir John Falstaffl Fal. Boy, tell him, I am deaf. Page. You must speak louder; my master is Ch. Just. I am sure he is, to the hearing of anything good.—Go, pluck him by the elbow;

I must speak with him. Atten. Sir John,-

Fal. What! a young knave, and begging! Is there not wars? is there not employment? Proceeded further; cut me off the heads Of all the favourites that the absent king In deputation left behind him here, When he was personal in the Irish war. Blunt. Tut, I came not to hear this.

Then to the point. Hot. In short time after, he depos'd the king; Soon after that, depriv'd him of his life; And, in the neck of that, task'd the whole state: To make that worse, sufier'd his kinsman March,

Who is, if every owner were well plac'd, Indeed his king,-to be incag'd in Wales There without ransom to lie forfeited; Disgrac'd me in my happy victories; Sought to entrap me by intelligence; Rated my uncle from the council-board; In rage dismiss'd my father from the court; Broke oath on oath, committed wrong on

And, in conclusion, drove us to seek out This head of safety; and withal to pry Into his title, the which we find Too indirect for long continuance.

Blunt. Shall I return this answer to the king? Hot. Not so, Sir Walter: we'll withdraw awhile.

Go to the king; and let there be impawn'd Some surety for a safe return again, And in the morning early shall my uncle Bring him our purposes: and so, farewell. Blunt. I would you would accept of grace and love.

Hot. And may be so we shall. Blunt. Pray God you do! Exeunt.

A Room in the ARCH-Scene IV.—York. BISHOP'S House.

Enter the ARCHBISHOP OF YORK, and SIR MICHAEL.

Arch. Hie, good Sir Michael; hear this sealed With winged haste to the lord marshal;

This to my cousin Scroop; and all the rest To whom they are directed. If you knew How much they do import, you would make haste.

Sir M. My good lord, I guess their tenor.

Like enough you do. Arch. To-morrow, good Sir Michael, is a day Wherein the fortune of ten thousand men Must bide the touch; for, sir, at Shrewsbury, As I am truly given to understand, The king, with mighty and quick-raised power, Meets with Lord Harry; and I fear, Sir Michael, What with the sickness of Northumberland,-Whose power was in the first proportion,-And what with Owen Glendower's absence thence, Who with them was a rated sinew too. And comes not in, o'erruled by prophecies,-I fear the power of Percy is too weak

To wage an instant trial with the king.
Sir M. Why, my good lord, you need not fear; there is Douglas,

And Lord Mortimer.

Arch. . No, Mortimer is not there. For you my staff of office did I hreak

Sir M. But there is Mordake, Vernon, Lord Нагту Регсу, And there is my Lord of Worcester; and a head

Of gallant warriors, noble gentlemen.

Arch. And so there is; but yet the king hath drawn

The special head of all the land together:-The Prince of Wales, Lord John of Lancaster, The noble Westmoreland, and warlike Blunt; And many more corrivals and dear men Of estimation and command in arms. [oppos'd.

Sir M. Doubt not, my lord, they shall be well Arch. I hope no less, yet needful 'tis to fear; And, to prevent the worst, Sir Michael, speed: For if Lord Percy thrive not, ere the king Dismiss his power, he means to visit us,-For he hath heard of our confederacy, And 'tis but wisdom to make strong against him: Therefore make haste. I must go write again To other friends; and so, farewell, Sir Michael. (Exeunt severally.

ACT V.

Scene I .- The King's Camp near Shrewsbury.

Enter King Henry, Prince Henry, Prince JOHN OF LANCASTER, SIR WALTER BLUNT, and SIR JOHN FALSTAFF.

K. Hen. How bloodily the sun hegins to peer Above you bosky hill! the day looks pale At his distemperature.

The southern wind P. Hen. Doth play the trumpet to his purposes; And hy his hollow whistling in the leaves Foretells a tempest and a hlustering day.

K. Hen. Then with the losers let it sympa-

For nothing can seem foul to those that win-Trumpets sound.

Enter WORCESTER and VERNON.

How now, my lord of Worcesterl 'tis not well That you and I should meet upon such terms You have deceiv'd our trust; As now we meet. And made us doff our easy rohes of peace, To crush our old limbs in ungentle steel; This is not well, my lord, this is not well. What say you to it? will you again unknit This churlish knot of all-abborred war? And move in that obedient orb again Where you did give n fair and natural light; And be no more an exhal'd meteor, A prodigy of fear, and a portent

Of broached mischief to the unhorn times? Wor. Hear me, my liege: For mine own part, I could he well content To entertain the lag-end of my life

With quiet hours; for, I do protest, I have not sought the day of this dislike. K. Hen. You have not sought it! how comes it, then? (it. Fal. Rebellion lay in his way, and he found P. Hen. Peace, chewet, peacel [looks Wor. It pleas'd your majesty to turn your Of favour from myself and all our house; And yet I must remember you, my lord, We were the first and dearest of your friends.

Fal. God send the companion a better! prince! I cannot rid my hands of him.

Ch. Just. Well, the king hath severed you and Prince Harry: I hear you are going with Lord John of Lancaster against the archbishop and the Earl of Northumberland.

Fal. Yea; I thank your pretty sweet wit for But look you, pray, all you that kiss my Lady Peace at home, that our armies join not in a hot day; for, by the Lord, I take hut two shirts out with me, and I mean not to sweat extraordinarily: if it be a hot day, and I brandish anything but my bottle, I would I might never spit white again. There is not a dangerous action can creep out his head but I am thrust upon it: well. I cannot last ever: but it was always yet the trick of our English nation, if they have a good thing, to make it too common. If you will needs say I am an old man, you should give me rest. I would to God my name were not so terrible to the enemy as it is: I were better to be eaten to death with rust than to be scoured to nothing with perpetual motion.

Ch. Just. Well, be honest, be honest; and God bless your expedition!

Fal. Will your lordship lend me a thousand pound to furnish me forth?

Ch. Just. Not a penny, not a penny; you are too impatient to bear crosses. Fare you well: commend me to my cousin Westmoreland.

[Exeunt Chief-Justice and Attendant. Fal. If I do, fillip me with a three-man beetle.—A man can no more separate age and covetousness than he can part young limbs and lechery: hut the gout galls the one, and the pox pinches the other; and so both the diseases prevent my curses .- Boy!-

Page. Sir?

Fal. What money is in my purse? Page. Seven groats and two pence.

Fal. I can get no remedy against this consumption of the purse: horrowing only lingers and lingers it out, but the disease is incurable. -Go hear this letter to my Lord of Lancaster; this to the prince; this to the Earl of Westmoreland; and this to old Mistress Ursula, whom I have weekly sworn to marry since I perceived the first white hair on my chin. About it; you know where to find me. Exit. Page.] A pox of this gout! or, a gout of this pox! for the one or the other plays the rogue with my great toe. It is no matter if I do halt; I have the wars for my colour, and my pension shall seem the more reasonable. good wit will make use of anything. I will turn diseases to commodity. Exit.

Scene III .- York. A Room in the Arch-BISHOP'S Palace.

Enter the Archbishop of York, the Lords HASTINGS, MOWBRAY, and BARDOLPH.

Arch. Thus have you heard our cause and know our means; And, my most noble friends, I pray you all

Speak plainly your opinions of our hopes:-And first, lord marshal, what say you to it? Mowb. I well allow the occasion of our arms;

But gladly would he better satisfied

How, in our means, we should advance ourselves

To look with forehead bold and hig enough Upon the power and puissance of the king. Hast. Our present musters grow upon the

To five-and-twenty thousand men of choice; And our supplies live largely in the hope Of great Northumberland, whose bosom bures With an incensed fire of injuries.

L. Bard. The question, then, Lord Hastings, standeth thus;

Whether our present five-and-twenty thousand May hold up head without Northumberland?

Host. With him, we may. Ay, marry, there's the point: But if without him we be thought too feeble, My judgment is, we should not step too far Till we had his assistance by the band; For, in a theme so bloody-fac'd as this, Conjecture, expectation, and surmise Of aids uncertain, should not he admitted.

Arch. 'Tis very true, Lord Bardolph; for,

indeed,

It was young Hotspur's case at Shrewshury. L. Bard. It was, my lord; who lin'd himself with hope,

Eating the air on promise of supple. Flattering himself with project of a power Much smaller than the smallest of his thoughts: And so, with great imagination,

Proper to madmen, led his powers to death, And, winking, leap'd into destruction. Hast. But, hy your leave, it never yet did

To lay down likelihoods and forms of hope. L. Bard. Yes, in this present quality of war;-Indeed, the instant action,—a cause on foot,— Lives so in hope, as in an early spring We see the appearing buds; which, to prove Hope gives not so much warrant, as despair That frosts will bite them. When we mean to build,

We first survey the plot, then draw the model; And when we see the figure of the house, Then must we rate the cost of the erection; Which, if we find outweighs ability, What do we then but draw anew the model In fewer offices, or at least desist To build at all? Much more, in this great Which is almost to pluck a kingdom down And set another up,—should we survey The plot of situation and the model, Consent upon a sure foundation, Question surveyors, know our own estate, How able such a work to undergo, To weigh against his opposite; or else, We fortify in paper and in figures, Using the names of men instead of men: Like one that draws the model of a house Beyond his power to huild it; who, half through, Gives o'er, and leaves his part-created cost A naked subject to the weeping clouds, And waste for churlish winter's tyranny.

Hast. Grant that our hopes, -yet likely of fair hirth,-

Should be still-born, and that we now possess'd The utmost man of expectation; I think we are a body strong enough, Even as we are, to equal with the king.

Exit.

And an adopted name of privilege,-A hare-brain'd Hotspur, govern'd by a spleen: All his offences live upon my head And on his father's: we did train him on; And, his corruption being ta'en from us, We, as the spring of all, shall pay for all. Therefore, good cousin, let not Harry know, In any case the offer of the king. Ver. Deliver what you will, I'll say 'tis so.

Here comes your cousin.

Enter HOTSPUR and DOUGLAS; Officers and Soldiers behind.

Hol. My uncle is return'd: -deliver up My Lord of Westmoreland .- Uncle, what news? Wor. The king will bid you battle presently. Doug. Defy him by the Lord of Westmoreland.

Hot. Lord Douglas, go you and tell him so. Doug. Marry, and shall, and very willingly.

Wor. There is no seeming mercy in the king. Hot. Did you beg any? God forbid! Wor. I told him gently of our grievances, Of his oath-breaking; which he mended thus,-By now forswearing that he is forsworn: He calls us rebels, traitors; and will scourge With hanghty arms this hateful name in us.

Re-enter Douglas.

Doug. Arm, gentlemen; to aims! for I have thrown

A brave defiance in King Henry's teeth, And Westmoreland, that was engag'd, did bear

Which cannot choose but bring him quickly on. Wor. The Prince of Wales stepp'd forth before the king,

And, nephew, challeng'd you to single fight. Hot. O, would the quarrel lay upon our heads; And that no man might draw short breath to-But I and Harry Monmouth! Tell me, tell me, How show'd his tasking? seem'd it in contempt? Ver. No, by my soul; I never in my life

Did hear a challenge urg'd more modestly, Unless a brother should a brother dare To gentle exercise and proof of arms. He gave you all the duties of a man; Trimm'd up your praises with a princely tongue; Spoke your deservings like a chronicle; Making you ever better than his praise, By still dispraising praise valu'd with you: And, which became him like a prince indeed, He made a blushing cital of himself; And chid his truent youth with such a grace, As if he master'd there a double spirit, Of teaching and of learning instantly. There did he pause: but let me tell the world,-If he outlive the envy of this day, England did never owe so sweet a hope, So much misconstru'd in his wantonness.

Hot. Cousin, I think thou art enamoured Upon his follies: never did I hear Of any prince so wild o' liberty. But be he as he will, yet once ere night I will embrace him with a soldier's arm, That he shall shrink under my courtesy,-Arm, arm with speed:-and, fellows, soldiers, friends.

Better consider what you have to do Than I, that have not well the gift of tongue, Can lift your blood up with persuasion.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord, here are letters for you. Hot. I cannot read them now .-O gentlemen, the time of life is very short! To spend that shortness basely were too long, If life did ride upon a dial's point, Still ending at the arrival of an hour An if we live, we live to tread on kings; If die, brave death, when princes die with us! Now, for our consciences,—the arms are fair, When the intent of bearing them is just.

Enter another Messenger.

Mess. My lord, prepare; the king comes on apace. [tale, Hot. I thank him that he cuts me from my

For I profess not talking; only this, Let each man do his best: and here draw I A sword, whose temper I intend to stain With the best blood that I can meet withal In the adventure of this perilous day. Now,-Esperance!-Percy!-and set on.-Sound all the lofty instruments of war, And by that music let us all embrace: For, heaven to earth, some of us never shall A second time do such a courtesy.

[The trumpets sound. They embrace, and exeunt.

Scene III .- Plain near Shrewsbury.

Excursions, and parties fighting. Alarum to the battle. Then enter DOUGLAS and BLUNT meeting.

Blunt. What is thy name, that in the battle thus

Thou crossest me? What honour dost thou seek Upon my head?

Know, then, my name is Douglas; Doug.And I do haunt thee in the battle thus Because some tell me that thou art a king.

Blunt. They tell thee true. [bought Doug. The Lord of Stafford dear to-day hath Thy likeness; for, instead of thee, King Harry, The sword hath ended him: so shall it thee, Unless thou yield thee as my prisoner.

Blunt. I was not born a yielder, thou proud Scot:

And thou shalt find a king that will revenge. Lord Stafford's death.

[They fight, and BLUNT is slain.

Enter Horspur.

Douglas, hadst thou fought at Holmedon thus, I never had triumph'd upon a Scot.

Doug. All's done, all's won; here breathless lies the king.

Hot. Where?

Doug. Here. Hot. This, Douglas? no; I know this face full well: A gallant knight he was, his name wes Binnt; Semblably furnish'd like the king himself.

Doug. A fool go with thy soul, whither it goes!

A borrow'd title hast thou bought too dear: Why didst thou tell me that thou wert a king?

Ch. Just. How now, Sir John! what, are you brawling here? [business? Doth this become your place, your time, and You should have been well on your way to York. [on him?

Stand from him, fellow: wherefore hang'st thou Host. O my most worshipful lord, an't please your grace, I am a poor widow of Eastcheap, and he is arrested at my suit.

Ch. Just. For what sum?

Host. It is more than for some, my lord; it is for all,—all I have. He hath eaten me out of house and home; he hath put all my substance into that fat belly of his:-but I will have some of it out again, or I will ride thee o' nights like the mare.

Fal. I think I am as like to ride the mare, if I have any vantage of ground to get up

Ch. Just. How comes this, Sir John? Fiel What man of good temper would endure this tempest of exclamation? Are you not ashamed to enforce a poor widow to so rough a course to come by her own?.

Fal. What is the gross sum that I owe thee? Host. Marry, if thou wert an honest man, thyself and the money too. Thou didst swear to me upon a parcel-gilt goblet, sitting in my Dolphin-chamber, at the round table, by a sea-coal fire, upon Wednesday in Whitsun-week, when the prince broke thy head for liking his father to a singing-man of Windsor, -thou didst swear to me then, as I was washing thy wound, to marry me, and make me my lady thy wife. Canst thou deny it? Did not goodwife Keech, the butcher's wife, come in then, and call me gossip Quickly? coming in to borrow a mess of vinegar; telling us she had a good dish of prawns; whereby thou didst desire to eat some; whereby I told thee they were ill for a green wound? And didst thou not, when she was gone down stairs, desire me to be no more so familiarity with such poor people; saying that ere long they should call me madam? And didst thou not kiss me, and bid me fetch thee thirty shillings? I put thee now to thy bookoath: deny it, if thou canst!

Fal. My lord, this is a poor mad soul; and she says, up and down the town, that her eldest son is like you: she hath been in good case, and, the truth is, poverty hath distracted her But for these foolish officers, I beseech you I may have redress against them.

Ch. Just. Sir John, Sir John, I am well acquainted with your manner of wrenching the true cause the false way. It is not a confident brow, nor the throng of words that come with such more than impudent sauciness from you. can thrust me from a level consideration: you have, as it appears to me, practised upon the easy yielding spirit of this woman, and made her serve your uses both in purse and in person.

Host. Yea, in troth, my lord.

Ch. Just. Pr'ythee, peace. - Pay her the debt you owe her, and unpay the villainy you have done with her: the one you may do with sterling money, and the other with current repent-

Fal. My lord, I will not undergo this sneap thout reply. You call honourable boldness without reply. impudent sauciness: if a man will make court'sy, and say nothing, he is virtuous:-no, my lord, my humble duty remembered, I will not be your suitor. I say to you, I do desire deliverance from these officers, being upon hasty employment in the king's affairs.

Ch. Just. You speak as having power to do wrong: but answer in the effect of your reputation, and satisfy the poor woman.

Fal. Come hither, hostess. [Takes her aside.

Enter Gower.

Ch. Just. Now, Master Gower, -what news? Gow. The king, my lord, and Harry Prince of Wales

Are near at hand: the rest this paper tells.

[Gives a letter,

Fal. As I am a gentleman, Host. Nay, you said so before.

Fal. As I am a gentleman:—come, no more words of it. Host. By this heavenly ground I tread on, I must be fain to pawn both my plate and the tapestry of my dining-chambers.

Fal. Glasses, glasses, is the only drinking: and for thy walls, -a pretty slight drollery, or the story of the Prodigal, or the German hunting in water-work, is worth a thousand of these bed-hangings and these fly-bitten tapestries. Let it be ten pound, if thou caust. Come, an it were not for thy humours, there is not a better wench in England. Go, wash thy face, and draw thy action. Come thou must not be in this humour with me; dost not know me? come, come, I know thou wast set on to this

Host. Pray thee, Sir John, let it be but twenty nobles: i' faith, I am loth to pawn my plate, so God save me, la.

Fal. Let it alone; I'll make other shift:

you'll be a fool still.

Host. Well, you shall have it, though I pawn my gown. I hope you'll come to supper. You'll pay me all together?
Fal. Will I live?—Go, with her, with her [to Bardolph]; hook on, hook on.

Host. Will you have Doll Tearsbeet meet you at supper?

Fal. No more words; let's have her.

[Exeunt Host., BARD., Officers, and Page. Ch. Just. I have heard better news. Fal. What's the news, my good lord?

Ch. Just. Where lay the king last night?
Gow. At Basingstoke, my lord.
Fal. I hope, my lord, all's well: what's the news, my lord?

Ch. Just. Come all his forces back? Gow. No; fifteen hundred foot, five hundred horse, Are march'd up to my Lord of Lancaster,

Against Northumberland and the archbisbop.

Enter Hotspur.

Hol. My name is Harry Percy.

P. Hen. Why, then I see

A very valiant rebel of the name.

I am the Prince of Wales; and think not,

Percy,

To share with me in glory any more: Two stars keep not their motion in one sphere; Nor can one England brook a double reign, Of Harry Percy and the Prince of Wales.

Of Harry Percy and the Prince of Wales.

Hof. Nor shall it, Harry, for the hour is come
To end the one of us; and would to God
The name in arms were now as great as mine!
P. Hen. I'll make it greater ere I part from thee; And all the budding honours on thy crest I'll crop, to make a garland for my bead.

I'll crop, to make a garland for my bead.

Hol. I can no longer brook thy vanities.

[They fight.

Enter FALSTAFF.

Fal. Well said, Hall to it, Hall-Nay, you shall find no boy's play here, I can tell you.

Re-enter DOUGLAS; he fights with FALSTAFF who folls down as if he were dead, and exit DOUGLAS. HOTSPUR is wounded, and folls.

Hof. O, Harry, thou hast robb'd me of my youth!

I better brook the loss of brittle life Than those proud titles thou hast won of me; They wound my thoughts worse than thy sword

my flesh:—
But thought's the slave of life, and life time's fool;

And time, that takes survey of all the world,
Must have a stop. O, I could prophesy,
But that the earthy and cold hand of death
Lies on my tongue:—No, Percy, thou art dust,
And food for—

[Dies.

P. Hen. For worms, brave Percy: fare thee

well, great heart!—

Ill-weav'd ambition, how much art thou sbrunkl When that this body did contain a spirit, A kingdom for it was too small a bound; But now two paces of the vilest earth Is room enough:—this earth that bears thee

dead

Bears not alive so stout n gentleman.

If thou wert sensible of courtesy,

I should not make so dear a show of real:—
But let my favours hide thy mangled face;
And, even in thy behalf, I'll thank myself
For doing these fair rites of tenderness.

Adicu, and take thy praise with thee to heaven!
Thy ignominy sleep with thee in the grave,
But not remember'd in thy epitapbi—

[He sees FAL. on the ground. What, old acquaintance! could not all this flesh

Keep in a little life? Poor Jack, farewell! I could have better spar'd a better man. O, I should have a heavy miss of thee, If I were much in love with vanity. Death hath not struck so fat a deer to-day, Though many dearer, in this bloody fray.

Embowell'd will I see thee by and by: Till then in blood by noble Percy lie.

Exit. Fal. [Rising slowly.] Embowelled! if thou embowel me to-day, I'll give you leave to powder me and eat me too to-morrow. 'Sblood, twas time to counterfeit, or that hot termagant Scot had paid me scot and lot too. Counter-I lic. I am no counterfeit: to die is to be a counterfeit; for he is but the counterfeit of a man who hath not the life of a man; but to counterfeit dying, when a man thereby liveth, is to be no counterfeit, but the true and perfect image of life indeed. The better part of valour is discretion; in the which better part I have saved my life. Zounds, I am afraid of this gunpowder Percy, though he be dead; how if he should counterfeit too, and rise? I am afraid he would prove the better counterfeit. Therefore I'll make him sure: yea, and I'll Why may not he rise as swear I killed him. well as I? Nothing confutes me but eyes, and nobody sees me. Therefore, sirrah [stobbing him, with a new wound in your thigh, come you along with me ITakes HOTSPUR on his back.

(lakes BOTSPUR on his back.

Re-enter PRINCE HENRY and PRINCE JOHN.

P. Hen. Come, brother John, full bravely bast thou ficsb'd Thy maiden sword.

P. John. But, soft! whom have we here? Did you not tell me this fat man was dead?

P. Hen. I did; I saw him dead, breathless and bleeding On the ground.—

Art thon alive? or is it fantasy

That plays upon our eyesight? I pr'ythee, speak;

We will not trust our eyes without our ears:— Thou art not what thou seem'st.

Fal. No, that's certain; I am not a double man: but if I be not Jack Falstaff, then am I a Jack. There is Percy [throwing the bedy down]: if your father will do me any honour, so; if not, let him kill the next Percy himself. I look to be either earl or duke, I can assure you.

P. Hen. Why, Percy I killed myself, and saw thre dead.

Fal. Didst thou?—Lord, Lord, how this world is given to lying!—I grant you I was down and out of breath, and so was be; but we rose both at an instant, and fought a long hour by Shrewsbury clock. If I may be believed, so; if not, let them that should reward valour bear the sin upon their own beads. I'll take it upon my death, I gave him this wound in the thigh; if the man were alive, and would deny it, zounds, I would make him eat a piece of my sword.

P. John. This is the strangest tale that e'er I heard.

P. Hen. This is the strangest fellow, brother John.—

Come, bring your luggage nobly on your back:
For my part, if a lie may do thee grace,
I'll gild it with the happiest terms I have.
| A retreof is sounded.

Poins. [Reads.] John Falstaff, knight,every man must know that, as oft as he has occasion to name himself: even like those that are kin to the king; for they never prick their finger but they say, There is some of the king's blood spilt .- How comes that? says he, that takes upon him not to conceive. The answer is as ready as a borrower's cap, I am the king's poor cousin, sir.

P. Hen. Ray, they will be kin to us, or they will fetch it from Japhet. But to the letter:-

Poins. [Reads.] Sir John Falstaff, knight, to the son the king, nearest his father, Harry Prince of Wales, greeting.-Why, this is a certificate.

P. Hen. Peace!

Poins. [Reads.] I will imitate the honourable Romans in breuity:—sure he means brevity in breath, short-winded.—I commend me to thee, I commend thee, and I leave thee. Be not too familiar with Poins; for he misuses thy favours so much that he swears thou art to marry his sister Nell. Repent at idle times as thou mayest, and so, farewell.

Thine, by yea and no, (which is as much as to say, as thou usest him,) JACK FALSTAFF, with my familiars; JOHR, with my brothers and sisters; and Str. JOHN with all Europe.

My lord, I will steep this letter in sack, and make him eat it.

P. Hen. That's to make him eat twenty of his words. But do you use me thus, Ned? must I marry your sister?

Poins. God send the wench have no worse fortune! but I never said so.

P. Hen. Well, thus we play the fools with the time; and the spirits of the wise sit in the clouds and mock us .- Is your master here in London?

Bard. Yes, my lord. P. Hen. Where sups he? doth the old boar feed in the old frank? Bard. At the old place, my lord, —in East-P. Hen. What company? | Jchurch. Page. Ephesians, my lord,-of the old P. Hen. Sup any women with him? Page. None, my lord, but old Mistress

Quickly and Mistress Doll Tearsheet.

P. Hen. What pagan may that be?

Page. A proper gentlewoman, sir, and a kinswoman of my master's. P. Hen. Even such kin as the parish heifers are to the town bull.-Shall we steal upon them, Ned, at supper? Poins. I am your shadow, my lord; I'll follow you.

P. Hen. Sirrah, you boy, - and Bardolph,no word to your master that I am yet come to town: there's for your silence.

Bard. I have no tongue, sir.

Page. And for mine, sir,—I will govern it. P. Hen. Fare ye well; go. [Excunt BAR-DOLPH and Page.]—This Doll Tearsheet should be some road.

Poins. I warrant you, as common as the way between Saint Alban's and London.

. Hen. How might we see Falstaff bestow himself to-night in his true colours, and not ourselves be seen?

Poins. Put on two leathern jerkins and aprons, and wait upon him at his table as drawers.

P. Hen. From a god to a bull? a heavy descension! it was Jove's case. From a prince to a prentice? a low transformation! that shall be mine; for in everything the purpose must weigh with the folly.-Follow me, Ned.

Exeunt.

And, but my going, nothing can redeem it. Lady P. O, yet, for God's sake, go not to these wars!

The time was, father, that you broke your word, When you were more endear'd to it than now; When your own Percy, when my heart-dear

Harry, Threw many a northward look to see his father Bring up his powers; but he did long in vain. Who then persuaded you to stay at home? There were two honours lost, -yours and your son's.

For yours, -may heavenly glory brighten it! For his,—it stuck upon him, as the sun In the grey vault of heaven: and by his light Did all the chivalry of England move To do brave acts: he was, indeed, the glass Wherein the noble youth did dress themselves: He had no legs that practis'd not his gait; And speaking thick, which nature made his blemish,

Became the accents of the valiant; For those that could speak low and tardily Would turn their own perfection to abuse. To seem like him: so that in speech, in gait, In diet, in affections of delight In military rules, humours of blood, He was the mark and glass, copy and book, That fashion'd others. And him,-O wondrous him! O miracle of men!-him did you leave,-Second to none, unseconded by you,--To look upon the hideous god of war In disadvantage; to abide a field Where nothing but the sound of Hotspur's name Did seem defensible:-so you left him. Never, O never, do his ghost the wrong To hold your houour more precise and nice With otners than with him! let them alone: The marshall and the archbishop are strong: Had my sweet Harry had but half their numbers To-day might I, hanging on Hotspur's neck, Have talk'd of Monmouth's grave.

Host. Are you not hurt i' the groin? methought he made a shrewd thrust at your belly.

North. How doth my son and brother? Thou tremblest; and the whiteness in thy cheek Is apter than thy tongue to tell thy errand. Even such a man, so faint, so spiritless, So dull, so dead in look, so woe-begone Drew Priam's curtain in the dead of night, And would have told him half his Troy was bum'd:

But Priam found the fire ere he his tongue, And I my Percy's death ere thou report'st it. This thou wouldst say, - Your son did thus and

Your brother thus; so fought the noble Douglas; Stopping my greedy ear with their bold deeds: But in the end to stop mine ear indeed, Thou hast a sigh to blow away this praise,

Ending with—brother, son, and all are dead.

Mor. Douglas is living, and your brother,

yet:

But, for my lord your son, Why, he is dead. North. See what a ready tongue suspicion bath! He that but fears the thing he would not know Hath by instinct knowledge from others' eyes That what he fear'd is chanced. Yet speak, Morton;

Tell thou thy earl his divination lies, And I will take it as a sweet disgrace. And make thee rich for doing me such wrong. Mor. You are too great to be by me gainsaid: Your spirit is too true, your fears too certain.

North. Yet, for all this, say not that Percy's dead.

I see a strange confession in thine eye: Thou shak'st thy head, and hold'st it fear or sin To speak a truth. If he be slain, say so: The tongue offends not that reports his death: And he doth sin that doth belie the dead; Not he which says the dead is not alive. Yet the first bringer of unwelcome news Hath but a losing office; and his tongue Sounds ever after as a sullen bell, Remember'd knolling a departing friend.

L. Bard. I cannot think, my lord, your son is dead.

Mor. I am sorry I should force you to believe That which I would to God I had not seen; But these mine eyes saw him in bloody state, Rend'ring faint quittance, wearied and out-[down breath'd,

To Harry Monmouth; whose swift wrath beat The never-daunted Percy to the earth, From whence with life be never more sprang Poins. Answer, thou dead elm, answer. Fal. The fiend hath pricked down Bardolph irrecoverable; and his face is Lucifer's privykitchen, where he doth nothing but roast maltworms. For the boy,—there is a good angel about him; but the devil outbids him too.

P. Hen. For the women?

Fal. For one of them,—she is in hell already, and burns, poor soul! For the other,—I owe her money; and whether she be damned for that, I know not.

Enter PETO.

P. Hen. Peto, how now! what news? Pet. The king your father is at Westminster; And there are twenty weak and wearied posts Come from the north: and as I came along I met and overtook a dozen captains, Bare-headed, sweating, knocking at the taverns

And asking everyone for Sir John Falstaff. P. Hen. By heaven, Poins, I feel me much to blame, So idly to profane the precious time; When tempest of commotion, like the south, Borne with black vapor, doth begin to melt, And drop upon our bare unarmed heads. Give me my sword and cloak.—Falstaff, goodnight.

Re-enter BARDOLPH.

How now! what's the matter?

Bard. You must away to court, sir, presently; a dozen captains stay at door for you.

Fal. Pay the musicians, sirrah [to the Page]. -Farewell, hostess; -farewell, Doll. - You see my good wenches, how men of merit are sought after: the undeserver may sleep, when the man of action is called on. Farewell, good wenches: if I be not sent away post, I will see you again ∵ere I go.

ACT III.

Scene L.—Westminster. A Room in the Palace.

Enter King Henry in his nightgown, with a Page.

K. Hen. Go call the Earls of Surrey and of Warwick; fletters, But, ere they come, bid them o'er-read these And well consider of them: make good speed.

Exit Page. How many thousand of my poorest subjects Are at this hour asleep!—O sleep, O gentle sleep, Nature's soft nurse, how have I frighted thee, That thou no more wilt weigh my eyelids down,

And steep my senses in forgetfulness? Why rather, sleep, liest thou in smoky cribs, Upon uneasy pallets stretching thee, [slumber, And hush'd with buzzing night-flies to thy Than in the perfum'd chambers of the great, Under high canopies of costly state, And luil'd with sounds of sweetest melody?

O thou dull god, why liest thou with the vile In loathsome heds, and leav'st the kingly couch A watch-case or a common 'larum bell? Wilt thou upon the high and giddy mast Seal up the ship-boy's eyes, and rock his brains

In cradle of the rude imperious surge, And in the visitation of the winds, Who take the ruffian billows by the top, Curling their monstrous heads, and hanging

them

With deafening clamour in the slippery shrouds, That, with the hurly, death itself awakes? Canst thou, O partial sleep, give thy repose To the wet sea-boy in an hour so rude; And in the calmest and most stillest night, With all appliances and means to boot, Deny it to a king? Then, happy low, lie down! Uneasy lies the head that wears a crown.

Enter WARWICK and SURREY.

War. Many good-morrows to your majestyl K. Hen. Is it good-morrow, lords? War. 'Tis one o'clock, and past.

K. Hen. Why, then, good-morrow to you all, my lords.

Have you read o'er the letters that I sent you? [kingdom War, We have, my liege.

K. Hen. Then you perceive the body of our How foul it is; what rank diseases grow, And with what danger, near the heart of it.

War. It is but as a body yet distemper'd; Which to his former strength may be restor'd With good advice and little medicine:-My lord Northumberland will soon be cool'd-K. Hen. O Godl that one might read the book of fate, And see the revolution of the times be on any side but one, it is worse shame to beg than to be on the worst side, were it worse than the name of rebellion can tell how to make it.

Atten. You mistake me, sir.

Fal. Why, sir, did I say you were an honest man? setting my knighthood and my soldiership

aside, I had lied in my throat if I had said so. Atten. I pray you, sir, then set your knighthood and your soldiership aside; and give me leave to tell you, you lie in your throat, if you say I am any other than an honest man.

Fal. I give thee leave to tell me sol I lay aside that which grows to mel If thon gettest any leave of me, hang me; if thou takest leave, thou wert better be hanged. You hunt-counter, hence! avaunt!

Atten. Sir, my lord would speak with you. · Ch. Just. Sir John Falstaff, a word with you.

Fal. My good lord!-God give your lordship good time of day. I am glad to see your lordship abroad: I heard say your lordship was sick: I hope your lordship goes abroad by Your lordship, though not clean past your youth, hath yet some smack of age in you, some relish of the saltness of time; and I most humbly beseech your lordship to have a reverend care of your health.

Ch. Just. Sir John, I sent for you before your expedition to Shrewsbury.

Fal. An't please your lordship, I hear his majesty is returned with some discomfort from Wales. Ch. Just. I talk not of his majesty:-you would not come when I sent for you. Fal. And I hear, moreover, his highness is fallen into this same whoreson apoplexy. Ch. Just. Well, God mend him! I pray you let me speak with you.

Fal. This apoplexy is, as I take it, a kind of lethargy, an't please your lordship; a kind of sleeping in the blood, a whoreson tingling. lis.

Ch. Just. What tell you me of it? be it as it Fal. It hath its original from much grief, from study, and perturbation of the brain: I have read the cause of his effects in Galen; it is a kind of deafness.

Ch. Just. I think you are fallen into the disease; for you hear not what I say to you.

Fal. Very well, my lord, very well: rather, an't please you, it is the disease of not listening, the malady of not marking, that I am troubled withal.

Ch. Just. To punish you by the heels would amend the attention of your ears; and I care not if I do become your physician.

Fal. I am as poor as Job, my lord, but not so patient: your lordship may minister the potion of imprisonment to me in respect of poverty; but how I should be your patient to follow your prescriptions, the wise may make some dram of a scruple, or, indeed, a scruple

Ch. Just. I sent for you when there were matters against you for your life, to come speak with me.

Fal. As I was then advised by my learned counsel in the laws of this land-service, I did not come.

Ch. Just. Well, the truth is, Sir John, you] live in great infamy.

Fal. He that buckles him in my belt cannot live in less.

Ch. Just. Your means are very slender, and your waste is great.

Fal. I would it were otherwise; I would my means were greater and my waist slenderer.

Ch. Just. You have misled the youthful prince. Fal. The young prince hath misled me: I am the fellow with the great belly, and he my Ch. Just. Well, I am loth to gall a new-healed wound: your day's service at Shrewsbury hath a little gilded over your night's exploit on Gadshill: you may thank the unquiet time for your quiet o'erposting that action.

Fal. My lord,

Ch. Just. But since all is well, keep it so: wake not a sleeping wolf. fox.

Fal. To wake a wolf is as bad as to smell a Ch. Just. What! you are as a candle, the better part burnt out.

Fal. A wassail candle, my lord; all tallow: if I did say of war, my growth would approve the truth.

Ch. Just. There is not a white hair on your face but should have his effect of gravity.

Fal. His effect of gravy, gravy, gravy.

Ch. Just. You follow the young prince up and down, like his ill angel.

Fal. Not so, my lord; your ill angel is light; but I hope he that looks upon me will take me without weighing: and yet, in some respects, I grant, I cannot go:—I cannot tell. Virtue is of so little regard in these costermonger times that true valour is turned bear-herd; pregnancy is made a tapster, and hath his quick wit wasted in giving reckonings: all the other gifts ap-pertinent to man, as the malice of this age shapes them, are not worth a gooseberry. You that are old consider not the capacities of as that are young; you measure the heat of our livers with the bitterness of your galls: and we that are in the vaward of our youth, I must confess, are wags too.

Ch. Just. Do you set down your name in the scroll of youth, that are written down old with all the characters of age? Have you not a moist eye? a dry hand? a yellow cheek? a white beard? a decreasing leg? an increasing belly? Is not your voice broken? your wind short? your chin double? your wit single? and every part about you blasted with antiquity? and will you yet call yourself young? Fie, fie, fie, Sir John!

Fal. My lord, I was born about three of the clock in the afternoon, with a white head, and something a round belly. For my voice,-1 have lost it with hollsing and singing anthems. To approve my youth further, I will not; the truth is, I am only old in judgment and understanding; and he that will caper with me for a thousand marks, let him lend me the money, and have at him. For the box o' the ear that the prince gave you, -he gave it like a rude prince, and you took it like a sensible lord. have checked him for it; and the young lion repents; marry, not in ashes and sackcloth, but in new silk and old sack.

Enter BARDOLPH and one with him.

Bard. Good-morrow, honest gentlemen: I beseech you, which is Justice Shallow?

Shal. I am Robert Shallow, sir, a poor esquire of this county, and one of the king's justices of the peace: what is your good pleasure with me?

Bard. My captain, sir, commends him to you; my captain, Sir John Falstaff,—a tall gentleman, by heaven, and a most gallant leader.

Shal. He greets me well, sir; I knew him a good backsword man; how doth the good knight? may I ask how my lady his wife doth? Bard. Sir, pardon; a soldier is better accommodated than with a wife.

Shal. It is well said, in faith, sir; and it is well said indeed too. Better accommodated!it is good; yea, indeed, is it: good phrases are surely, and ever were, very commendable. Accommodated!-it comes from accommodo: very good; a good phrase.

Bard. Pardon me, sir; I have heard the word.

Phrase call you it? By this good day, I know not the phrase; but I will maintain the word with my sword to he a soldier-like word, and a word of exceeding good command. Accommodated; that is, when a man is, as they say, accommodated; or, when a man is, being, whereby he may be thought to be accommodated; which is an excellent thing.

Shal. It is very just.—Look, here comes good Sir John.

Enter FALSTAFF.

Give me your good hand, give me your worship's good hand: by my troth, you look well and bear your years very well: welcome, good Sir John.

Fal. I am glad to see you well, good Master Robert Shallow: -- Master Surecard, as I think? Shal. No, Sir John, it is my cousin Silence, in commission with me.

Fal. Good Master Silence, it well befits you should be of the peace.

Sil. Your good worship is welcome. Fal. Fie! this is hot weather. - Gentlemen, have you provided me here half a dozen sufficient men Shal. Marry, have we, sir. Will you sit? Fal. Let me see them, I beseech you.

Shal. Where's the roll? where's the roll? where's the roll?—let me see, let me see. So, so, so, so:—yea, marry, sir:—Ralph Mouldy! -let them appear as I call; let them do so, let them do so.—Let me see; where is Mouldy?

Moul. Here, an't please you. Shal. What think you, Sir John? a good limbed fellow; young, strong, and of good friends.

Fal. Is thy name Mouldy?

Moul. Yea, an't please you.
Fal. 'Tis the more time thou wert used. Shal. Ha, ha, hal most excellent, i' faithl things that are mouldy lack use: very singular good!-in faith, well said, Sir John; very well Eaid. Fal. Prick him. [To SHALLOW.] Moul. I was pricked well enough before, an You could have let me alone: my old dame will be undone now for one to do her husbandry and her drudgery: you need not to have pricked me; there are other men fitter to go out than 1.

Fal. Go to; peace, Mouldy; you shall go. Mouldy, it is time you were spent.

Moul. Spent!

Shal. Peace, fellow, peace; stand aside: know you where you are?-For the other, Si: John:-let me see;-Simon Shadow!
Fal. Yea, marry, let me have him to sit under: he's like to be a cold soldier.

Shal. Where's Shadow? Shad. Here, sir.

Fal. Shadow, whose son art thou?

Shad. My mother's son, sir.

Fal. Thy mother's son! like enough; and thy father's shadow: so the son of the female is the shadow of the male: it is often so, indeed; but not much of the father's substance.

Shal. Do you like him, Sir John?

Fal. Shadow will serve for summer,-prick him; for we have a number of shadows to fill up the muster-book.

Shal. Thomas Wart! Fal. Where's he? Wart. Here, sir. Fol. Is thy name Wart? Wart. Yea, sir.

Fol. Thou art a very ragged wart. Shal. Shall I prick him, Sir John?

Fal. It were superfluous; for his apparel is built upon his back, and the whole frame stands upon pins: prick him no more.

Shal. Ha, ha, ha!—you can do it, sir; you can do it: I commend you well.—Francis Feeble!

Fee. Here, sir.

Fai. What trade art thou, Feeble? Fee. A woman's tailor, sir.

Shal. Shall I prick him, sir?
Fal. You may: but if he had been a man's tailor, he would have pricked you.-Wilt thou make as many holes in an enemy's battle as thou hast done in a woman's petticoat?

Fee. I will do my good will, sir; you can have

Fal. Well said, good woman's tailor! well said, courageous Feeble! Thou wilt be as valiant as the wrathful dove or most magnarimous mouse.—Prick the woman's tailor well. Master Shallow; deep, Master Shallow.

Fee. I would Wart might have gone, sir. Fal. I would thou wert a man's tailor, that thou mightst mend him, and make him fit to go. I cannot put him to a private soldier, that is the leader of so many thousands: let that suffice, most forcible Feeble.

Fee. It shall suffice, sir.
Fal. I am bound to thee, Reverend Feeble.

Who is next?

Shal. Peter Bullcalf of the green! Fal. Yea, marry, let us see Bullcalf.

Bull. Here, sir.

Fal. 'Fore God, a likely fellow!-Come, prick me, Bullcalf, till he roar again.

Bull. O lordl good my lord captain,— Fal. What, dost thou roar before thou ar: pricked?

Bull. O lord, sirl I am a diseased man. Fel. What disease hast thou?

L. Bard. What, is the king but five-andtwenty thousand?

Hast. To us no more; nay, not so much, Lord Bardolph;

ACT II.

Scene I .- London. A Street.

Enter Hostess, FANG and his Boy with her, and SNARE following.

Host. Master Fang, have you entered the action?

Fang. It is entered.

Host. Where is your yeoman? Is it a lusty yeoman? will he stand to it?

Fang. Sirrah, where's Snare?

Host. O Lord, ayl good Master Snare.

Snare. Here, here.

Fang. Snare, we must arrest Sir John Falstaff. Host. Yea, good Master Snare; I have entered him and all.

Snarc. It may chance cost some of us our lives, for he will stab.

Host. Alas the dayl take heed of him; be stabbed me in mine own bouse, and that most beastly: in good faith, he cares not what mischief he doth, if his weapon be out: he will foin like any devil; he will spare neither man, woman, nor child.

Fang. If I can close with him, I care not for his thrust.

Host. No, nor I neither: I'll he at your elbow. Fang. An I but fist him once; an he comes but within my vice,-Host. I am undone by his going; I warrant you, he is an infinitive thing upon my score:—good Master Fang, hold him sure;—good Master Snare, let him not 'scape. He comes continuantly to Pie-corner, -- saving your manhoods,- to buy a saddle; and he is indited to dinner to the Lubber's Head in Lumber Street, to Master Smooth's the silkman: I pray ye, since my exion is entered, and my case so openly known to the world, let him be brought in to his answer. A hundred mark is a long one The commonwealth is sick of their own choice; for a poor lone woman to bear: and I have borne, and borne, and borne; and have been fubbed off, and fubbed off, and fubbed off, from this day to that day, that it is a shame to he thought on. There is no honesty in such dealing; unless a woman should he made an ass and a beast, to hear every knave's wrong. Yonder he comes; and that arrant malmseynose knave, Bardolph, with him. Do your offices, do your offices, Master Fang and Master Snare; do me, do me, do me your offices.

Fal. How now! whose mare's dead? what's. the matter?

Fang. Sir John, I arrest you at the suit of Mistress Ouickly and a woman-queller.

Fal. Keep them off, Bardolph.

Fang. A rescuel a rescue!

Host. Good people, bring a rescue or two.-Thou wo't, wo't thou? thou wo't, wo't thou? do, do, thou rogue! do, thou hemp-seed!

Fal. Away, you scullion! you rampallian! you fustilariani I'll tickle your catastrophe.

Enter the Lord Chief-Justice, attended.

Ch. Just. What is the matter? keep the peace here, ho! Host. Good my lord, he good to me! I beseech you, stand to me!

DOLPH, Recruits, &c.]. As I return, I will fetch off these justices: I do see the bottom of Justice Shallow. Lord, Lord, how subject we old men are to this vice of lying! This same starved justice hath done nothing but prate to me of the wildness of his youth, and the feats he hath done about Turnbull Street; and every third word a lie, duer paid to the hearer than the Turk's tribute. I do remember him at Clement's-inn, like a man made after supper of a cheese-paring: when he was naked, he was, for all the world, like a forked radish, with a head fantastically carved upon it with a knife: he was so forlorn that his dimensions to any thick sight were invincible: he was the very genius of famine; yet lecherous as a monkey, and the whores called him mandrake: he came ever in the rearward of the fashion; and sung those tunes to the overscutched huswifes that he heard the carmen whistle, and sware they were his fancies or his good-nights. And now is this Vice's dagger become a squire, and talks as familiarly of John of Gaunt as if he had been sworn brother to him; and I'll he sworn he never saw him hut once in the Tilt-yard: and then he burst his head for crowding among the marshal's men. I saw it, and told John of Gaunt he beat his own name; for you might have thrust him and all his apparel into an eelskin; the case of a trehle hautboy was a mansion for him, a court:—and now has he land and beeves. Well, I will he acquainted with him if I return; and it shall go hard but I will make him a philosopher's two stones to me: if the young dace he a hait for the old pike, I see no reason, in the law of nature, but I may snap at him. Let time shape, and there an end. Exit.

. ACT IV.

Scene I .- A Forest in Yorkshire.

Enter the Archbishop of York, Mowbray, Hastings, and others.

Arch. What is this forest call'd?

Hast. 'Tis Gualtree Forest, an't shall please your grace.

Arch. Here stand, my lords; and send discoverers forth

To know the numbers of our enemies.

Hast. We have sent forth already.

Arch. 'Tis well done.

My friends and hrethern in these great affairs,
I must acquaint you that I have receiv'd
New-dated letters from Northumberland;
Their cold intent, tenour, and substance, thus:—
Here doth he wish his person, with such powers
As might hold sortance with his quality,
The which he could not levy; whereupon
He is retir'd, to ripe his growing fortunes,
To Scotland; and concludes in hearty prayers
That your attempts may over-live the hazard
And fearful meeting of their opposite.

Mowb. Thus do the hopes we have in him touch ground, And dash themselves to pieces.

Enter a Messenger.

Hast. Now, what news?
Mess. West of this forest, scarcely off a mile,
In goodly form comes on the enemy;

And, by the ground they hide, I judge their number

Upon or near the rate of thirty thousand.

Mowb. The just proportion that we gave them out.

Let us sway on, and face them in the field.

Arch. What well-appointed leader fronts us

Mowb. I think it is my Lord of Westmoreland.

Enter WESTMORELAND.

West. Health and fair greeting from our general

The prince, Lord John and Duke of Lancaster.

Arch. Say on, my Lord of Westmoreland, in peace,

What doth concern your coming.

West.

Then, my lord,
Unto your grace do I in chief address
The substance of my speech. If that rebellien
Came like itself, in hase and ahject routs,
Led on by hloody youth, guarded with rags,
And countenanc'd hy boys and heggary,—
I say, if damn'd commotion so appear'd,
In his true, native, and most proper shape,
You, reverend father, and these noble lords,
Had not been here, to dress the ugly form
Of hase and hloody insurrection
Withyourfairhonours. You,lordarchblshop,—

Whose see is hy a civil peace maintain'd;
Whose heard the silver hand of peace hath touch'd; [tutor'd;
Whose learning and good letters peace hath
Whose white investments figure innocence,
The days and years blessed spirit of center.

The dove and very blessed spirit of peace,— Wherefore do you so ill translate yourself Out of the speech of peace, that bears such grace,

Into the harsh and boisterous tongue of war; Turning your books to greaves, your lnk to blood,

Your pens to lances, and your tongue divine To a loud trumpet and a point of war?

Arch. Wherefore do I this?—so the question stands.

Briefly to this end:—we are all diseas'd;

And with our surjeiting and wanton hours
Have brought ourselves into a burning fever,
And we must hleed for it: of which disease
Our late king, Richard, heing infected, died.
But, my most noble Lord of Westmoreland,
I take not on me here as a physician;
Nor do I, as an enemy to peace,
Troop in the throngs of military men;
But, rather, show awhile like fearful war,
To diet rank minds sick of happiness,
And purge the obstructions which hegin to stop
Our very veins of life. Hear me more plainly.
I have in equal halance justly weigh'd
What wrongs our arms may do, what wrongs

we suffer,
And find our griefs heavier than our offences.
We see which way the stream of time doth run,
And are enforc'd from our most quiet sphere
By the rough torrent of occasion;
And have the summary of all our griefs,
When time shall serve, to show in articles;
Which long ere this we offer'd to the king,
And might hy no suit gain our audience:

to desire small heer?
Poins. Wby, a prince should not he so loosely studied as to remember so weak a composition.

P. Hen. Belike, then, my appetite was not princely got; for, by my troth, I do now rememher the poor creature, small heer. But, indeed, these humble considerations make me out of love with my greatness. What a disgrace is it to me to remember thy name? or to know thy face to-morrow? or to take note how many pair of silk stockings thou hast; viz., these, and those that were thy peach-coloured ones? or to bear the inventory of thy shirts, as, one for superfluity, and one other for use?—but that the tennis court-keeper knows hetter than I; for it is a low ebb of linen with thee when thou keepest not racket there; as thou hast not done a great while, hecause the rest of thy lowcountries have made a shift to eat up thy holland: and God knows, whether those that bawl out the ruins of thy linen shall inherit his kingdom: but the midwives say the children are not 'in the fault; whereupon the world increases, and kindreds are mightily strengthened.

P. Hen. Shall I tell thee one thing, Poins? Poins. Yes, faith; and let it be an excellent good thing.

P. Hen. It shall serve among wits of no higher breeding than thine.

Poins. Go to; I stand the push of your one thing that you will tell. P. Hen. Marry, I tell thee, -it is not meet that I should be sad, now my father is sick: alheit I could tell to thee, -as to one it pleases me, for fault of a hetter, to call my friend,—I could be sad and sad indeed too.

Poins. Very hardly on the subject

P. Hen. By this hand, thou think'st me as far in the devil's book as thou and Falstaff for ohduracy and persistency: let the end try the that my father is so sick: and keeping such vile look you how he writes.

company as thou art hath in reason taken from me all ostentation of sorrow.

Poins. The reason?

P. Hen. What wouldst thon think of me if I should weep?"

Poins. I would think thee a most princely byprocrite.

P. Hen. It would he every man's thought; and thou are a blessed fellow to think as every man thinks: never a man's thought in the world keeps the road-way hetter than thine: every man would think me an hyprocrite indeed. And what accites your most worshipful thought to think so?

Poins. Why, hecause you have heen so lewd, and so much engraffed to Falstaff.

P. Hen. And to thee.

Poins. By this light, I am well spoke on; I can hear it with mine own ears: the worst that they can say of me is that I am a second hother. and that I am a proper fellow of my hands; and those two things, I confess, I cannot help.-By the mass, here comes Bardolph.

P. Hen. And the hoy that I gave Falstaff. he had him from me Christian; and look, if the fat villain have not transformed him ape.

Bard. God save your grace!

P. Hen. And yours, most noble Bardolphi Bard. Come, you virtuous ass [to the Page], you bashful fool, must you he blushing? where-fore blush you now? What a maidenly man-at-arms are you become? Is it such a matter to get a pottle-pot's maidenhead?

Page. He called me even now, my lord, through a red lattice, and I could discern no part of his face from the window: at last I spied his eyes; and methought he had made two holes in the alewife's new red petticoat, and so peeped through.

P. Hen. Hath not the boy profited? Bard. Away, you whoreson unright rahbit.

P. Hen. Instruct us, hoy; what dream, boy? Page. Marry, my lord, Althæa dreamed she was delivered of a fire-hrand; and therefore I call him her dream.

Bard. An you do not make him he hanged among you, the gallows shall have wrong. P. Hen. And how doth thy master, Bardolph?

Bard. Well, my lord. He heard of your grace's coming to town; there's a letter for you.

Poins. Delivered with good respect .- And how doth the martlemas, your master?

Bard. In hodily health, sir.

Poins. Marry, the immortal part needs a physician; but that moves not him: though that be sick, it dies not.

Arch. No, no, my lord. Note this,-the king is weary Of dainty and such picking grievances: For he hath found, to end one doubt by death Revives two greater in the heirs of life: And therefore will he wipe his tables clean, And keep no tell-tale to his memory, That may repeat and history his loss To new remembrance: for full well he knows He cannot so precisely weed this land As his misdoubts present occasion: His foes are so enrooted with his friends That, plucking to unfix an enemy, He doth unfasten so and shake a friend.

So that this land, like an offensive wife

'Tis very true: Arch. And therefore be assur'd, my good lord marshal, If we do now make our atonement well, Our peace will, like a broken limb united, Grow stronger for the breaking.

Mowb.Be it so, Here is return'd my Lord of Westmoreland.

Re-enter WESTMORELAND.

West. The prince is here at hand: pleaseth your lordship

To meet his grace just distance 'tween our armies?

Mowb. Your grace of York, in God's name, then, set forward.

Arch. Before, and greet his grace:-my lord, we come. Exeunt.

Scene II .- Another part of the Forest.

Enter, from one side, MOWBRAY, the ARCH-BISHOP, HASTINGS, and others: from the other side, PRINCE JOHN OF LANCASTER, WESTMORELAND, Officers and Attendants.

P. John. You are well encounter'd here, my cousin Mowbray: Good-day to you, gentle lord archbishop; And so to you, Lord Hastings,—and to all-My Lord of York, it better show'd with you When that your flock, assembled by the bell, Encircled you to hear with reverence Your exposition on the holy text, Than now to see you here an iron man. Cheering a rout of rebels with your drum, Turning the word to sword, and life to death. To us the speaker in his parliament; To us the imagin'd voice of God himself: The very opener and intelligencer Between the grace, the sanctities of heaven, And our dull workings. O, who shall believe But you misuse the reverence of your place. Employ the countenance and grace of heaven. As a false favourite doth his prince's name, In deeds dishonourable? You have taken up. Under the counterfeited seal of God. The subjects of his substitute, my father, And both against the peace of heaven and him Have here up-swarm'd them.

Arch. Good my Lord of Lancaster, I am not here against your father's peace; But as I told my lord of Westmoreland The time misorder'd doth, in common sense, Crowd us and crush us to this monstrous form, To hold our safety up. I sent your grace The parcels and particulars of our grief,— The which hath been with scorn shov'd from Scene IV.-London. A Room in the Boar's Heod Tavern in Eostcheap.

Enter two Drawers.

I Draw. What the devil hast thou brought there? apple-johns? thou know'st Sir John cannot endure an apple-john.

2 Draw. Mass, thou sayest true. The prince once set a dish of apple-johns before him, and told him there was five more Sir Johns; and, putting off his hat, said, I will now take my leave of these six dry, round, old, withered knights. It angered him to the heart: hut he hath forgot that.

I Drow. Why, then, cover, and set them down: and see if thou canst find out Sneak's noise: Mistress Tearsheet would fain hear some music. Despatch:-the room where they supped is too hot; they'll come in straight.

2 Drow. Sirrah, here will he the prince and Master Poins anon; and they will put on two of our jerkens and aprons; and Sir John must not know of it: Bardolph hath hrought word.

I Drow. By the mass, here will he old utis:

it will be an excellent stratagem. 2 Drow. I'll see if I can find out Sneak.

[Exit.

Enter Hostess and DOLL TEARSHEET.

Host. I' faith, sweetheart, methinks now you are in an excellent good temperality: your pnlsidge heats as extraordinarily as heart would desire; and your colour, I warrant you, is as red as any rose: hut, i' faith, you have drunk too much canaries; and that's a marvellons searching wine, and it perfumes the blood ere one can say, What's this?—How do you now?

Doll. Better than I was:-hem. Host. Why, that's well said; a good heart's worth gold .- Look, here comes Sir John.

Enter FALSTAFF singing.

Fol. When Arthur first in court—Empty the jorden. [Exit 1 Drawer.]—And was a worthy king .- How now, Mistress Doll!

Host. Sick of a calm; yea, good sooth. Fcl. So is all her sect; an they be once in a calm, they are sick.

Doll. You muddy rascal, is that all the comfort you give me?

Fol. You make fat rascals, Mistress Doll. Doll. I make them! gluttony and diseases make them; I make them not

Fal. If the cook help to make the gluttony, you help to make the diseases. Doll: we catch of you, Doll, we catch of you; grant that, my poor virtue, grant that.

Doll. Yea, joy,—our chains and our jewels. Fal. Your brooches, pearls, and ouches:—for to serve hravely is to come halting off, you know: to come off the breach with his pike bent bravely, and to surgery hravely; to venture upon the charged chambers bravely, -Doll. Hang yourself, you muddy conger, hang yourself!

Host. By my troth, this is the old fashion; you two never meet but you fall to some discord:you are hoth, in good troth, as rheumatic as two dry toasts; you cannot one hear with another's confirmities. What the good-year! one must bear, and that must he you [to DoLL]: you are the weaker vessel, as they say, the emptier vessel.

Doll. Can a weak empty vessel bear such a huge full hogshead? there's a whole merchant's venture of Bourdeaux stuff in him; you have not seen a hulk hetter stuffed in the hold .-Come, I'll be friends with thee, Jack: thou art going to the wars; and whether I shall ever see thee again or no, there is nobody cares.

Re-enter First Drawer.

1 Drow. Sir, Ancient Pistol is below, and would speak with yon.

Doll. Hang him, swaggering rascal! let him not come hither: it is the foul-mouth'dst rogue in England.

Host. If he swagger, let him not come here: no, by my faith; I must live amongst my neighhours; I'll no swaggerers: I am in good name and fame with the very hest:--shut the door; -there comes no swaggerers here: I have not lived all this while to have swaggering now: shut the door, I pray yon.

Fol. Dost thou hear, hostess?-Host. Pray yon, pacify yourself, Sir John:

there comes no swaggerers here.

Fal. Dost thou hear? it is mine ancient. Host. Tilly-fally, Sir John, never tell me:

your ancient swaggerer comes not in my doors. I was hefore Master Tisick, the deputy, the other day; and, as he said to me,—it was no longer ago than Wednesday last,— Neighbour Quickly, says he;—Master Dumh, our minister, was hy then;—Neighbour Quickly, says he, receive those that are civil; for, saith he, you ore in an ill-name; -now he said so, I can tell whereupon; for, says he, you ore on honest woman, and well thought on; therefore take heed whot guests you receive: receive, says he.

hy the Lord, I will have it in a particular ballad else, with mine own picture on the top of it, Colevile kissing my foot: to the which course if I be enforced, if you do not all show like gilt two-pences to me, and I, in the clear sky of fame, o'ershine you as much as the full moon doth the cinders of the element, which show like pins' heads to her, believe not the word of the noble: therefore let me have right, and let desert mount.

P. John. Thine's too heavy to mount.

Fal. Let it shine, then.

P. John. Thine's too thick to shine,

Fal. Let it do something, my good lord, that may do me good, and call it what you will.

P. John. Is thy name Colevile?

Cole.

It is, my lord. P. John. A famous rebel art thou, Colevile. Fal. And a famous true subject took him.

Cole. I am, my lord, hut as my hetters are That led me hither: had they heen rul'd hy me, You should have won them dearer than you

And now despatch we toward the court, my lords.

I bear the king, my father, is sore sick: Our news shall go hefore us to his majesty. Which, cousin, you shall bear, -to comfort him; And we with sober speed will follow you.

Fal. My lord, I beseech you, give me leave Through Glostershire: and, when you come to Stand, my good lord, pray, in your good report. P. John. Fare you well, Falstaff: I, in my condition, Shall better speak of you than you deserve. Exeunt all but FAL.

Fal. I would you had hut the wit: 'twere better than your dukedom. Good faith, this same young soher-blooded boy doth not love me; nor a man cannot make him laugh;-but that's no marvel; he drinks no wine. There's never any of these demure boys come to any proof; for thin drink doth so over-cool their blood, and making many fisb-meals, that they fall into a kind of male green-sickness; and then, when they marry, they get wenches: they vre generally fools and cowards; -which some of us should be too, but for inflam mation. good sherris-sack hath a twofold operation in it. It ascends me into the brain; dries me there all the foolish and dull and crudy vapours which environ it; makes it apprehensive, quick, forgetive, full of nimble, fiery, and delectable shapes; which delivered o'er to the voice,—the tongue, -which is the birth, becomes excellent wit. The second property of your excellent sherris is, -the warming of the blood; which, before cold and settled, left the liver white and pale, which is the hadge of pusillanimity and cowardice: but the sherris warms it, and makes it course from the inwards to the parts extreme: it illumineth the face; which, as a beacon, gives warning to all the rest of this little king. dom, man, to arm; and then the vital commoners and inland petty spirits muster me all to their captain, the heart, who, great and puffed up with this retinue, doth any deed of courage: and this valour comes of sherris. So that skill in the weapon is nothing without sack, for that sets it a-work; and learning, a) mere hoard of gold kept by a devil till sack commences it and sets it in act and use. Hereof comes it that Prince Harry is valiant; for the cold blood he did naturally inherit of his father, he hath, like lean, sterile, and bare land, manured, hushanded, and tilled, with excellent endeavour of drinking good and good store of fertile sherris, that he is hecome very hot and valiant. If I had a thousand sons, the first human principle I would teach them should he,-to forswear thin potations, and to addict themselves to sack.

Enter BARDOLPH.

How now, Bardolph!

Bard. The army is discharged all, and gone. Fal. Let them go. I'll through Gloster-shire: and there will I visit Master Robert Shallow, Esquire: I have him already tempering between my finger and my thumb, and shortly will I seal with him. Come away.

Exeunt.

SCENE IV .- WESTMINSTER. A Room in the Palace.

Enter King Henry, Clarence, Prince HUMPHREY, WARWICK, and others.

K. Hen. Now, lords, if God doth give successful end

To this debate that bleedeth at our doors, We will our youth lead on to higher fields, And draw no swords but what are sanctified. Our navy is address'd, our power collected, Our substitutes in absence well invested, And everything lies level to our wish: Only, we want a little personal strength; And pause us till these rebels, now afoot,

Come underneath the yoke of government. War. Both which we doubt not but your majesty Shall soon enjoy.

K. Hen. Humphrey, my son of Gloster, Where is the prince your hrother?

P. Humph. I think he's gone to hunt, my! lord, at Windsor.

K. Hen. And how accompanied?

P. Humph. I do not know, my lords: K. Hen. Is not his brother, Thomas of Clarence, with him?

P. Humph. No, my good lord, he is in presence here.

What would my lord and father? K. Hen. Nothing but well to thee, Thomas of Clarent

Re-enter BARDOLPH.

Fal. Have you turned him out of doors? Bard. Yes, sir. The rascal's drunk: you have hurt him, sir, in the shoulder.

Fal. A rascall to brave mel

Doll. Ah, you sweet little rogue, yon! Alas, poor age, how thou sweatest! come, let me wipe thy face;—come on, you whoreson chops:—ah, rogue! i' faith, I love thee. Thon art as valorous as Hector of Troy, worth five of Agamem-non, and ten times better than the nine worthies: ah, villain!

Fal. A rascally slavel I will toss the rogue in a blanket.

Doll. Do, if thou darest for thy heart: if thou dost, I'll canvass thee between a pair of sheets.

Enter Musicians

Page. The music is come, sir. Fal. Let them play;—play, sirs.—Sit on my knee, Doll .- A rascal-bragging slave! the rogue fled from me like quicksilver.

Doll. I faith, and thou followedst him like a church. Thou whoreson little tidy Bartholomew boar-pig, when wilt thou leave fighting o'days and foining o'nights, and begin to patch up thine old body for heaven?

Enter, behind, PRINCE HENRY and Poins disguised as Drawers.

Fal. Peace, good Doll! do not speak like a Death's head; do not bid me remember mine end.

Doll. Sirrah, what humour is the prince of? Fal. A good shallow young fellow: he would have made a good pantler; he would have chipped bread well.

Doll. They say Poins has a good wit. Fal. He a good wit? hang him, baboon! his wit is as thick as Tewksbury mustard; there is no more conceit in him than is in a mallet.

Doll. Why does the prince love him so, then? Fal. Because their legs are both of a bigness; and he plays at quoits well; and eats conger and fennel; and drinks off candles' ends for flapdragons; and rides the wild mare with the boys; and jumps upon joint-stools; and swears with a good grace; and wears his boot very smooth, like unto the sign of the leg; and breeds no bate with telling of discreet stories; and such other gambol faculties he has, that show a weak mind and an able body, for the which the prince admits him: for the prince himself is such another; the weight of a hair will turn the scales between their avoirdupois.

P. Hen. Would not this nave of a wheel have his ears cut off?

Poins. Let us beat him before his whore. P. Hen. Look, whether the withered elder hath not his poll clawed like a parrot.

Poins. Is it not strange that desire should so many years outlive performance? Fal. Kiss me, Doll.

P. Hen. Saturn and Venus this year in conjunction! what says the almanac to that?

Poins. And look, whether the fiery Trigon, his man, be not lisping to his master's old tables, his note-book, his counsel-keeper.

Fal. Thou dost give me flattering busses. Doll. By my troth, I kiss thee with a most constant heart

Fal. I am old, I am old.

Doll. I love thee better than I love e'er a scurvy young boy of them all.

Fal. What stuff wilt thou bave a kirtle of? I shall receive money on Thursday; thou shalt have a cap tomorrow. A merry song, come: it grows late; we will to bed. Thou wilt forget me when I am gone.

Doll. By my troth, thou wilt set me a weeping, an thou sayest so: prove that ever I dress myself handsome till thy return:-well, hearken the end.

Fal. Some sack, Francis.

P. Hen., Poins. Anon, anon, sir.

[Advancing. Fal. Hal a bastard son of a king's?-And art not thou Poins, his brother?

P. Hen. Why, thou globe of sinful continents, what a life dost thou lead!

Fal. A better than thou: I am a gentleman;

thou art a drawer. P. Hen. Very true, sir, and I come to draw you out by the ears.

Host. O, the Lord preserve thy good grace! by my troth, welcome to London. Now, the Lord bless that sweet face of thine! O Jesu, are you come from Wales?

Fal. Thou whoreson mad compound of majesty,—by this light fiesh and corrupt blood, thon art welcome.

(Leaning his hand upon DOLL.: Doll. How, you fat fool! I scorn you.

Poins. My lord, he will drive you ont of your revenge, and turn all to a merriment, if you take not the heat. P. Hen. You whoreson candle-mine, you, how vilely did you speak of me even now before this honest, virtuous, civil, gentlewoman!

Host. God's blessing on your good heart! and so she is, by my troth.

Fal. Didst thou hear me?

P. Hen. Yes; and you knew me, as you did when you ran away by Gadshill: you knew I was at your back, and spoke it on purpose to try my patience.

Fal. No, no, no; not so; I did not think thou wast within bearing.

P. H. I shall drive you, then, to confess the wilful abuse, and then I know how to handle

Fal. No abuse, Hal, on mine honour; no abuse.

. Hen. Not! to disgraise me, and call me pantler, and bread-chipper, and I know not what!

Fal. No abuse, Hal.

Poins. No abuse

Fal. No abuse, Ned, in the world; honest Ned, none. I dispraised him before the wicked, that the wicked might not fall in love with him; in which doing, I have done the part of a careful friend and a true subject, and thy father is to give me thanks for it. No abuse, Hal;

none, Ned, none;—no, faith, boys, none.

O majestyl When thou dost pinch thy bearer, thou dost ait Like a rich armour worn in heat of day That scalds with safety. By his gates of breath There lies a downy feather which stirs not: Did he suspire, that light and weightless down Perforce must move .- My gracious lord! my father!-This sleep is sound indeed; this is a sleep That from this golden rigol hath divorc'd So many English kings. Thy due from me Is tears and heavy sorrows of the blood, Which nature, love, and filial tenderness Shall, O dear father, pay thee plenteously: My due from thee is this imperial crown, Which, as immediate from thy place and blood, Lo, here it sits, Derives itself to me. [Putting it on his head.

Which God shall guard: and put the world's whole strength

Into one giant arm, it shall not force This lineal honour from me: this from thee Will I to mine leave, as 'tis left to me. K. Hen. Warwick! Gloster! Clarence!

Re-enter WARWICK and the rest.

Cla. Doth the king call? War. What would your majesty? how fares your grace? my lords?

K. Hen. Why did you leave me here alone, Cla. We left the prince my brother here, my liege,

Who undertook to sit and watch by you. K. Hen. The Prince of Walesi Where is he? let me see him:

He is not here.

War. This door is open; he is gone this way. P. Humph. He came not through the chamber where we stay'd.

K. Hen. Where is the crown? who took it from my pillow?

War. When we withdrew, my liege, we left it here.

K. Hen. The prince hath ta'en it hence:go, seek him out. Is he hasty that he doth suppose

My sleep my death?-Find him, my Lord of Werwick; chide him [Exit WARWICK

This part of his conjoins with my disease, And helps to end me. - See, sons, what things you are!

How quickly nature falls into revolt When gold becomes her object! For this the foolish over-careful fathers Have broke their sleep with thoughts, their brains with care. Their bones with industry: For this they have engrossed and pil'd up The canker'd heaps of strange-achieved gold: For this they have been thoughtful to invest Their sons with arts and martial exercises: When, like the bee, tolling from every flower The virtuous sweets, Our things with wax, our mouths with hone? We bring it to the hive: and, like the bees, Are murder'd for our pains. This bitter taste Yield his engrossments to the ending father.

Re-enter Warwick.

Now, where is he that will not stay so long Till his friend sickness hath determin'd me? War. My lord, I found the prince in the next room, Weshing with kindly tears his gentle cheeks; With such a deep demeanour in great sorrow, That tyranny, which never quaff'd but blood, Would, by beholding him, have wash'd his knife With gentle eye-drops. He is coming hither. K. Hen. But wherefore did he take away the crown?

Re-enter Prince Henry

Lo, where he comes.-Come hither to me, Harry.

Depart the chamber, leave us here sione. [Exeunt CLAR., P. HUMPH., Lords, &c. P. Hen. I never thought to hear you speak again. K. Henry. Thy wish was father, Harry, to that thought:

I stay too long by thee, I weary thee. Dost thou so hunger for my empty chair Weary of solid firmness, -melt itself Into the seal and, other times, to see The beachy girdle of the ocean mock, Too wide for Neptune's hips; how chances And changes fill the cup of alteration With divers liquors! Oh, if this were seen, The happiest youth,-viewing his progress through, What perils past, what crosses to ensue,-Would shut the book, and sit him down and die. 'Tis not ten years gone [friends, Since Richard and Northumberland, great Did feast together, and in two years after Were they at wars. It is but eight years since This Percy was the man nearest my soul; Who like a brother toil'd in my affairs, And laid his love and life under my foot Yea, for my sake, even to the eyes of Richard

Gave him defiance. But which of you was hy, Yon, cousin Nevil, as I may remember,-

To WARWICK. When Richard, -with his eye brimful of tears, Then check'd and rated by Northumberland, Did speak these words, now prov'd a prophecy? Northumberland, thou ladder by the which My cousin Bolingbroke ascends my throne. Though then, God knows, I had no such intent, But that necessity so bow'd the state That I and greatness were compell'd to kiss:-The time shall come, thus did he follow it, The time will come, that foul sin, gathering head,

Shall break into corruption—so went on, Foretelling this same time's condition,

And the division of our amity.

War. There is a history in all men's lives, Figuring the nature of the times deceas'd; The which observ'd, a man may prophesy, With a near aim, of the main chance of things As yet not come to life, which in their seeds And weak beginnings lie intreasured. [time; Such things become the hatch and hrood of And, hy the necessary form of this, King Richard might create a perfect guess That great Northumberland, then false to him, Would of that seed grow to a greater falseness; Which should not find a ground to root upon, Unless on you.

K. Hen. Are these things, then, necessities? Then let us meet them like necessities;-And that same word even now cries out on us: They say the hishop and Northumberland

Are fifty thousand strong.

It cannot he, my lord; Rumour doth double, like the voice and echo, The numbers of the fear'd. Please it your grace

To go to bed. Upon my life, my lord, The powers that you already have sent forth Shall hring this prize in very easily. To comfort you the more, I have receiv'd A certain instance that Glendower is dead. Your majesty hath been this fortnight ill; And these unseason'd hours perforce must add Unto your sickness. K. Hen.

I will take your counsel: And, were these inward wars once out of hand, We would, dear lords, unto the Holy Land.

Scene II.—Court before Justice Shallow's House in Gloucestershire.

Enter SHALLOW and SILENCE, meetina: MOULDY, SHADOW, WART, FEEBLE, BULL-CALF, and Servants, behind

Shal. Come on, come on, come on, sir; give me your hand, sir, give me your hand, sir: an early stirrer, by the rood. And how doth my good cousin Silence?

Sil. Good-morrow, good cousin Shallow.

Shal. And how doth my cousin, your hedfellow? and your fairest daughter and mine, my god-daughter Ellen?

Sil. Alas, a black ousel, cousin Shallow! Shal. By yea and nay, sir, I dare say my cousin William is become a good scholar: he is at Oxford still, is he not?

Sil. Indeed, sir, to my cost.

Shal. He must, then, to the inns of court shortly: I was once of Clement's-inn; where I think they will talk of mad Shallow yet.

Sil. You were called lusty Shallow then, cousin.

Shal. By the mass, I was called anything; and I would have done anything indeed, too, and roundly too. There was I, and little John Doit of Staffordshire, and black George Bare, and Francis Pickbone, and Will Squele a Cotswold man,—you had not four such swinge-hucklers in all the inns of court again: and, I may say to you, we knew where the bona-robas were, and had the hest of them all at commandment. Then was Jack Falstaff, now Sir John, a boy, and page to Thomas Mowhray, Duke of Norfolk.

Sil. This Sir John, consin, that comes hither anon about soldiers?

Shal. The same Sir John, the very same. saw him hreak Skogan's head at the court gate, when he was a crack not thus high: and the very same day did I fight with one Sampson Stockfish, a fruiterer, behind Gray's-inn. Jesu, Jesu, the mad days that I have spent! and to see how many of mine old acquaintance are deadi

Sil. We shall all follow, consin.

Shal. Certain, 'tis certain; very sure, very sure: death, as the Psalmist saith, is certain to all; all shall die.-How a good yoke of bullocks at Stamford fair?

Sil. Truly, cousin, I was not there.

Shal. Death is certain.—Is old Double of your town living yet?

Sil. Dead, sir.

Shal. Jesu, Jesu, deadl-he drew a good how; and dead!—he shot a fine shoot:—John of Gaunt loved him well, and betted much money on his head. Dead!—he would have clapp'd in the clout at twelve score, and carried you a forehand shaft a fourteen and fourteen and a half, that it would have done a man's heart good to see. How a score of ewes now?

Sil. Thereafter as they be: a score of good ewes may be worth ten pounds. Shal. And is old Double dead?

Sil. Here come two of Sir John Falstaff's [Excunt. | men, as I think.

Which I with more than with a common pain 'Cainst all the world will rightfully maintain

K. Hen. Look, look, here comes my John of Lencester.

Enter PRINCE JOHN OF LANCASTER, WAR-WICE, Lords, and others.

P. John. Health, peace and happiness to my royal father!

K. Hen. Thou bring'st me happiness and peace, son John;

But health, alack, with youthful wings is flown From this bare wither'd trunk: upon thy sight, My worldly business makes a period. Where is my Lord of Warwick?

P. Hen. My Lord of Werwick! K. Hen. Doth any name particular belong Unto the lodging where I first did swoon?

War. 'Tis call'd Jerusalem, my noble lord. K. Hen. Land he to God!—even there my life must end.

It hath been prophesied to me many years, I should not die but in Jerusalem; Which vainly I supposed the Holy Land:-But bear me to that chamber; there I'll lie; In that Jerusalem shall Harry die. [Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE L-GLOUCESTERSHIRE. A Hall in SHALLOW'S House.

Enter Shallow, Falstaff, Bardolph, and Page.

Shal. By cock and pie, sir, you shall not away to-night.—What, Davy, I say!

Fal. You must excuse me, Master Robert Shallow.

Shal. I will not excuse you; you shall not be excused; excuses shall not be admitted; there is no excuse shall serve; you shall not be | ing with them, is turned into z justice Elf excused .- Why, Dary!

Enter DAVY.

Davy. Here, sir.

Shal. Davy, Davy, Davy,—let me see,
Davy; let me see:—yea, marry, William cook, bid him come hither.—Sir John, you shall not he excused.

Davy. Marry, sir, thus; - those precepts cannot be served: and, again, sir, shall we sow the headland with wheat?

Shal. With red wheat, Davy. But for William cook:—are there no young pigeons? Davy. Yes, sir.—Here is now the smith's note for shoeing and plough-irons.

Shal. Let it be cast, and paid.—Sir John,

you shall not be excused.

Davy. Now, sir, a new link to the bucket must needs be had:—and, sir, do you mean to stop any of William's wages about the sack he lost the other day at Hinckley fair?

Shal. He shall answer it.—Some pigeons Davy, a couple of short-legged hens, a joint of mutton, and any pretty little tiny kickshaws, tell William cook. [sir?

Davy. Doth the man of war stay all night, Shal. Yea, Davy, I will use him well: a friend ? the court is hetter than a penny in purse. Use his men well, Davy; for they are arrant knaves, and will backbite.

Davy. No worse than they are back-bitter, sir; for they have marvellous foul linen. Shal. Well conceited, Davy:-about the business, Davy.

Davy. I beseech you, sir, to counterance
William Visor of Wincot against Clement Perkes of the hill.

Shal. There are many complaints, Davy, against that Visor: that Visor is an arrait knave, on my knowledge.

Davy. I grant your worship that he is a knave sir; but yet, God forbid, sir, but a knave should have some countenance at his friend's request. An honest man, sir, is able to speak for himself, when a knave is not. I have served your worship truly, sir, this eight years; and if I cannot once or twice in a quarter bear out a knave against an honest man, I have but a very little credit with your worship. The knave is mine honest friend, sir; therefore, I beseeth your worship, let him be countenanced.

Shal. Go to; I say, he shall have no wrong. Look about, Davy. [Exit Davy] Where are you, Sir John? Come, come, come, off with your boots.—Give me your hand, Master Ex-dolph.

Bard. I am glad to see your worship.

Shal. I thank thee with all my heart, hin! Master Bardolph: and welcome, my till fellow [to the Page.]. - Come, Sir John.

Fal. I'll follow you, good Master Robert Shallow. [Exit SHALLOW.] Bardolph, lock to our horses. [Exeunt BARDOLPH and Page.]
If I were sawed into quantities, I should make four dozen of such hearded hermits' staves as Master Shallow. It is a wonderful thing to see the semblable coherence of his men's spinis and his: they, hy observing of him, do bear themselves like foolish justices; he, by convenserving-man: their spirits are so married in conjunction with the participation of society that they flock together in consent, like so many will geese. If I had a suit to Master Shallow, I would humour his men with the imputation of being near their master: if to his men, I would curry with Master Shallow that no man const better command his servants. It is certain that either wise hearing or ignorant carriege is caught, as men take diseases, one of another: therefore, let men take heed of their company. I will devise matter enough out of this Shallow to keep Prince Harry in continual laughter the wearing out of six fashions,—which is for terms, or two actions,—and he shall lend without intervallums. O, it is much that a ke with a slight oath, and a jest with a sad book. will do with a fellow that never had the ache in his shoulders! O, you shall see him laugh to his face be like a wet cloak ill laid up! Shal. [Within.] Sir John!

Fal. I come, Master Shallow; I come. [Exi. Master Shallow.

SCENE IL-WESTMINISTER. A Room in the Palace.

Enter, severally, WARWICE and the Lord Chief-Justice.

Wer. How now, my lord chief-justice! whither away?

Bull. A whoreson cold, sir,-a cough, sir,which I caught with ringing in the king's affairs upon his coronation day, sir.

Fal. Come, thou shalt go to the wars in a gown; we will have away thy cold; and I will take such order that thy friends shall ring for thee .- Is here all?

Shol. Here is two more called than your number; you must have hut four here, sir:and so, I pray you, go in with me to dinner.

Fal. Come, I will go drink with you, but I cannot tarry dinner. I am glad to see you, hy my troth, Master Shallow.

Shol. O, Sir John, do you remember since we lay all night in the windmill in Saint George's Fields?

Fal. No more of that, good Master Shallow, no more of that.

Shol. Ha, it was a merry night. And is Jane Nightwork alive?

Fal. She lives. Master Shallow.

Shal. She never could away with me.

Fal. Never, never; she would always say she could not ahide Master Shallow.

Shol. By the mass, I could anger her to the heart. She was then a hona-roha. Doth she hold her own well?

Fal. Old, old, Master Shallow.

Shol. Nay, she must be old; she cannot choose hut be old; certain she's old; and had Robin Nightwork, hy old Nightwork, hefore I came to Clement's-inn.
Sil. That's fifty-five year ago.
Shol. Ha, cousin Silence, that thou hadst seen that that this knight and I have seen!-Ha, Sir John, said I well?

Fal. We have heard the chimes at midnight,

Master Shallow.

Shol. That we have, that we have, that we have; in faith, Sir John, we have: our watch-word was, Hem, boys!—Come, let's to dinner; come, let's to dinner:-O, the days that we have seen!-come, come.

[Exeunt FAL., SHAL., and Sil.

Bull. Good Master Corporate Bardolph. stand my friend; and here is four Harry ten shillings in French crowns for yon. In very truth, sir, I had as lief he hanged, sir, as go: and yet, for mine own part, sir, I do not care; hut rather, hecause I am unwilling, and, for mine own part, have a desire to stay with my friends; else, sir, I did not care for mine own part, so much.

Bord. Go to; stand aside.

. Moul. And, good master corporal captain, for my old dame's sake, stand my friend: she has nohody to do anything about her when I am gone; and she is old, and cannot help herself: you shall have forty, sir.

Bord. Go to; stand aside.

Fee. By my troth, I care not; a man can die but once; wa owe God a death: I'll ne'er hear a hase mind: an't he my destiny, so; an't he not, so: no man's too good to serve his prince; and, let it go which way it will, he that dies this year is quit for the next.

Bard. Well said; thou'rt a good fellow.

Fec. Faith, Ph bear no hase mind.

Re-enter FALSTAFF and Justices.

Fal. Come, sir, which men shall I have? Shol. Four of which you please.

Bard. Sir, a word with you:-I have three pound to free Mouldy and Bulicalf.

Fal. Go to; well. have? Shol. Come, Sir John, which four will you

Fal. Do you choose for me. Shol. Marry, then,-Mouldy, Bullcalf.

Feeble, and Shadow.

Fal. Mouldy and Bullcalf:—for you, Mouldy, stay at home till you are past service: and for your part, Bullcalf,-grow till you come unto it: I will none of you.

Shol. Sir John, Sir John, do not yourself . wrong: they are your likeliest men, and I would have you served with the best.

Fal. Will you tell me, Master Shallow, how to choose a man? Care I for the limb, the thews, the stature, bulk, and big assemblance of a man! Give me the spirit, Master Shallow. -Here's Wart; -you see what a ragged appearance it is: he shall charge you and discharge you, with the motion of a pewterer's hammer; come off, and on, swifter than he that gibbets-on the hrewer's bucket. And this same half-faced fellow, Shadow,—give me this man: he presents no mark to the enemy; the foeman may with as great aim level at the edge of a penknife. And, for a retreat, -how swiftly will this Feeble, the woman's tailor, run offl O, give me the spare man, and spare me the great ones.-Put me a caliver into Wart's hand, Bardolph.

Bord. Hold. Wart, traverse: thus, thus,

thus.

Fal. Come, manage me your caliver. So:very well:—go to:—very good:—exceeding good.—O, give me always a little, lean, old, chapped, hald shot.—Well said, i'faith, Wart; thou'rt a good scab; hold, there's a tester for Shal. He is not his craft's-master, he doth not do it right. I remember at Mile-end Green, -when I lay at Clement's-inn,-I was then Sir Dagonet in Arthur's show,—there was a little quiver fellow, and he would manage you his piece thus; and he would about and about, and come you in and come you in: rah, toh, toh, would he say; bounce would he say; and away again would he go, and again would he come: -I shall never see such a fellow.

Fol. These fellows will do well, Master Shallow.—God keep you, Master Silence: I will not usa many words with you. - Fare you well, gentlemen both: I thank you: I must a dozen mile to-night.-Bardolph, give the soldiers coats.

Shol. Sir John, heaven hless you, and prosper your affairs, and send us peace! as you return, visit my house; let our old acquaintance he renewed: peradventure I will with you to the court.

Fal. 'Fore God, I would you would, Master Shallow.

Shal. Go to; I have spoke at a word. you well. Excunt SHAL. and SIL. Fal. Fare you well, gentle gentlemen. On.

Bardolph; lesd the men away. [Excunt BAR-

With the like bold, just, and impartial spirit As you have done 'gainst me. There is my hand:

You shall be as a father to my youth: My voice shall sound as you do prompt mine

And I will stoop and humble my intents To your well-practis'd wise directions. And, princes all, believe me, I beseech you;-My father is gone wild into his grave, For in his tomb lie my affections; And with his spirit sadly I survive. To mock the expectation of the world, To frustrate prophecies, and to raze out Rotten opinion, who hath writ me down After my seeming. The tide of blood in me Hath proudly flow'd in vanity till now: Now doth it turn, and ebb back to the sea Where it shall mingle with the state of floods, And flow henceforth in formal majesty.

Now call we our high court of parliament: And let us choose such limbs of noble counsel, That the great body of our state may go In equal rank with the best-govern'd nation; That war or peace, or both at once, may be As things acquanited and familiar to us In which you, father, shall have foremost hand. To the Lord Chief-Justice.

Our coronation done, we will accite. As I before remember'd, all our state: And, -God consigning to my good intents, No prince nor peer shall have just cause to say, God shorten Harry's happy life one day.

Exeunt.

SCENE III.—GLOUCESTERSHIRE. The Garden of SHALLOW'S House.

Enter Falstaff, Shallow, Silence, Bar-DOLPH, the Page, and DAVY.

Shal. Way, you shall see mine orchard, where, in an arbour, we will eat a last year's pippin of my own graffing, with a dish of carraways, and so forth:-come, cousin Silence:-and then to bed.

Fal. 'Fore God, you have here a goodly dwelling and z rich.

Shal. Barren, berren, barren; beggars all, beggars all, Sir John:—merry, good eir.—Spread, Davy; spread, Davy: well said, Davy. Fal. This Davy serves you for good uses; he is your serving-men end your husband.

Shal. A good variet, a good variet, a very good variet, Sir John:-by the mass. I have drunk too much sack at supper:- a good variet. Row sit down, now sit down:--come, cousin. Sil. Ah, sirrah! quoth-a,—we shall

Do nothing but eat, and make good cheer, [Singing.

And praise heaven for the merry year; When flesh is cheap, and females dear, And lusty lads roam here and there, So merrily,

And ever among so merrily.

Fal. There's a merry heart!—Good Master Silence, I'll give you a health for that anon: Shal. Give Master Bardolph some wine, Davy.

Davy. Sweet sir, sit [seating BARDOLPH and the Page at another table]; I'll be with you! How now, Pistol!

anon; most sweet sir, sit.-Master Page, good Master Page, sit.—Proface! What you want in meat, we'll have in drink. But you must bear; the heart's all.

Shal. Be merry, Master Bardolph; and my little soldier there, be merry.

Sil. Be merry, be merry, my wife has oil; [Singing.

For women are shrews, both short and tall: Tis merry in hall when beards wag all, And welcome merry shrove-tide. Be merry, be merry, &c.

Fol. I did not think Master Silence had been a man of this mettle.

Sil. Who, I? I have been merry twice and once ere now.

Re-enter DAVY.

Davy. There is a dish of leather-coats for YOU Setting them before BARD:

Shal. Davy, Davy. Your worship?-Pil be with you. straight [to BARD.]-A cup of wine, sir?

Sil. A cup of wine that's brisk and fine,

And drink unto the leman mine; And a merry heart lives long-a.

Fal. Well, said, Master Silence. Sil. And we shall be merry; -now comes in the sweet of the night.

Fal. Health and long life to you, Mester Silence.

Sil. Fill the cup, and let it come; [Singing,

Pil pledge you a mile to the bottom. Shal. Honest Bardolph, welcome: if thou wantest anything, and wilt not call, beshre thy heart.-Welcome, my little tiny thief [to: the Pagel; and welcome indeed too .- Pil drink to Master Bardolph, and to all the cavaleroes about London.

Davy. I hope to see London once ere I die. Bard. An I might see you there, Davy,-Shal. By the mass, you'll crack a quart together,—ha! will you not, Master Bardolph?

Bard. Yea, sir, in a pottle-pot.

Shal. By God's liggens, I thank thee:—the knave will stick by thee, I can assure thee that: he will not out; he is true bred.

Bard. And I'll stick by him, sir.

Shal. Why, there spoke a king. Lack no-Look thing: be merry. [Knocking heard.] who's at door there, ho! who knocks?

Exit DAYY. Fal. Why, now you have done me right

[To SIL., who has drink a bumper. Do me right, Sil. And dub me knight:

Samingo.

Is't not so? Fal. 'Tis so.

Sil. Is't so? Why, then, say an old man cen do somewhat.

Re-enter DAVY.

Davy. An it please your worship, there's one Pistol come from the court with news. Fal. From the court! let him come in.

Enter PISTOL.

When we are wrong'd, and would unfold our griefs.

We are denied access unto his person [wrong. Even hy those men that most have done us The dangers of the days but newly gone, Whose memory is written on the earth With yet appearing blood,-and the examples Of every minute's instance,-present now. Have put us in these ill-beseeming arms: Not to break peace, or any branch of it, But to establish here a peace indeed. Concurring both in name and quality.

West. When ever yet was your appeal

denied:

Wherein have you heen galled by the king; What peer hath heen suborn'd to grate on you:-

That you should seal this lawless bloody book Of forg'd rebellion with a seal divine, And consecrate commotion's bitter edge? Arch. My brother general, the common-wealth,.

To brother born an household cruelty, I make my quarrel in particular.

West. There is no need of any such redress Or if there were, it not helongs to you. Mowb. Why not to him in part, and to us That feel the bruises of the days hefore, And suffer the condition of these times To lay a heavy and unequal hand:

Upon our honours? West. O, my good Lord Mowbray. Construe the times to their necessities, And you shall say indeed, it is the time, And not the king, that doth you injuries. Yet, for your part, it not appears to me, Either from the king or in the present time, That you should have an inch of any ground To build a grief on: were you not restor'd To all the Duke of Norfolk's signiories, Your noble and right-well-remember'd father's?

Mowb. What thing, in honour, had my father lost,

That need to he reviv'd and breath'd in me? The king, that lov'd him, as the state stood

Was, force perforce, compell'd to hanish him, And then that Henry Bolinghroke and he,-Being mounted and hoth roused in their seats, Their neighing coursers daring of the spur, Their armed staves in charge, their beavers down

Their eyes of fire sparkling through sights of steel,

And the loud trumpet hlowing them together,-Then, then, when there was nothing could bave stay'd My father from the hreast of Bolingbroke, O, when the king did throw his warder down, His own life hung upon the staff he threw; Then threw he down himself, and all their lives That by indictment and by dint of sword Have since miscarried under Bolinghroke. E West. You speak, Lord Mowbray, now you know not what.

The Earl of Hereford was reputed then In England the most valiant gentleman: Who knows on whom fortune would then have smil'd?

But if your father had heen victor there. He ne'er had borne it out of Coventry: For all the country, in a general voice, Cried hate upon him; and all their prayers and love

Were set on Hereford, whom they doted on, And bless'd and grac'd indeed, more than the king.

But this is mere disgression from my purpose.— Here come I from our princely general To know your griefs; to tell you from his grace That he will give you audience; and wherein It shall appear that your demands are just, You shall enjoy them, -everything set off That might so much as think you enemies.

Mowb. But he hath forc'd us to compel this offer;

And it proceeds from policy, not love. West. Mowbray, you overween to take it so; This offer comes from mercy, not from fear: For, lo! within a ken, our army lies: Upon mine honour, all too confident To give admittance to a thought of fear. Our battle is more full of names than yours, Our men more perfect in the use of arms. Our armour all as strong, our cause the best; Then reason will our hearts should be as good: Say you not, then, our offer is compell'd.

Mowb. Well, by my will we shall admit no parley.

West. That argues but the shame of your offence:

A rotten case abides no handling. [sion, Hast. Hath the Prince John a full commis-In very ample virtue of his father, To hear and absolutely to determine Of what conditions we shall stand upon?
West. That is intended in the general's name: I muse you make so slight a question. Arch. Then take, my Lord of Westmoreland.

this schedule, For this contains our general grievances: Each several article herein redress'd, All members of our cause, both here and hence, That are insinew'd to this action, Acquitted by a true substantial form, And present execution of our wills To us and to our purposes consign'd,-We come within our awful hanks again. And knit our powers to the arm of peace.

West. This will I show the general. Please you, lords,

In sight of both our hattles we may meet: And either end in peace, -which God so frame!-

Or to the place of difference call the swords Which must decide it. Arch. My lord, we will do so.

Exit WESTMORELAND. Mowb. There is a thing within my bosom tells me

That no conditions of our peace can stand. Hast. Fear you not that: if we can make our peace Upon such large terms and so absolute As our conditions shall consist upon, Our peace shall stand as firm as rocky mountains. Mowb. Ay, but our valuation shall he such,

That every slight and false-derived canse,

Fal. As it were, to ride day and night; and not to deliberate, not to remember, not to have patience to shift me.-

Shal. It is most certain.

Fal. But to stand stained with travel, and sweating with desire to see him: thinking of nothing else, putting all affairs else in oblivion. as if there were nothing else to be done but to see him.

Pist. 'Tis semper idem, for absque hoc nihîl est: 'tis all in every part. Shal. 'Tis so, indeed.

Pist. My knight, I will inflame thy noble liver,

And make thee rage.

Thy Doll, and Helen of thy noble thoughts. Is in base durance and contagious prison; Haul'd thither

By most mechanical and dirty hand:-[snake, Rouseuprevenge from ebonden with fell Alecto's For Doll is in. Pistol speaks naught but truth. Fal. I will deliver her.

[Shouts within, and the trumpets sound. Pist. There roar'd the sea, and trumpetclangor sounds.

Enter the KING and his Train, the Chief-Justice among them.

Fal. God save thy grace, King Hal; my royal Hall

Pist. The heavens thee guard and keep, most royal imp of fame!

Shal. I cannot perceive how,—unless you give me your doublet, and stuff me out with straw. I beseech you, good Sir John, let me have five hundred of my thousand.

Fal. Sir. I will be as good as my word: this that you heard was but a colour. [Sir John.

Shal. A colour, I fear, that you will die in, Fal. Fear no colours: go with me to dinner. Come, Lieutenant Pistol;—come, Bardolph:—I shall be sent for soon at night.

EPILOGUE.—Spoken by a Dancer.

First my fear; then my court'sy; last my speech. My fear is, your displeasure; my court'sy, my duty; and my speech, to beg your pardons. If you look for a good speech now, you undo me: for what I have to say is of mine own making; and what, indeed, I should say will, I doubt, prove mine own marring. But to the purpose, and so to the venture.-Be it known to you,—as it is very well,—Iwas lately here in the end of a displeasing play, to pray your patience for it, and to promise you a better. I did mean, indeed, to pay you with this; which, if, like an ill venture, it come un-luckily home, I break, and you, my gentle creditors, lose. Here I promised you I would be, and here I commit my body to your mercies: bate me some, and I will pay you some, and, as most debtors do, promise you infinitely.

If my tongue cannot entreat you to acquit me, will you command me to use my legs? and yet that were but light payment, -- to dance out of your debt. But a good conscience will make

P. John. The word of peace is render'd; hark, how they shout!

Mowb. This had been cheerful after victory. Arch. A peace is of the nature of a couquest; For then both parties nobly are subdued,

And neither party loser.

P. John. Go, my lord, And let our army be discharged too.

[Exit WESTMORELAND. And, good my lord, so please you let your trains March hy us, that we may peruse the men We should have cop'd withal.

Go, good Lord Hastings, Arch. And, ere they be dismissed, let them march hy. Exit HASTINGS.

-P. John. I trust, my lords, we shall lie to-· night together.

Re-enter WESTMORELAND.

Now, cousin, wherefore stands our army still? West. The leaders, having charge from you to stand,

Will not go off until they hear you speak.

P. John. They know their duties.

Re-enter Hastings.

West. Good tidings, my Lord Hastings; for I do arrest thee, traitor, of high treason:—
And yon, lord archhishop,—and you, Lord

Mowbray Of capital treason I attach you both.

Mourb. Is this proceeding just and honourable?

West. Is your assembly so?

Arch. Will you thus hreak your faith?

P. John. I pawn'd thee noue: I promis'd you redress of these same grievances

Whereof you did complain; which, by mine . honour,

I will perform with a most Christian care.

But for you, rehels, -look to taste the due Meet for rehellion and such acts as yours. Most shallowly did you these arms commence, Fondly brought here, and foolishly sent hence. Scene III.—Another part of the Forest.

Alcrums: excursions. Enter FALSTAFF and COLEVILE, meeting.

Fcl. What's your name, sir? of what condition are you, and of what place, I pray? Cole. I am a knight, sir; and my name is colevile of the dale.

Fal. Well, then, Colevile is your name, a knight is your degree, and your place the dale: Colevile shall he still your name, a traitor your degree, and the dungeou your dale,-a dale deep enough; so shall you he still Colevile of the dale.

Cole. Are not you Sir John Falstaff?

Fal. As good a man as he, sir, whoe'er I am. Do ye jield, sir? or shall I sweat for you? I do sweat, they are the drops of thy lovers, and they weep for thy death; therefore rouse up fear and tremhling, and do observance to my mercy.

Call in the powers, good cousin Westmoreland. Exit WESTMORELAND. Now, Falstaff, where have you been all this while?

When everything is ended, then you come: These tardy tricks of yours will, on my life, One time or other hreak some gallows' hack.

Fcl. I would be sorry, my lord, but it should be thus: I never knew yet hut rehuke and check was the reward of valour. Do you think me a swallow, an arrow, or a bullet? have I, in my poor and old motion, the expedition of thought? I bave speeded hither with the very extremest inch of possibility; I have foundered nine-score and odd posts: and here, travel taiuted as I am, have, in my pure and immaculate valour, taken Sir John Colevile of the dale, a most furious knight and valorons enemy. But what of that? he saw me, and yielded; that I may justly say with the hook-nosed fellow of Rome,-I came, saw, and overcame.

P. John. It was more of his courtesy than your deserving.

So great an object: can this cockpit hold The vasty fields of France? or may we cram Within this wooden O the very casques
That did affright the air at Agincourt? O, pardon! since a crooked figure may Attest in little place a million; And let us, ciphers to this great acompt, On your imaginary forces work. Suppose within the girdle of these walls Are now confin'd two mighty monarchies, Whose high upreared and abutting fronts The perilous narrow ocean parts asunder:

How chance thou art not with the prince thy Thomas: brother? He loves thee, and thou dost neglect him, Thou hast a better place in his affection Than all thy brothers: cherish it, my boy; And noble offices thou mayst effect Of meditation, after I am dead, Between his greatness and thy other brethren: Therefore omit him not; blunt not his love, Nor lose the good advantage of his grace By seeming cold or careless of his will; For he is gracious if he be observ'd: He hath a tear for pity, and a hand Open as day for melting charity: Yet notwithstanding, being incens'd, he's flint; As humorous as winter, and as sudden As flaws congealed in the spring of day. His temper, therefore, must be well observ'd: Chide him for faults, and do it reverently, When you perceive his blood inclin'd to mirth; But, being moody, give him line and scope, Till that his passions, like a whale on ground, Confound themselves with working. this, Thomas,

And thou shalt prove a shelter to thy friends, A boop of gold to bind thy brothers in, That the united vessel of their blood, Mingled with venom of snggestion,-As, force perforce, the age will pour it in,— Shall never leak, though it do work as strong As aconitum or rash gunpowder.

Cla. With Poins, and other his continual followers.

K. Hen. Most subject is the fattest soil to weeds: And he, the noble image of my youth, Is overspread with them: therefore my grief Stretches itself beyond the hour of death: The blood weeps from my heart when I do shape,

In forms imaginary, the unguided days And rotten times that you shall look upon When I am sleeping with my ancestors. For when his headstrong riot hath no curb When rage and hot blood are his counsellors, When means and lavish manners meet together, O, with what wings shall his affections fly Towards fronting peril and oppos'd decay!

Wor. My gracious lord, you look beyond him quite:

The prince but studies his companions Like a strange tongue; wherein, to gain the language,

'Tis needful that the most immodest word Be look'd upon and learn'd; which once attain'd, Your highness knows, comes to no further use But to be known and hated. So, like gross

The prince will, in the perfectness of time, Cast off his followers; and their memory Shall as a pattern or a measure live, By which his grace must mete the lives of others,

Turning past evils to advantages.

Enter the Archbishop of Canterbury and Bishop of Ely.

Canl. God and his angels guard your sacred throne.

And make you long become it!

K. Hen. Sure, we thank you.
My learned lord, we pray you to proceed,
And justly and religiously unfold
Why the law Salique, that they have in France,
Or should, or should not, bar us in our claim:
And God forbid, my dear and faithful lord,
That you should fashion, wrest, or bow your reading,

Or nicely charge your understanding soul With opening titles miscreate, whose right Suits not in native colours with the truth; For God doth know how many, now in health, Shall drop their blood in approbation Of what your reverence shall incite us to: Therefore take heed how you impawn our person,

How you awake the sleeping sword of war: We charge you, in the name of God, take heed; For never two such kingdoms did contend Without much fall of blood; whose guiltless drops

Are every one a woe, a sore complaint 'Gainst him whose wrongs give edge unto the

swords
That make such waste in brief mortality.
Under this confuration, speak, my lord;
For we will hear, note, and believe in heart
That what you speak is in your conscience wash'd

As pure as sin with baptism.

Cant. Then hear me, gracious sovereign, and you peers,

That owe yourselves, your lives, and services To this imperial throne.—There is no bar To make against your highness' claim to France Butthis, which they produce from Pharamond,—In terram Salicam mulieres ne succedant, No woman shall succeed in Salique land: Which Salique land the French unjustly gloze To be the realm of France, and Pharamond The founder of this law and female bar. Yet their own authors faithfully affirm That the land Salique is in Germany, Between the floods of Sale and of Elbe; Where Charles the Great, having subdu'd the

Saxons,
There left behind and settled certain French;
Who, holding in disdain the German women
For some dishonest manners of their life,
Establish'd then this law,—to wit, no female
Should be inheritrix in Salique land:
Which Salique, as I said, 'twirt Elbe and Sala,
Is at this day in Germany called Meisen.
Then doth it well appear, the Salique law
Was not devised for the realm of France:
Nor did the French possess the Salique land

Until four hundred one-and-twenty years
After defunction of King Pharamond,
Idly suppos'd the founder of this law;
Who died within the year of our redemption
Four hundred twenty-six; and Charles the Great

Subdu'd the Saxons, and did seat the French
Beyond the river Sala, in the year
Eight hundred five. Besides, their writers say,
King Pepin, which deposed Childerick,
Did, as heir general, being descended
Of Blithild, which was daughter to King Clothair.

Make claim and title to the crown of France. Hugh Capet also,—who usurp'd the crown Of Charles the Duke of Lorraine, sole heir male Of the true line and stock of Charles the Great,— To fine his title with some show of truth,— Though, in pure truth, it was corrupt and naught,—

Convey'd himself as heir to the Lady Lingare,
Daughter to Charlemain, who was the son
To Louis the emperor, and Louis the son Of Charles the Great. Also King Louis the Tenth,

Who was sole heir to the usurper Capet, Could not keep quiet in his conscience, Wearing the crown of France, till satisfied The fair Queen Isabel, his grandmother, Was lineal of the Lady Ermengare, Daughter to Charles the foresaid Duke of Lorraine: [Great

By the which marriage the line of Charles the Was re-united to the Crown of France. So that, as clear as is the summer's sun, King Pepin's title, and Hugh Capet's claim, King Louis his satisfaction, all appear To hold in right and title of the female: So do the kings of France unto this day; Howbeit they would hold up this Salique law To bar your highness claiming from the female; And rather choose to hide them in a net Than amply to imbar their crooked titles Usurp'd from you and your progenitors.

K. Hen. May I with right and conscience make this claim?

Cant. The sin upon my head, dread sovereign!

For in the book of Numbers is it writ,— When the man dies, let the inheritance Descend unto the daughter. Gracious lord, Stand for your own; unwind your bloody fize; Look back unto your mighty ancestors: Go, my dread lord, to your great-grandsire's

From whom you claim; invoke his warlike spirit, And your great-uncle's, Edward the Black Prince,

Who on the French ground play'd a tragedy, Making defeat on the full power of France, Whiles his most mighty father on a hill Stood smiling to behold his lion's whelp Forage in blood of French nobility.

O noble English, that could entertain With half their forces the full pride of France, And let another half stand laughing by, All out of work and cold for action! [dead, and the stand half their forces the full pride of France, and let another half stand laughing by, All out of work and cold for action!

What I canst thou not forbear me half an hour? Then, get thee gone, and dig my gravo thyself; And bid the merry bells ring to thine ear, That thou art crowned, not that I am dead. Let all the tears that should bedew my hearse Be drops of balm to sanctify thy head: Only compound me with forgotten dust; Give that which gave thee life unto the worms. liege,

Accusing it, I put it on my head,
To try with it,—as with an enemy
That had before my faco murder'd my father,—
The quarrel of a true inheritor.
But if it did infect my blood with joy,
Or swell my thoughts to any strain of pride;
If any rebel or vain spirit of mine
Did with the least affection of a welcome

K. Hen. O my son,

God put it in thy mind to take it hence, That thou mightst win the more thy father's love, Pleading so wisely in excuse of itl Come hither, Harry, sit thou hy my bed; And hear, I think, the very latest counsel That ever I shall breathe. God knows, my son, By what by-paths and indirect crook'd ways I met this crown; and I myself know woll How troublesome it sat upon my head: To thee it shall descend with hetter quiet, Better opinion, better confirmation; For all the soil of the achievement goes With me into the earth. It seem'd in me But as an honour snatch'd with hoisterous hand; And I had many living to upbraid My gain of it hy their assistances; Which daily grew to quarrel and to bloodshed, Wounding supposed peace: all these hold fears Thon see'st with peril I have answered: For all my reign hath been but as a scene Acting that argument: and now my death chas'd,

Falls upon thee in a more fairer sort;
So thou the garland wear'st successivoly.
Yet, though thou stand'st more sure than I could do,

Changes the mode; for what in me was pur-

Thou art not firm enough, since grioss are green; And all my friends, which thou must make thy

friends,
Have but their stings and teeth nowly ta'en out;
By whose fell working I was first advanc'd,
And by whose power I well might lodge a fear

To be again displac'd: which to avoid, I cut them off; and had a purposo now To lend ont many to the Holy Land, Lest rest and lying still might make them look Too near unto my state. Therefore, my Harry, Be it thy course to busy giddy minds [out, With foreign quarrels; that action, honce home May waste the memory of the formor days. More would I, but my lungs are wasted so, That strength of speech is utterly denied me. How I came by the crown, O God forgive;

And grant it may with thee in true peace livel P. Hen. My gracious liege, You won it, wore it, kept it, gave it me; Then plain and right must my possession he: Your greeting is from him, not from the king. 1 Amb. May it please your majesty to give us leave

Freely to render what we have in charge;
Or shall we sparingly show you far off
The Dauphin's meaning and our embassy?
K. Hen. We are no tyrant, but a Christian king; Unto whose grace our passion is as subject As are our wretches fetter'd in our prisons: Therefore with frank and with uncurbed plain-

Tell us the Dauphin's mind.

1. Amb. Thus, then, in few.
Your highness, lately sending into France,
Did claim some certain dukedoms, in the right
Of your great predecessor, King Edward the Third.

In answer of which claim, the prince our master Says, that you savour too much of your youth; And bids you be advis'd there's naught in

France
That can be with a nimble galliard won;
You cannot revel into dukedoms there.
He therefore sends you, meeter for your spirit,
This tun of treasure; and, in lieu of this,
Desires you let the dukedoms that you claim Hear no more of you. This the Dauphin speaks.

K. Hen. What treasure, uncle?
Exe. Tennis-balls, my liege.

K. Hen. We are glad the Dauphin is so pleasant with us; is present and your pains we thank you for:

His present and your pains we thank you for: When we have match'd our rackets to these balls,

We will, in France, by God's grace, play a set Shall strike his father's crown into the hazard. Tell him he hath made a match with such a wrangler

That all the courts of France will be disturb'd
With chases. And we understand him well,
How he comes o'er us with our wilder days,
Not measuring what use we made of them.
We never valu'd this poor seat of England;
And therefore, living hence, did give ourself
To barbarous license; as 'tis ever common That men are merriest when they are from home.

But tell the Dauphin, I will keep my state;
Be like a king, and show my sail of greatness,
When I do rouse me in my throne of France:
For that I have laid by my majesty,
And plodded like a man for working-days;
But I will rise there with so full a glory
That I will dazzle all the eyes of France,
Yea, strike the Dauphin blind to look on us.
And tell the present prince this mock of his Heth turn'd his balls to gun-stones; and his soul
Shall stand sore charged for the wasteful vengeance [widows

That shall fly with them; for many a thousand Shall this his mock mock out of their dear husbands; [down;

Mock mothers from their sons, mock castles
And some are yet ungotten and unborn [scorn.
That shall have cause to curse the Dauphin's
But this lies all within the will of God,
To whom I do appeal; and in whose name,
Tell you the Dauphin, I am coming on,

To venge me as I may, and to put forth My rightful hand in a well-hallow'd cause. So, get you hence in peace; and tell the Dauphin His jest will savour but of shallow wit, [it.— When thousands weep, more than did laugh at Convey them with safe conduct.—Fare you well.

[Exeunt Ambassadors.

Exc. This was a merry message.

K. Hen. We hope to make the sender blush at it.

Therefore, my lords, omit no happy hour That may give furtherance to our expedition; For we have now no thought in us but France; Save those to God, that run before our business. Therefore let our proportions for these wars Be soon collected, and all things thought upon That may with reasonable switness add More feathers to our wings; for, God before, We'll chide this Dauphin at his father's door. Therefore let every man now task his thought. That this fair action may on foot be brought.

And silken dalliance in the wardrobe lies: Now thrive the armourers, and honour's thought Reigns solely in the breast of every man: They sell the pasture now to buy the horse; Following the mirror of all Christian kings, With winged heels, as English Mercuries, For now sits Expectation in the air; And hides a sword from hilts unto the point. With crowns imperial, crowns, and coronets, Promis'd to Harry and his followers. The French, advis'd by good intelligence Of this most dreadful preparation, Shake in their fear; and with pale policy Seek to divert the English purposes. O England!-model to thy inward greatness, Like little body with a mighty heart,-What mightst thou do, that honour would thee do,

Were all thy children kind and naturall lout
But see thy fault! France hath in thee found
A nest of hollow bosoms, which he fills
With treacherous crowns; and three corrupted

One, Richard Earl of Cambridge; and the Henry Lord Scroop of Masham; and the third, Sir Thomas Grey, knight, of Northumberland,—Have, for the guilt of France,—O guilt indeed—Confirm'd conspiracy with fearful France; And by their hands this grace of kings must die.—

If hell and treason hold their promises,— Ere he take ship for France, and in Southampton.

Linger your patience on; and well digest The abuse of distance, while we force a play. The sum is paid; the traitors are agreed; The king is set from London; and the scene Is now transported, gentles, to Southampton,— There is the play-house now, there must you

And thence to France shall we convey you safe, And bring you back, charming the narrow seas To give you gentle pass; for, if we may, We'll not offend one stomach with our play. Ch. Just. How doth the king? [ended. War. Exceeding well; his cares are now all Ch. Just. I hope, not dead. War. He's walk'd the way of nature;

And to our purposes he lives no more.

Ch. Just. I would his majesty had call'd me with him:

The service that I truly did his life
Hath left me open to all injuries. [you not.
War. Indeed I think the young king loves Ch. Just. I know he doth not; and do arm
myself

To welcome the condition of the time; Which cannot look more hideously npon me Than I have drawn it in my fantasy.

War. Here come the heavy issue of dead Harry:

O that the living Harry had the temper
Of him, the worst of these three gentlemen!
How many nobles then should hold their places
That must strike sail to spirits of vile sort!
Ch. Just. O God, I fear all will be overturn'd.

Enter Prince John, Prince Humphrey, Clarence, Westmoreland, and others.

P. John. Good-morrow, cousin Warwick, good-morrow.

i.P. Humph., Cla. Good-morrow, cousin.
P. John. We meet like men that had forgot to speak.

War. We do remember; but our argument Is all too heavy to admit much talk. 9.P. John. Well, peace be with him that hath made us heavy!

e Ch. Just. Peace be with us, lest we be neavieri y.P. Humph. O, good my lord, you have lost a friend indeed;

And I dare swear you borrow not that face Of seeming sorrow,—it is sure your own.

P. John. Though no man be assur'd what grace to find,

You stand in coldest expectation:

Fram the sorrier; would 'twere otherwise.

Cla. Well, you must now speak Sir John Falstaff fair;

Which swims against your stream of quality.

2.Ch. Just. Sweet princes, what I did, I did in honour,

Led by the impartial conduct of my soul;
And never shall you see that I will beg
A ragged and forestall'd remission.
If truth and upright innocency fail me,
I'll to the king my master that is dead,
And tell him who hath sent me after him.
War. Here comes the prince.

Enter KING HENRY V.

Ch Just. Good-morrow; and God save your majesty! [majesty,

King. This new and gorgeous garment, Sits not so easy on me as you think.—
Brothers, you mix your sadness with some fear: This is the English, not the Turkish court;
Not Amurath an Amurath succeeds,
But Harry Harry. Yet be sad, good brothers,
For, to speak truth, it very well becomes you:
Sofrow so royally in you appears
That I will deeply put the fashion on,

And wear it in my heart: why, then, be sad; But entertain no more of it, good brothers, Than a joint burden laid npon us all. For me, by heaven, I bid you be assur'd, I'll be your father and your brother too; Let me but hear your love, I'll bear your cares; Yet weep that Harry's dead; and so will I; But Harry lives, that shall convert those tears, By number, into hours of happiness.

P. John, &c. We hope no other from your majesty.

King. You all look strangely on me:—and you most; [To the Chief-Justice. You are, I think, assur'd I love you not. Ch. Just. I am assur'd, if I be measur'd

Ch. Just. I am assur'd, if I be measur'd rightly.

Your majesty hath no just canse to hate me.

King. No!

How might a prince of my great hopes forget So great indignities you laid upon me! What! rate, rebuke, and roughly send to prison The immediate hair of England! Was this easy? May this be wash'd in Lethe, and forgotten?

Ch. Just. I then did use the person of your father:

The image of his power low then in man

The image of his power lay then in me:
And, in the administration of his law,
Whiles I was busy for the commonwealth,
Your highness pleased to forget my place,
And majesty and power of law and justice,
The image of the king whom I presented,
And struck me in my very seat of judgment;
Whereon, as an offender to your father,
I gave bold way to my anthority,
And did commit you. If the deed were ill,
Be you contented, wearing now the garland,
To have a son set your decrees at naught,
To pluck down justice from your awful bench,

To trip the course of law and blunt the sword
That guards the peace and safety of your person;
Nay, more, to spurn at your most royal image,

And mock your workings in a second body.

Question your royal thoughts, make the case
yours;

Be now the father, and propose a son;
Hear your own dignity so much profan'd,
See your most dreadful laws so loosely slighted,
Behold yourself so by a son disdain'd;
And then imagine me taking your part,
And, in your power, soft silencing your son:
After this cold considerance, sentence me;
And, as you are a king, speak in your state
What I have done that misbecame my place,
My person, or my liege's sovereignty.

King. You are right, justice, and you weigh this well;

Therefore still bear the balance and the sword:
And I do wish your honours may increase
Till you do live to see a son of mine
Offend you, and obey you, as I did.
So shall I live to speak my father's words
Happy am I, that have a man so bold,
That dares do justice on my proper son;
And not less happy, having such a son,
That would deliver up his greatness so
Into the hands of justice. You did commit me:
For which I do commit into your hand
The unstain'd sword that you have ns'd to bear;
With this remembrance,—that you use the same

I'll live by Nym and Nym shall live by me;-Is not this just?-for I shall sutler be Unto the camp, and profits will accrue. -Give me thy hand.

Nym. I shall have my noble? Pist. In cash most justly paid. Nym. Well, then, that's the humour of it.

Re-enter Hostess.

Host. As ever you came of women, come in quickly to Sir John. Ah, poor heartl he is so shaken of a burning quotidian tertian that it is most lamentable to behold. Sweet men, come | And labour shall refresh itself with hope, to him.

Nym. The king hath run bad humours on the knight; that's the even of it.

Pist. Nym, thou hast spoke the right; His heart is fracted and corroborate.

Nym. The king is a good king: but it must be as it may; he passes some humours and careers.

Pist. Let us condole the knight; for, lambkins, we will live Exeunt.

Enter Falstaff, Shallow, Pistol, Bar-DOLPH, and the Page.

Fal. Stand here by me, Master Rohert Shallow; I will make the king do you grace: I will leer upon him, as he comes by; and do but mark the countenance that he will give me.

Pist. God hiess thy lungs, good knight.
Fal. Come here, Pistol; stand hehind me.-O, if I had had time to have made new liveries, I would have bestowed the thousand pound I borrowed of you [to SHALLOW]. But 'tis no matter; this poor show doth better: this doth infer the zeal. I had to see him,— turning o' the tide: for after I saw him fumble with the sheets, and play with flowers, and smile upon his fingers' ends, I knew there was but one way; for his nose was as sharp as a pen, and 'a babbled of green fields. How now, Sir John! quoth I: what, man! be o' good cheer. So 'a cried out—God, God, God! three or four times. Now I, to comfort him, bid him 'a should not think of God; I hoped there was no need to trouble himself with any such thoughts yet. So 'a bade me lay more clothes on his feet: I put my hand into the bed and felt them, and they were as cold as any stone; then I felt to his knees, and so upward and upward, and all was as cold as any stone.

Nym. They say he cried out of sack.

Host. Ay, that 'a did. Bard. And of women.

Host. Nay, that 'a did not. Boy. Yes, that 'a did; and said they were devils incarnate.

Host. 'A could never abide carnation; 'twas a colour he never liked.

Boy. 'A said once, the devil would have him about women.

Host. 'A did in some sort, indeed, handle women; but then he was rheumatic, and talked of the whore of Babylon.

Boy. Do you not remember, 'a saw a flea stick upon Bardolph's nose, and 'a said it was a black soul burning in hell?

Band. Well, the fuel is gone that maintained that fire: that's all the riches I got in his service.

Pist. Touch her soft mouth and march.

Bard. Farewell, hostess. [Kissing her.
Nym. I cannot kiss, that is the humour of it; but, adieu.
Pist. Let housewifery appear: keep close, I thee command.

Host. Farewell; adieu. [Exeunt.

Scene IV.—France. A Room in the French King's Palace.

Flourish. Enter the French King, attended; the Dauphin, the Duke of Burgundy; the Constable, and others.

Fr. King. Thus come the English with full power upon us;

And more than carefully it us concerns
To answer royally in our defences.
Therefore the Dukes of Berri and of Bretagne,
Of Brabant and of Orleans, shall make forth,
And you, Prince Dauphin,—with all swift despatch,

To line and new repair our towns of war With men of courage and with means defendant; For England his approaches makes as fierce As waters to the sucking of a gulf. It fits us, then, to be as provident As fear may teach us, out of late examples Left by the fatal and neglected English Upon our fields.

Dau. My most redoubted father, It is most meet we arm us 'gainst the foe; For peace itself should not so dull a kingdom,—Though war, nor no known quarrel, were in question.—

But that defences, musters, preparations, Should be maintain'd, assembled, and collected, As were a war in expectation. Therefore, I say, 'tis meet we all go forth To view the sick and feeble parts of France: And let us do it with no show of fear;

Mid let us do it with no show of fear;
No, with no more than if we heard that England
Were busied with a Whitsun morris-dance:
For, my good liege, she is so idly king'd,
Her sceptre so fantastically borne

By a vain, giddy, shallow, humorous youth, That fear attends her not.

Con. O peace, Prince Dauphint You are too much mistaken in this king: Question your grace the late ambassadors,—With what great state he heard their embassy, How well supplied with noble counsellors, How modest in exception, and withal How terrible in constant resolution,—And you shall find his vanities forespent Where but the outside of the Roman Brutus, Covering discretion with a coat of folly;

As gardeners do with ordure hide those roots That shall first spring and be most delicate.

Dau. Well, 'tis not so, my lord high constable;
But though we think it so, it is no matter:
In cases of defence 'tis best to weigh
The enemy more mighty than he seems:
So the proportions of defence are fill'd;
Which, of a weak and niggardly projection,
Doth like a miser spoil his coat with scanting
A little cloth.

Fr. King. Think we King Harry strong; And, princes, look you strongly arm to meet

The kindred of him hath been flesh'd upon us; And he is bred out of that bloody strain
That haunted us in our familiar paths:
Witness our too-much memorable shame
When Cressy battle fatally was struck,
And all our princes captiv'd by the hand
Of that black name, Edward Black Prince of Wales; (standing, Whiles that his mountain sire,—on mountain Up in the air, crown'd with the golden sun,—Saw his heroical seed, and smil'd to see him, Mangle the work of nature, and deface The patterns that by God and by French fathers Had twenty years been made. This is a stem Of that victorious stock; and let us fear The native mightiness and fate of him.

Enter a Messenger.

ACT III.

Scene I.—France. Before Harfleur.

Alarums. Enter King Henry, Exeter, Bed-FORD, GLOSTER, and Soldiers, with scalingladders.

K. Hen. Once more unto the breach, dear. friends, once more;

Or close the wall up with our English dead! In peace there's nothing so becomes a man As modest stillness and humility: But when the blast of war blows in our ears. Then imitate the action of the tiger: Stiffen the sinews, summon up the blood, Disguise fair nature with hard-favour'd rage; Then lend the eye a terrible aspect; Let it pry through the portage of the head Like the brass cannon; let the hrow o'erwhelm

As fearfully as doth a galled rock O'erhang and jutty his confounded hase, Swill'd with the wild and wasteful ocean. Now set the teeth and stretch the nostril wide; Hold hard the breath, and bend up every spirit To his full height!—On, on, you noble English, Whose blood is fet from fathers of war-proof!— Fathers that, like so many Alexanders, Have in these parts from morn till even fought, And sheath'd their swords for lack of argument:-

Dishonour not your mothers; now attest That those whom you call'd fathers did heget

Be copy now to men of grosser blood. And teach them how to war!-And you, good yeomen,

Whose limbs were made in England, show us

The mettle of your pasture; let us swear That you are worth your breeding: which I doubt not;

For there is none of you so mean and hase, That hath not noble lustre in your eyes. I see you stand like greyhounds in the slips, Straining upon the start. The game's afoot: Follow your spirit; and upon this charge Cry—God for Harry! England!—and Saint Georgel Exeunt. Alarum, and chambers go off within.

Enter NYM, BARDOLPH, PISTOL, and Boy.

Bard. On, on, on, on! to the breach, to the hreach!

Nym. Pray thee, corporal, stay: the knocks are too hot; and, for mine own part, I have not a case of lives: the humour of it is too hot, that is the very plain-song of it.

Pist. The plain-song is most just;

humours do ahound:

Knocks go and come: God's vassals drop and die And sword and shield In bloody field

Doth win immorta fame.

Boy. Would I were in an alchouse in London! I would give all my fame for a pot of ale and safety.

Pist. And I:

If wishes would prevail with me, My purpose should not fail with me, But thither would I hie.

Boy. As duly, but not as truly,
As bird doth sing on bough.

Enter Fluellen.

Flu. Up to the preach, you dogs! avaunt, you cullions! Driving them forward. Pist. Be merciful, great duke, to men of mould!

Abate thy rage, abate thy manly rage!

Abate thy rage, great duke! [chucki Good bawcock, bate thy rage! use lenity, sweet Nym. These be good humours!-your honour wins had humours.

Exeunt NYM, PISTOL, BARDOLPH, followed by Fluellen.

Boy. As young as I am, I have observed these three swashers. I am hoy to them all three: but all they three, though they would serve me, could not be man to me; for, indeed. three such antics do not amount to a man. For Bardolph,-he is white-livered and red-faced; by the means whereof 'a faces it out, but fights not. For Pistol,—he hath a killing tongue and a quiet sword; hy the means whereof 'a breaks' words and keeps whole weapons. For Nym,he hath heard that men of few words are the best men; and therefore he scorns to say his prayers lest 'a should be thought a coward: but his few had words are matched with as few good deeds; for 'a never broke any man's head' but his own, and that was against a post when he was drunk. They will steal anything, and call it purchase. Bardolph stole a lute-case, bore it twelve leagues, and sold it for three halfpence. Nym and Bardolph are sworn hrothers in filching; and in Calais they stole a fire-shovel: I knew hy that piece of service the men would carry coals. They would have me as familiar with men's pockets as their gloves or their handkerchers: which makes much against my manhood, if I should take from another's pocket to put into mine; for it is plain pocketing up of wrongs. I must leave them, and seek some hetter service: their villany goes against my weak stomach, and therefore I must Exit. cast it up.

Re-enter Fluellen, Gower following. 15

Gow. Captain Fluellen, you must come presently to the mines; the Duke of Gloster would speak with you.

Flu. To the mines! tell you the duke it is not so goot to come to the mines; for, look you, the mines is not according to the disciplines of for the war: the concavities of it is not sufficient; for, look you, th' athversary,—you may discuss unto the duke, look you,—is digt himself four yard under the countermines; by Cheshu, I think 'a will plow up all, if there is no better directions.

Gow. The Duke of Gloster, to whom the order of the siege is given, is altogether directed by an Irishman,-a very valiant gentleman, i'

So soon did lose his seat, and all at once, As in this king.

Ely. We are blessed in the change. Cant. Hear him but reason in divinity, And, all-admiring, with an inward wish Yon would desire the king were made a prelate: Hear him debate of commonwealth affairs, You would say, it hath been all-in-all his study: List his discourse of war, and you shall hear

A fearful battle render'd you in music: Turn him to any cause of policy, The Gordian knot of it he will unloose, Familiar as his garter:—that, when he speaks, The air, a charter'd libertine, is still, And the mute wonder lurketh in men's ears, To steal his sweet and honey'd sentences; So that the art and practice part of life Must be the mistress of this theorie: Which is a wonder how his grace should glean Since his addiction was to courses vain; His companies unletter'd, rude, and shallow; His hours fill'd up with riots, banquets, sports; And never noted in him any study, Any retirement, any sequestration From open haunts and popularity. inettle.

Ely. The strawberry grows underneath the And wholesome berries thrive and ripen best Reighbour'd by fruit of baser quality: And so the prince obscur'd his contemplation Under the veil of wildness; which, no doubt, Grew like the summer grass, fastest by night,

Unseen, yet crestive in his faculty.

Cant. It must be so; for miracles are cess'd;
And therefore we must needs admit the mesus
How things are perfected.

Ely. But, my good lord, How now for mitisation of this bill Urg'd by the commons? Doth his majesty Incline to it, or no?

Cant. He seems indifferent;
Or, rather, swaying more upon our part
Than cherishing the exhibitors against us:
For I have made an offer to his majesty,—
Upon our spiritual convocation,
And in regard of causes now in hand
Which I have open'd to his grace at large,
As teuching France,—to give a greater sum
Than ever at one time the clergy yet
Did to his predecessors part withal. [lord?

Ely. How did this offer seem receiv'd, my Cant. With good acceptance of his majesty; Sare that there was not time enough to hear.—As, I perceiv'd, his grace would fain have done.—

The severals and unhidden passages
Of his true titles to some certain dukedoms,
And, generally, to the crown and seat of France,
Deriv'd from Edward, his great-grandfather.
Ely. What was the impediment that broke.

this off? Islant

Cant. The French ambassador upon that inCrav'd andience: and the hour, I think, is come
To give him hearing; is it four o'clock?

Ely. It is. Cant. Then go we in, to know his embassy; Which I could, with a ready guess, declare, Before the Frenchman speak a word of it.

Ely. I'll weit upon you; and I long to hear it. [Execut.

Scene II.—The same. A Room of State in the same.

Enter King Henry, Gloster, Bedford. Exeter, Warwick, Westmoreland, and Attendants.

K. Hen. Where is my gracious Lord of Canterbury?

Exe. Not here in presence.

At Herod's bloody-hunting slaughtermen. What say you? will you yield, and this avoid? Or, guilty in defence, be thus destroy'd?

Gov. Our expectation hath this day an end: The Dauphin, whom of succour we entreated, Returns us that his powers are not yet ready To raise so great a siege. Therefore, great king.

We yield our town and lives to thy soft mercy. Enter our gates; dispose of us and ours

For we no longer are defensible. Exeter. K. Hen. Open your gates.—Come, uncle Go you and enter Harfleur; there remain, And fortify it strongly 'gainst the French: Use mercy to them all. For us, dear uncle, The winter coming on, and sickness growing Upon our soldiers,—we will retire to Calais. To-night in Harfleur will we be your guest; To-morrow for the march are we addrest.

Flourish. The KING, &c., enter the Town. SCENE III.—ROUEN. A Room in the Palace.

Enter KATHARINE and ALICE.

Kath. Alice, tu as ete en Angleterre, et tu parles bien le langage.

Alice. Un peu, madame.

Kalh. Je se prie, m'enseignez; il saut que j'apprenne a parler. Comment appellez-vous la main en Anglais?

Alice. La main? elle est appelee de hand.

Kath. De hand. El les doigls?

Alice. Les doigts? ma foi, j'oublie les doigts; mais je me souviendrai. Les doigts? je pense qu'ils sont appeles de fingres; oui, de fingres.

Kath. La main, de hand; les doigts, de fingres. Je pense que je suis le bon écolier; j'ai gagné deux mots d'Anglais vitement. Comment appeles-vous les ongles?

Alice. Les ongles? les appelons de nails. Kath. De nails. Ecoutez; dites-moi, si je parle bien: de hand, de fingres, et de nails. Alice. C'est bien dit, madame; il est fort bon Anglais.

Kath. Dites-moi? l'Anglais pour le bras.

Alice. De arm, madame. Kath. Et le coude? Alice. De elbow. Kath. De elbow. Je me Je me'en fais la répétition de tous les mots que vous m'avez appris des à présent.

Alice. Il est trop difficile, madame, comme je

Kalh. Excusez-moi, Alice; écoutez: de hand, de fingres, de nails, de arm, de bilbow.

Alice. De elbow, madame.

Kalh. O Seigneur Dieu, je m'en oublie! de elbow. Comment appelez-vous le col?
Alice. De neck, madame.
Kath. De nick. El le menton?

Alice. De chin.

Kalh. De sin. Le col, de nick; le menton,

Alice. Oui. Souf votre honneur, en vérité, vous prononcez les mots aussi droit que les natifs d'Anglelerre.

Kath. Je ne doute point d'apprendre, par la grace de Dieu, et en peu de temps.

Alice. N'avez-vous pas déjà oublié ce que je

Kath. Non, he recilerai a vous promptement; de hand, de fingres, de mails,—

Alice. De nails, madame. Kath. De nails, de arm, de ilbow.

Alice: Sauf votre nonneur, de elbow. Kath. Ainsi dis-je; de elbow, de nick, et de sin. Comment appelez-vous le pied et la robe?

Alice. De foot, madame; et de coun. Kath. De foot et de coun! O Seigneur Dieu! ce sont mots de son mauvais, corruptible, gros, et impudique, et non pour les dames d'honneur d'user je ne voudrais prononcer ces mols devant les seigneurs de France pour tout le monde. Il faut de foot et de coun néanmoins. Je recilerai une autre fois ma leçon ensemble: de hand, de fingres, de nails, de arm, de elbow, de nick, de sin, de foot, de coun.

Alice. Excellent, madame! Kath. C'est assez pour une fois: allons-nous à diner. Exeunt.

Scene IV .- The same. Another Room in ihe same.

Enler the FRENCH KING, the DAUPHIN. DUKE OF BOURBON, the Constable of France, and others.

Fr. King. 'Tis certain he hath pass'd the river Somme.

Con. And if he be not fought withal, my lord, Let us not live in France; let us quit all, And give our vineyards to a barbarous people.

Day. O Dieu vivant! shall a few sprays of us; The emptying of our fathers' luxury, Our scions, put in wild and savage stock, Spurt up so suddenly into the clouds. And overlook their grafters?

Bour. Normans, but bastard Normans, Norman bastards!

Most de ma vie! if they march along Unfought withal, but I will sell my dukedom To buy a slobbery and a dirty farm In that nook-shotten isle of Albion.

Con. Dieu de batailles! where have they this mettle?

Is not their climate foggy, raw, and dull; On whom, as in despite, the sun looks pale, Killing their fruit with frowns? Can sodden broth.

A drench for sur-rein'd jades, their barley-Decoct their cold blood to such valiant heat?, And shall our quick blood, spirited with wine, Seem frosty? O, for honour of our land, Let us not hang like roping icicles

Upon our houses' thatch, whiles a more frosty ffields, people Sweat drops of gallant youth in our rich Poor we may call them in their native lords!

Dau. By faith and honour, Our madems mock at us, and plainly say Our mettle is bred out, and they will give Their bodies to the lust of English youth To new-store France with bastard warriors.

Bour. They bid us to the English dancingschools,

And teach lavoltes high and swift corentos; Saying our grace is only in our heels, And that we are most lofty runaways. Fr. King. Where is Montjoy, the herald? The blood and courage that renowned them Runs in your veins; and my thrice-puissant liege Is in the very May-morn of his youth, Ripe for exploits and mighty enterprises.

Exe. Your brother kings and monarchs of the earth

Do all expect that you should rouse yourself, As did the former lions of your blood.

West. They know your grace hath cause and means and might:-

So hath your highness; never king of England Had nobles richer and more loyal subjects, Whose hearts have left their bodies here in England,

And lie pavilion'd in the fields of France. Cant. O, let their bodies follow, my dear liege. With blood and sword and fire to win your right: In aid whereof we of the spiritualty Will raise your highness such a mighty sum As never did the clergy at one time Bring in to any of your ancestors. [French.

Cant. They of those marches, gracious sove-Shall be a wall sufficient to defend

Our inland from the pilfering borderers. K. Hen. We do not mean the coursing snatchers only, But fear the main intendment of the Scot, Who hath been still a giddy neighbour to us; For you shall read that my great-grandfather Never went with his forces into France But that the Scot on his unfurnish'd kingdom Came pouring, like the tide into a breach, With ample and brim fulness of his force; Galling the gleaned land with hot essays, Girding with grievous siege castles and towns: That England, being empty of defence, Hath shook and trembled at the ill neighbourhood. Cant. She hath been then more fear'd than harm'd, my liege; For hear her but exampled by herself:-When all her chivalry hath been in France, And she a mourning widow of her nobles, She hath herself not only well defended, But, taken, and impounded as a stray, The king of Scots; whom she did send to France,

To fill King Edward's fame with prisoner kings, And make her chronicle as rich with praise As is the coze and bottom of the sen

With sunken wreck and sumless treasuries.

West. But there's n saying, very old and truë,

If that you will France win, Then with Scotland first begin: For once the eagle England being in prey, To her unguarded nest the weasel Scot Comes sneaking, and so sucks her princely eggs;

Playing the mouse in absence of the cat, To tear and havor more than she can eat. Exc. It follows, then, the cat must stay at home: Yet that is but a curs'd necessity, Now are we well prepar'd to know the ple Since we have locks to safeguard necessaries, Of our fair cousin Dauphin; for we hear

And pretty traps to catch the petty thieves. While that the armed hand doth fight abroad, The advised head defends itself at home; For government, though high, and low, and lower,

Put into parts, doth keep in one concent; Congruing in a full and natural close. Like music.

Therefore doth heaven divide Cant. The state of man in divers functions, Setting endeavor in continual motion: To which is fixed, as an aim or butt, Obedience: for so work the honey bees; Creatures that, by a rule in nature, teach The act of order to a peopled kingdom. They have a king, and officers of sorts: Where some, like magistrates, correct at homo; Others, like merchants, venture trade abroad; Others, like soldiers, armed in their stings, Make boot upon the summer's velvet buds Which pillage they with merry march bring home

To the tent-royal of their emperor: Who, busied in his majesty, surveys The singing masons building roofs of gold; The civil citizens kneading up the honey: The poor mechanic porters crowding in Their heavy burdens at his narrow gate; The sad-ey'd justice, with his surly hum, Delivering o'er to executors pale The lazy yawning drone. I this infer,— That many things, having full reference To one concent, may work contrarionaly: As many arrows, loosed several ways, Fly to one mark;

As many several ways meet in one town; As many fresh streams meet in one sait sea; As many lines close in the dial's centre: So may a thousand actions, once afcot, End in one purpose, and be all well borne Without defeat. Therefore to France, my liege. Divide your happy England into four Whereof take you one quarter into France, And you withal shall make all Gallia shake. If we, with thrice such powers left at home, Cannot defend our own doors from the dog, Let us be worried, and our nation lose The name of hardiness and policy.

K. Hen. Call in the messengers sent from the Dauphin. Exit an Attendant. Now are we well resolv'd: and, by God's help And yours, the noble sinews of our power, France being ours, we'll bend it to our awe. Or break it all to pieces: or there we'll sit, Ruling in large and ample empery O'er France and all her almost kingly dukedems,

Or lay these bones in an unworthy urn, Tombless, with no remembrance over them: Either our history shall with full mouth Speak freely of our acts, or else our grave, Like Turkish mute, shall have a tongueloss mouth.

Not worshipp'd with a waxen epitaph.

Enter Ambassadors of France.

Now are we well prepar'd to know the pleasure make show to the 'orld ho is: if I find a hole in his coat I will tell him my mind. [Drum within.] Hark you, the king is coming; and I must speak with him from the pridge.

Enter KING HENRY, GLOSTER, and Soldiers.

Got bless your majesty!

K. Hen. How now, Fluellenl cam'st thou from the bridge?

Flu. Ay, so please your majesty. The Duke of Exeter has very gallantly maintained the pridge: the French is gone off, look you; and there is gallant and most prave passages: marry, th' athversary was have possession of the pridge; but he is enforced to retire, and the Duke of Exeter is master of the pridge: I can tell your majesty the duke is a prave man.

K. Hen. What men have you lost, Fluellen? Elu. The perdition of th' athversary hath been very great, reasonable great: marry, for my part, I think the duke bath lost never a man, but one that is like to be executed for robbing a church,—one Bardolph, if your majesty know the man: his face is all bubukles, and whelks, and knobs, and flames of fire; and his lips plows at his nose, and it is like a coal of fire, sometimes plue and sometimes red; but his nose is executed and his fire's out.

K. Hen. We would have all such offenders so cut off:-and we give express charge that in our marches through the country there be nothing compelled from the villages, nothing taken but paid for, none of the French uphraided or ahused in disdainful language; for when lenity and cruelty play for a kingdom the gentler gamester is the soonest winner.

Tucket sounds. Enter MONTJOY.

Mont. You know me by my habit. K. Hen. Well, then, I know thee: what shall I know of thee?

Mont. My master's mind.

K. Hen. Unfold it.

Mont. Thus says my king:-Say thou to Harry of England: Though we seemed dead we did but sleep; advantage is a better soldier than Tell him we could have rebuked rashness. him at Harfleur, but that we thought not good to bruise an injury till it were full ripe:—now we speak upon our cue, and our voice is imperial: England shall repent his folly, see his weakness, and admire our sufferance. Bid him, therefore, consider of his ransom; which must proportion the losses we have borne, the subjects we have lost, the disgrace we have digested; which, in weight to re-answer, his pet-tiness would bow under. For our losses his exchequer is too poor; for the effusion of our blood the muster of his kingdom too faint a number; and for our disgrace his own person, kneeling at our feet, but a weak and worthless To this add defiance: and tell satisfaction. him, for conclusion, he hath betrayed his followers, whose condemnation is pronounced. So far my king and master; so much my office.

K. Hen. What is thy name? I know thy quality. Mont. Montjoy. K. Hen. Thou dost thy office fairly. Turn thee back,

And tell thy king,-I do not seek him now; But could be willing to march on to Calais Without impeachment: for, to say the sooth,-Though 'tis no wisdom to confess to much Unto an enemy of craft and vantage,-My people are with sickness much enfeebled; My numbers lessen'd; and those few I have Almost no better than so many French; Who, when they were in health, I tell thee.

Go, bid thy master well advise himself: If we may pass, we will; if we be hinder'd, We shall your tawny ground with your red blood Discolour: and so, Montjoy, fare you well. The sum of all our answer is but this: We would not seek a hattle as we are; Nor as we are, we say, we will not shun it: So tell your master.

Mont. I shall deliver so. Thanks to your highness. Glo. I hope they will not come upon us now.

K. Hen. We are in God's hand, brother, not inight:-in theirs. March to the bridge; it now draws toward

Beyond the river we'll encamp ourselves; And on to-morrow bid them march away. Excunt.

SCENE VI .- The French Camp near Agincourt.

Enter the Constable of France, the LORD RAMBURES, the Duke of Orleans, the DAUPHIN, and others.

Con. Tutl I have the best armour of the world.—Would it were day!

Orl. You have an excellent armour; but let my horse have his due.

Con. It is the best horse of Europe. Orl. Will it never be morning?

Dau. My Lord of Orleans and my lord highconstable, you talk of horse and armour,- Orl. You are as well provided of both as any prince in the world. Dou. What a long night is this!—I will not change my horse with any that treads but or four pasterns. Ca, hal he bounds from the earth as if his entrails were heirs; le chepe volant, the Pegasus, qui a les narines de Jeul When I bestride him I soar, I am a hawk: he trots the air; the earth sings when he touches it; the basest horn of his hoof is more murical than the pipe of Hermes.

Orl. He's of the colour of the nutmeg. Dau. And of the heat of the ginger. It is a beast for Perseus: he is pure air and fire; and But, till the king come forth, and not till then, Unto Southampton do we shift our scene.

ACT II.

Scene I.-London. Before the Boar's Head Tavern, Eastcheap.

Enter, severally, NYM and BARDOLPH.

Bard, Well met, Corporal Nym.

Nym. Good-morrow, Lieutenant Bardolph. Bard. What, are Ancient Pistol and you friends yet?

Nym. For my part, I care not: I say little; hut when time shall serve, there shall he smiles; -hut that shall be as it may. I dare not fight: hat I will wink, and hold out mine iron: it is a simple one; but what though? it will toast cheese: and it will endure cold as another man's sword will, and there's the humour of it.

Bard. I will hestow a breakfast to make you friends; and we'll he all three sworn brothers to France: let it he so, good Corporal Nym.
Nym. Faith, I will live so long as I may, that's the certain of it; and when I cannot live any longer, I will do as I may: that is my rest, that is the rendezvons of it.

Bard. It is certain, corporal, that he is married to Nell Quickly: and, certainly, she did you wrong; for you were troth-plight to her.

Num. I cannot tell:-things must be as they may: men may sleep, and they may have their throats about them at that time; and, some say, knives have edges. It must he as it may: though patience he a tired mare, yet she will plod. There must be conclusions. Well, I cannot tell.

Bard. Here comes Ancient Pistol and his wife:-good corporal, be patient here.

Enter PISTOL and Hostess.

How now, mine host Pistoll

Pist. Base tike, call'st thon me host?

Now, hy this hand, I swear, I scorn the term; Nor shall my Nell keep lodgers.

Host. No, hy my troth, not long; for we cannot lodge and hoard a dozen or fourteen gentlewomen that live honestly by the prick of their needles, but it will be thought we keep a hawdy-house straight. [NYM draws his sword.] O well-a-day, Lady, if he be not drawn! now we shall see wilful adultery and murder committed.

Bard. Good lieutenant,-good corporal,- offer nothing here.

Nym. Pishl

Pist. Pish for thee, Iceland dogl thou prick-ear'd cur of Iceland!

Host. Good Corporal Nym, show thy valour, and put up your sword.

Nym. Will you shog off?

I would have you Sheathing his swordsolus.

Pist: Solus, egregions dog? O viper vile! The solus in thy most marvellous face;

The solus in thy teeth, and in thy throat, And in thy hateful lungs, yea, in thy maw, perdy; And, which is worse, within thy nasty mouth! I do retort the solus in thy howels; For I can take, and Pistol's cock is up,

And flashing fire will follow.

Nym. I am not Barhason; you cannot conjure me. I have an humour to knock you indifferently well. If you grow foul with me, Pistol, I will scour you with my rapier, as I may, in fair terms: if you would walk off I would prick your guts a little, in good terms, as I may: and that's the humour of it.

Pist. O hraggart vile and damned furious

wightl

The grave doth gape and doting death is near; Therefore exhale. [PISTOL and NYM draw. Bard. Hear me, hear me what I say:-he that strikes the first stroke I'll run him up to the hilts, as I am a soldier. Draws.

Pist. An oath of mickle might; and fury shall ahate.

Give me thy fist, thy fore-foot to me give:

Thy spirits are most tall.

Nym. I will cut thy throat one time or other, in fair terms: that is the humour of it. Pist. Coupe la gorge! That's the word.-I thee defy again.

O hound of Crete, think'st thou my spouse to get?

No; to the spital go, And from the powdering tub of infamy Fetch forth the lazar kite of Cressid's kind, Doll Tearsheet she by name, and her espouse I have, and I will hold, the quondam Quickly For the only she; and—Pauca, there's enough. Go to.

Enter the Boy.

Boy. Mine host Pistol, you must come to my master,—and yon, hostess:—ho is very sick, and would to bed.—Good Bardolph, put thy nose between his sheets, and do the office of a warming-pan. Faith, he's very ill.

Bard. Away, you rogue.

Host. By my troth, he'll yield the crow a pudding one of these days: the king has killed his heart.—Good hushand, come home presently.

[Execut Hostess and Boy.

Bard. Come, shall I make you two friends? We must to France together: why the devil should we keep knives to cut one another's throats?

Pist. Let floods o'erswell and fiends for food howl onl

Nym. You'll pay me the eight shillings I won of you at hetting?

Pist. Base is the slave that pays.

Nym. That now I will have: that's the humour of it.

Pist. As manhood shall compound: push home. PISTOL and NYM draw. Bard. By this sword, he that makes the first thrust I'll kill him; hy this sword, I will.

Pist. Sword is an oath, and oaths must have their course.

Bard. Corporal Nym, an thon wilt be friends, be friends: an thou wilt not, why, then, he enemies with me too. Prythee, put up.

Num. I shall have my eight shillings I won of you at hetting?

Pist. A noble shalt thou have, and present pay; And liquor likewise will I give to thee, And friendship shall combine, and brotherhood: (Exeunt.

Con. Just, just; and the men do sympathize with the mastiffs in robustious and rough coming-on, leaving their wits with their wives: and them give them great meals of beef, and iron and steel, they will eat like wolves and fight like devils. [of beef.

Orl. Ay, but these English are shrewdly out Con. Then shall we find to-morrow they have only stomachs to eat, and none to fight. Now is it time to arm: come, shall we about it?

Orl. It is now two o'clock: but, let me see,— by ten We shall have each a hundred Englishmen.

Enter Chorus.

Chor. Now entertain conjecture of a time When creeping murmur and the poring dark Fills the wide vessel of the universe. From camp to camp, through the foul womb of

night
The hum of either army stilly sounds,
That the fix'd sentinels almost receive
The secret whispers of each other's watch:
Fire answers fire, and through their paly flames
Each battle sees the other's umber'd face:
Steed threatens steed, in high and boastful
neighs

Piercing the night's dull ear; and from the tents
The armourers, accomplishing the knights,
With busy hammers closing rivets up,
Give dreadful note of preparation:
The country cocks do crow, the clocks do toll,
And the third hour of drowsy morning name.
Proud of their numbers and secure in soul,
The confident and over-lusty French
Do the low-rated English play at dice;
And chide the cripple tardy-gaited night,
Who, like a foul and ugly witch, doth limp
So tediously away. The poor condemned
English,

Like sacrifices, by their watchful fires
Sit patiently, and inly ruminate
The morning's danger; and their gesture sad
Investing lank-lean cheeks and war-worn coats
Presenteth them unto the gazing moon [hold
So many horrid ghosts. O, now, who will beThe royal captain of this ruin'd band [tent, Walking from watch to watch, from tent to Let him cry, Praise and glory on his head!
For forth he goes and visits all his host;
Bids them good-morrow with a modest smile,
And calls them brothers, friends, and country-

Upon his royal face there is no note
How dread an army hath enrounded him;
Nor doth he dedicate one jot of colour
Unto the weary and all-watched night;
But freshly looks, and over-bears attaint
With cheerful semblance and sweet majesty;
That every wretch, pining and pale before,
Beholding him, plucks comfort from his looks:
A largess universal, like the sun,
His liberal eye doth give to every one,
Thawing cold fear. Then, mean and gentle all,
Behold, as may unworthiness define,
A little touch of Harry in the night:
And so our scene must to the battle fly;
Where,—O for pityl—we shall much disgrace
With four or five most vile and ragged foils,

Right ill-dispos'd in brawl ridiculous,
The name of Agincourt. Yet sit and see;
Minding true things by what their mockeries / be. [Exit.

ACT IV.

Scene I.—France. The English Camp at Agincourt.

Enter King Henry, Bedford, and Gloster.

K. Hen. Gloster, 'tis true that we are in great danger;
The greater therefore should our courage be,— Good-morrow, brother Bedford.—God Almighty!

There is some soul of goodness in things evil, Would men observingly distil it out; For our bad neighbour makes early stirrers, Which is both healthful and good husbandry: Besides, they are our outward consciences And preachers to us all: admonishing That we should dress us fairly for our end. Thus may we gather honey from the weed, And make a moral of the devil himself.

Enter Erpingham.

Good-morrow, old Sir Thomas Erpingham: A good soft pillow for that good white head Were better than a churlish turf of France, Erp. Not so, my liege: this lodging likes me better,

Since I may say, Now lie I like a king.
K. Hen. 'Tis good for men to love their present pains

Upon example; so the spirit is eas'd:
And when the mind is quicken'd, out of doubt
The organs, though defunct and dead before,
Break up their drowsy grave, and newly move
With casted slough and fresh legerity. [both,
Lend me thy cloak, Sir Thomas.—Brothers
Commend me to the princes in our camp;
Do my good-morrow to them; and anon
Desire them all to my pavilion.

Glo. We shall, my liege.
[Exeunt GLOSTER and BEDFORD

Erp. Shall I attend your grace?
K. Hen. No, my good knight;
Go with my brothers to my lords of England:
I and my bosom must debate awhile,
And then I would no other company.

Etp. The Lord in heaven bless thee, noble Harry! [Exil. K. Hen. God-a-mercy, old heart] thou speak'st cheerfully.

Enter PISTOL.

Pist. Qui va là?

K. Hen. A friend.

Pist. Discuss unto me; art thou officer?
Or art thou base, common, and popular?

K. Hen. I am a gentleman of a company.

Pist. Trail'st thou the puissant pike?

K. Hen. Even so. What are you?

Pist. As good a gentleman as the emperor.

K. Hen. Then you are a better than the king.

Pist. The king's a bawcock and a heart of gold.

These English monsters! My Lord of Cambridge here,

You know bow apt our love was to accord To furnish him with all appertinents Belonging to his bonour; and this man Hath, for a few light crowns, lightly conspir'd. And sworn unto the practices of France, To kill us here in Hampton: to the which This knight, no less for bounty bound to us Than Cambridge is, hath likewise sworn. But, O,

What shall I say to thee, Lord Scroop? thou Ingrateful, savage, and inhuman creature! Thou that didst bear the key of all my counsels. That knew'st the very bottom of my soul, That almost mightst have coin'd me into gold. Wouldst thou bave practis'd on me for thy

nse. May it be possible that foreign hire Could out of thee extract one spark of evil That might annoy my finger? 'tis so strange That, though the truth of it stands off as gross As black from white, my eye will scarcely see it. Treason and murder ever kept together, As two yoke-devils sworn to either's purpose, Working so grossly in a natural cause That admiration did not whoop at them: But thou, 'gainst all proportion, didst bring in Wonder to wait on treason and on murder: And whatsoever cunning fiend it was That wrought upon thee so preposterously Hath got the voice in hell for excellence: And other devils, that suggest by treasons, Do botch and bungle up damnation fetch'd With patches, colours, and with forms being From glistering semblances of piety; But he that temper'd thee bade thee stand up. Gave thee no instance why thou shouldst do tresson. Unless to dub thee with the name of traitor. If that same demon that hath gull'd thee thus Should with his lion gait walk the whole world, He might return to vasty Tartar back. And tell the legions, I can never win A soul so easy as that Englishman's. O, how hast thou with jealousy infected The sweetness of affiance! Show men dutiful? Why, so didst thou: seem they grave and learned? Why, so didst thou; come they of noble family? Why, so didst thou: seem they religious? Why, so didst thon: or are they spare in diet; Free from gross passion, or of mirth or anger; Constant in spirit, not swerving with the blood; Garnish'd and deck'd in modest complement; Not working with the eye without the ear, And but in purged judgment trusting neither? Such and so finely bolted didst thou seem: And thus thy fall hath left a kind of blot. To mark the full-fraught man and best indu'd With some suspicion. I will weep for thee; For this revolt of thine, methinks, is like Another fall of man.—Their faults are open: Arrest them to the answer of the law;-And God acquit them of their practices! Exe. Scroop. Our purposes God justly hath discover'd;

And I repent my fault more than my death; Which I beseech your highness to forgive, Although my body pay the price of it.

Cam. For me,-the gold of France did not seduce:

Although I did admit it as a motive The sooner to effect what I intended: But God be thanked for prevention; Which I in sufferance beartily will rejoice, Beseeching God and you to pardon me.

Grey. Never did faithful subject more rejoice At the discovery of most dangerous treason Than I do at this bour joy o'er myself, Prevented from a damned enterprise:

My fault, but not my body, pardon, sovereign.

K. Hen. God quit you in his mercy! Hear your sentence.

You have conspir'd against our royal person. Join'd with an enemy proclaim'd, and from his coffers

Receiv'd the golden earnest of our death; Wherein you would have sold your king to slaughter,

His princes and his peers to servitude, His subjects to oppression and contempt, And his whole kingdom into desolation. Touching our person seek we no revenge; But we our kingdom's safety must so tender, Whose ruin you have sought, that to her laws We do deliver you. Get you, therefore, hence, Poor miserable wretches, to your death: The taste whereof God of his mercy give you Patience to endure, and true repentance Of all your dear offences!—Bear them hence.

Exeunt Conspirators, guarded. Now, lords, for France; the enterprise whereof Shall be to you, as us, like glorious. We doubt not of a fair and lucky war: Since God so graciously hath brought to light This dangerous treason, lurking in our way To hinder our beginnings, we doubt not now But every rub is smoothed on our way. Then, forth, dear countrymen: let us deliver Our puissance into the hand of God, Putting it straight in expedition. Cheerly to sea; the signs of war advance: No king of England, if not king of France. Exeunt.

their bulwark that have before gored the gentle bosom of peace with pillage and robbery. Now, if these men have defeated the law and outrun native punishment, though they can outstrip men they have no wings to fly from God: war is his beadle, war is his vengeance; so that here men are punished for before-breach of the king's laws in now the king's quarrel: where they feared the death they have borne life away; and where they would be safe they perish: then if they die unprovided, no more is the king guilty of their damnation than he was before guilty of those impieties for the which they are now visited. Every subject's duty is the king's; but every subject's soul is his own. Therefore should every soldier in the wars do as every sick man in his bed, -wash every mote out of his conscience: and dying so, death is to him advantage; or not dying, the time was blessedly lost wherein such preparation was gained: and in him that escapes it were not sin to think that, making God so free an offer, he let him outlive that day to see his greatness, and to teach others how they should prepare. France, Dying like men, though buried in your dung-They shall be fam'd; for there the sun shall greet them,

And draw their honours reeking up to heaven, Leaving their earthly parts to choke your clime, The smell whereof shall breed a plague in France.

Mark, then, abounding valour in our English, That, being dead, like to the bullet's grazing, Break out into a second course of mischief, Killing in relapse of mortality. Let me speak proudly:—tell the constable We are but warriors for the working-day; Our gayness and our gilt are all besmirch'd With rainy marching in the painful field; There's not a piece of feather in our host, Good argument, I hope, we will not fly, And time hath worn us into slovenry: But, by the mass, our hearts are in the trim; And my poor soldiers tell me yet ere night They'll be in fresher robes; or they will pluck Flu. It is Captain Macmorris, is it not?

Gow. I think it be. Flu. By Cheshu, he is an ass, as in the 'orld: I will verify as much in his peard: he has no more directions in the true disciplines of the wars, look you, of the Roman disciples, than is a puppy-dog.

Gow. Here 'a comes; and the Scots captain,

Captain Jamy, with him.

Flu. Captain Jamy is a marvellous falorous gentleman, that is certain, and of great expedition and knowledge in the ancient wars, upon my particular knowledge of his directions: by Cheshu, he will maintain his argument as well as any military man in the 'orld, in the disciplines of the pristine wars of the Romans.

Enter MACMORRIS and JAMY, at a distance.

Jamy. I say gud-day, Captain Fluellen. Flu. God-den to your worship, goot Cap-

Upon these words I came and cheer'd him up: He smil'd me in the face, raught me his hand, And, with a feeble grip, says, Dear my lord, Commend my service to my sovereign. So did he turn, and over Suffolk's neck He threw his wounded arm, and kiss'd his lips:

Gow. 'Tis certain there's not a boy left alive: and the cowardly rascals that ran from the battle have done this slaughter: besides, they have burned and carried away all that was in the king's tent; wherefore the king, most worthily. hath caused every soldier to cut his prisoner's O, 'tis a gallant king!

Flu. Ay, he was porn at Monmouth, Captain Gower. What call you the town's name where Alexander the pig was porn?

Gow. Alexander the Great. Flu. Why, I pray you, is not pig great? the pig, or the great, or the mighty, or the huge, or the magnanimous, are all one reckonings, save the phrase is a little variations.

Gow. I think Alexander the Great was born in Macedon: his father was called Philip of Macedon, as I take it.

Flu. I think it is in Macedon where Alexander is porn. I tell you, captain, if you look in the maps of the 'orid, I warrant you shall find, in the comparisons between Macedon and Monmouth, that the situations, look you, is both alike. There is a river in Macedon; and there is also moreover a river at Monmouth: it is called Wye at Monmouth; but it is out of my prains what is the name of the other river; but 'tis all one, 'tis alike as my fingers is to my fingers, and there is salmons in both. If you mark Alexander's life well, Harry of Monmouth's life is come after it indifferent well: for there is figures in all things. Alexander. -- Got knows, and you know, -in his rages, and his furies, and his wraths, and his cholers, and his moods, and his displeasures, and his indignations, and also being a little intoxicates in his rains, did, in his ales and his angers, look you, kill his pest friend, Clytus

Gow. Our king is not like him in that: he never killed any of his friends.

Flu. It is not well done, mark you now, to take the tales out of my mouth ere it is made and finished. I speak but in the figures and comparisons of it: as Alexander is kill his friend. Clytus, being in his ales and his cups; so also Harry Monmouth, being in his right with and his goot judgments, turned away the fat knight with the great pelly-doublet: he was full of jests, and gipes, and knaveries, and mocks; I have forgot his name.

Gow. Sir John Falstaff.

Flu. That is he:-I can tell you there is goot men porn at Monmouth.

Enter, severally, GOWER and FLUELLEN.

Gow. How now, Captain Fluelleni come you from the bridge?

Flu. I assure you there is very excellent services committed at the pridge.

Gow. Is the Duke of Exeter safe? Flu. The Duke of Exeter is as magnanimous as Agamemnon; and n man that I love and honour with my soul, and my heart, and my duty, and my life, and my living, and my utter-most power: he is not,—God be praised and plessed!-any hurt in the 'orld; but keeps the pridge most valiantly, with excellent discipline. There is an nuncient there a the pridge,—I think in my very conscience he is as valiant a man as Mark Antony; and ho is a man of no estimation in the 'orld; but I did see him do as gallant service.

Gow. What do you call him? Flu. He is called Auncient Pistol. Gow. I know him not. Flu. Hero is the man.

Enter PISTOL.

That stands upon the rolling restless stone,-Flu. By your patience, Auncient Pistol. Fortune is painted plind, with a muffler afore her eyes, to signify to you that Fortune is plind; and she is painted also with a wheel, to signify to you, which is the moral of it, that she is turning, and inconstant, and mutability, and variation: and her foot, look you, is fixed upon a spherical stone, which rolls, and rolls, and rolls.—In good truth the poet makes a most excellent description of it: Fortune is an excellent moral.

Pist. Fortune is Bardolph's foe, and frowns on him; lbe,-For he hath stol'n a pox, and hanged must 'a A damned death! your meaning.

Pist. Why, then, rejoice therefore. Flu. Certainly, Auncient, it is not a thing to rejoice at: for if, look you, he were my prother I would desire the duke to use his goot pleasure, and put him to execution; for discipline ought to be used. friendship!

Pist. Die and be damn'dl and fice for thy Flu. It is well.

Pist. The fig of Spain! Flu. Very goot.

Gow. Why, this is an arrant counterfeit rascal; I remember him now; a bawd, a cutpurse

Flu. I'll assure you, 'a uttered as prave 'ords nt the pridge na you shall see in a summer's day. But it is very well; what he has spoke to me, that is well, I warrant you, when time is serve.

Gow. Why, 'tis a gull, a fool, a rogue, that now and then goes to the wars, to grace himself, at his return into London, under the form of a soldier. And such fellows are perfect in the great commanders' names: and they will learn you by rote where services are done;-at such and such a sconce, at such a breach, at such a convoy; who came off bravely, who was shot, who disgraced, what terms the enemy stood on; and this they con perfectly in the phrase of war, which they trick up with newtuned oaths: and what a beard of the general's cut, and a horrid suit of the camp, will do among foaming bottles and ale-washed wits, is wonderful to be thought on. But you must learn to know such slanders of the age, or else you may Enter Gower and Williams.

Will. I warrant it is to knight you, captain.

Enter Fluellen.

Flu. Got's will and his pleasure, captain, I peseech you now, come apace to the king: there is more goot toward you peradventure than is in your knowledge to dream of.

Will. Sir, know you this glove? Flu. Know the glove! I know the glove is a Will. I know this; and thus I challenge it.

Strikes him. Flu. 'Sblood, an arrant traitor as any's in the universal 'orld, or in France, or in England! Gow. How now, sir! you villain!

Will. Do you think I'll be forsworn?

Flu. Stand away, Captain Gower; I will give treason his payment into plows, I warrant you.

Will. I am no traitor. Flu. That's a lie in thy throat.—I charge you in his majesty's name, apprehend him: he's a friend of the Duke Alencon's.

Enter WARWICK and GLOSTER.

War. How now, how now! what's the matter?

Flu. My Lord of Warwick, here is,-praised be Got for it!—a most contagious treason come to light, look you, as you shall desire in a summer's day.—Here is his majesty.

Enter King Henry and Exeter.

K. Hen. How now! what's the matter? Flu. My liege, here is a villain and a traitor, that, look your grace, has struck the glove which your majesty is take out of the helmet of Alencon

Will. My liege, this was my glove; here is the fellow of it; and he that I gave it to in change promised to wear it in his cap: I promised to strike him if he did: I met this man with my glove in his cap, and I have been as good as my word.

Flu. Your majesty hear now,—saving your majesty's manhood,—what an arrant, rascally, beggarly, lousy knave it is: I hope your majesty is pear me testimony and witness, and will avouchment, this is the glove of Alencon that your majesty is give me, in your conscience,

K. Hen. Give me thy glove, soldier: look, here is the fellow of it.

'Twas I, indeed, thou promisedst to strike; And thou hast given me most bitter terms.

Flu. An please your majesty, let his neck answer for it if there is any martial law in the ition? 'orld?

K. Hen. How canst thon make me satisfac-Will. All offences, my liege, come from the heart: never came any from mine that might offend your majesty.

K. Hen. It was ourself thou didst abuse. Will. Your majesty came not like yourself: you appeared to me but as a common man; witness the night, your garments, your lowliness; and what your highness suffered under fault, and not mine: for had you been as I took you for, I made no offence; therefore, I beseech your highness, pardon me.

K. Hen. Here, uncle Exeter, fill this glove with crowns,

And give it to this fellow .- Keep it, fellow: And wear it for an honour in thy cap

Till I do challenge it.—Give him the crowns: And, captain, you must needs be friends with him.

Flu. By this day and this light, the fellow has mettle enough in his pelly:—hold, there is twelve pence for you; and I pray you to serve Got, and keep you out of prawls, and prabbles, and quarrels, and dissensions, and, I warrant you. it is the petter for you.

Will. I will none of your money.

Flu. It is with a goot will; I can tell you it will serve you to mend your shoes: come, wherefore should you be so pashful? your shoes is not so goot: 'tis a goot silling, I warrant you, or I will change it.

the dull elements of earth and water never appear in him, but only in patient stillness while his rider mounts him: he is indeed a horse; and all other jades you may call beasts.

Con. Indeed, my lord, it is a most absolute and excellent horse.

Dau. It is the prince of palfreys; his neigh is like the bldding of a monarch, and his countenance enforces homage.

Orl. No more, cousin.

Dau. Nay, the man hath no wit that cannot, from the rising of the lark to the lodging of the lamb, vary deserved praise on my palfrey: it is a theme as fluent as the sea; turn the sands into eloquent tongues, and my horse is argument for them all: 'tis a subject for a sovereign to reason on, and for a sovereign's sovereign to ride on; and for the world,-familiar to us and unknown,-to lay apart their particular functions and wonder at him. I once writ a sonnet in his praise, and began thus: Wonder of nature, mistress.

Orl. I have heard a sounct begin so to one's Dau. Then did they imitate that which I composed to my courser: for my horse is my

mistress

Orl. Your mistress bears well.

Dau. Me well; which is the prescript praise and perfection of a good and particular mistress. Con. Nay, for methought yesterday your mistress shrewdly shook your back.

Dau. So, perhaps, did yours. Con. Mine was not bridled.

Dau. O, then, belike she was old and gentle; and you rode like a kern of Ireland, your French hose off and in your strait strossers.

Con. You have good judgment in horsemanship.

Dau. Be warned by me, then: they that ride so, and ride not warily, fall into foul bogs. I had rather have my horse to my mistress.

Con. I had as lief have my mistress a jade. Dau. I tell thee, constable, my mistress wears his own hair.

Con. I could make as true a boast as that if I had a sow to my mistress.

Dau. Le chien est retourné à son propre vomissement, et la truie lavée au bourbier: thoû makest use of anything.

Con. Yet do I not use my horse for my mistress; or any such proverb so little kin to the purpose.

Ram. My lord constable, the armour that I saw in your tent to-night, are those stars or suns upon it?

brags dismounted.

Dau. Would I were able to load him with his desert!-Will it never be day?-I will trot to-morrow a mile, and my way shall be paved with English faces.

Con. I will not say so, for fear I should be faced out of my way: but I would it were fast on the lip of a lion.

Ram. Who will go to hazard with me for twenty prisoners?

Con. You must first go yourself to hazard ere you have them.

Dau. 'Tis midnight; I'll go arm myself.

Exit. Otl. The Danphin longs for morning.

Ram. He longs to eat the English. Con. I think he will eat all he kills.

Orl. By the white hand of my lady, he's a gallant prince.

Con. Swear by her foot, that she may tread ont the oath.

Orl. He is, simply, the most active gentleman of France.

Con. Doing is activity; and he will still be doing.

Oil. He never did harm that I heard of. Con. Nor will do none to-morrow: he will keep that good name still. Orl. I know him to be valiant.

better than you.
Oil. What's he?

Con. Marry, he told me so himself; and he said he cared not who knew it.

Orl. He needs not; it is no hidden virtue in

Con. By my faith, sir, but it is; never anybody saw it but his lackey: 'tis a hooded valour: and when it appears it will bate.

Orl. Ill-will never said well.

Con. I will cap that proverb with—There is flattery in friendship.

Orl. And I will take up that with-Give the devil his due.

Con. Well placed: there stands your friend for the devil: have at the very eye of that proverb with—A pox of the devil.

Orl. You are the better at proverbs by how much—A fool's bolt is soon shot.

Con. You have shot over.

Orl. 'Tis not the first time you were overshot.

Mess. The Lord Grandpree.

A valiant and most expert gentleman. Would it were day!-Alas, poor Harry of England! he longs not for the dawning as we do.

Pist. Quiet thy endgel; thou dost see I

Flu. Mnch goot do you, scald knave, heartily. Nay, pray you, throw none away; the skin is goot for your broken coxcomb. When you take occasions to see leeks hereafter, I pray-yon, mock at 'em; that is all.

Pist. Good.

Flu. Ay, leeks is goot:-hold you, there is a groat to heal your pate.

Pist. Me a groat!
Flu. Yes, verily and in truth, you shall take it; or I have another leek in my pocket which yon shall eat.

Pist. I take thy groat in earnest of revenge. Flu. If I owe you anything I will pay you in cudgels: you shall be a woodmonger, and buy nothing of me but cudgels. God b' wi' yon, and keep you, and heal your pate. Exit.

Pist. All hell shall stir for this. Gow. Go, go; you are a counterfeit cowardly Will you mock at an ancient tradition, -begun upon an honourable respect, and worn as a memorable trophy of predeceased valour,and dare not avouch in your deeds any of your words? I have seen you gleeking and galling at this gentleman twice or thrice. You thought, because he could not speak English in the native garb, he could not therefore handle an English cudgel: you find it otherwise; and henceforth let a Welsh correction teach you a good English condition. Fare ye well.

Pist. Doth Fortune play the honsewife with me now? News have I that my Nell is dead i' the spital

Of malady of France; And there my rendezvous is quite cut off. Old I do wax; and from my weary limbs Honour is cudgell'd. Well, bawd will I turn, And something lean to cutpurse of quick hand. To England will I steal, and there I'll steal: And patches will I get unto these scars, And swear I got them in the Gallia wars.

Scene II .- Troyes in Champagne. An Apartment in the FRENCH KING'S Palace.

Enter at one door, King Henry, Bedford, Gloster, Exeter, Warwick, Westmore-land, and other Lords; at another, the FRENCH KING, QUEEN ISABEL, the PRIN-CESS KATHARINE, Lords, Ladies, &c., the DUKE OF BURGUNDY, and his Train.

K. Hen. Peace to this meeting, wherefore we are met! Unto our brother France, and to our sister, Health and fair time of day; -- joy and good

We do salute yon, Duke of Burgundy And, princes French, and peers, health to you alli your face Fr. King. Right joyous are we to behold Most worthy brother England; fairly met:-

So are you, princes English, every one.

Q. Isa. So happy be the issue, brother
England,

Of this good day and of this gracions meeting As we are now glad to behold your eyes; Your eyes, which hitherto have borne in them Against the French, that met them in their bent, The fatal balls of murdering basilisks: The venom of such looks, we fairly hope, Have lost their quality; and that this day Shall change all griefs and quarrels into love.

K. Hen. To cry amen to that, thus we appear. Q. Isa. You English princes all, I do salute

Bur. My duty to you both, on equal love.

Great Kings of France and England! That I have labour'd fours, With all my wits, my pains, and strong endeav-To bring your most imperial majesties Unto this bar and royal interview, Your mightiness on both parts best can witness. Since then my office hath so far prevail'd That face to face and royal eye to eye You have congreeted, let it not disgrace me If I demand, before this royal view, What rub or what impediment there is Why that the naked, poor, and mangled Peace, Dear nurse of arts, plenties, and joyful births, Should not, in this best garden of the world, Our fertile France, put up her lovely visage? Alas, she hath from France too long been chas'd!

And all her husbandry doth lie on heaps, Corrupting in its own fertility. Her vine, the merry cheerer of the heart Unpruned dies; her hedges even-pleach'd, Like prisoners wildly overgrown with hair, Put forth disorder'd twigs; her fallow leas The darnel, hemlock, and rank fumitory Doth root upon, while that the coniter rusts, That should deracinate such sayagery; The even mead, that erst brought sweetly forth The freckled cowslip, burnet, and green clover, Wanting the scythe, all uncorrected, rank, Conceives by idleness, and nothing teems But hateful docks, rough thistles, kecksies, burs,

Losing both beanty and utility. · [hedges, And as our vineyards, fallows, meads, and Defective in their natures, grow to wildness, Even so our horses and ourselves and children Have lost, or do not learn for want of time, The sciences that should become our country; But grow, like savages,—as soldiers will, That nothing do but meditate on blood, To swearing and stern looks, diffus'd attire, And everything that seems unnatural. Which to reduce into our former favour You are assembl'd: and my speech entreats That I may know the let why gentle Peace Should not expel these inconveniences, And bless us with her former qualities.

Cornish crew? K. Hen. No, I am a Welshman. Pist. Know'st thou Fluellen?

K. Hen. Yes. his pate Pist. Tell him, I'll knock his leek about Upon Saint Davy's day.

K. Hen. Do not you wear your dagger in your cap that day, lest he knock that about Lours. Pist. Art thou his friend? K. Hen. And his kinsman too.

Pist. The fice for thee, then!
K. Hen. I thank you: God be with you!
Pist. My name is Pistel called. Exit. K. Hen. It sorts well with your fierceness.

Enter Fluellen and Gower, severally.

Gow. Captain Fluellen!

Flu. Sol in the name of Cheshu Christ, speak It is the greatest admiration in the universal 'orld when the true and auncient prerogatifs and laws of the wars is not kept: if you would take the pains but to examine the wars of Pompey the Great, you shall find, I warrant you, that there is no tiddle-taddle nor pibblepabble in Pompey's camp; I warrant you, you shall find the ceremonies of the wars, and the cares of it, and the forms of it, and the sobriety of it, and the modesty of it, to be otherwise. Gow. Why, the enemy is loud; you hear him

all night

Flu. If the enemy is an ass, and a fool, and a prating coxcomb, is it meet, think you, that we should also, look you, be an ass, and a fool, and a prating coxcomb,—in your own conscience, now?

Gow. I will speak lower.

Flu. I pray you and peseech you that you will. Exeunt GOWER and FLUELLEN. K. Hen. Though it appear a little out of fashion,

There is much care and valour in this Welshman.

Enter Bates, Court, and Williams.

Court. Brother John Bates, is not that the morning which breaks yonder?

Bales. I think it be: but we have no great cause to desire the approach of day.

Wall. We see youder the beginning of the day, but I think we shall never see the end of it.—Who goes there?

K. Hen. A friend.

Will. Under what captain serve you? K. Hen. Under Sir Thomas Erpingham.

Will. A good old commander and a most kind gentleman: I pray you, what thinks he of for they purpose not their death when they our estate?

K. Hen. Even as men wrecked upon a sand, that look to be washed off the next tide.

Bates. He hath not told his thought to the king?

K. Hen. No; nor it is not meet he should.

is but a man as I am: the violet smells to him as it doth to me; the element shows to him as it doth to me; all his senses have but human conditions: his ceremonies laid by, in his nakedness he appears but a man; and though his affections are higher mounted than ours, yet, when they stoop, they stoop with the like wing. Therefore when he sees reason of fears, as we do, his fears, out of doubt, be of the same relish as ours are: yet, in reason, no man should possess him with any appearance of fear, lest he, by showing it, should dishearten his army.

Bates. He may show what outward courage he will; but I believe, as cold a night as 'tis, he could wish himself in the Thames up to the neck: -and so I would he were, and I by him, at all adventures, so we were quit here. K. Hen. By my troth, I will speak my conscience of the king: I think he would not wish himself anywhere but where he is.

Bates. Then I would be were here alone; so should he be sure to be ransomed, and a many poor men's lives saved.

K. Hen. I dare say you love him not so ill, to wish him here alone, howsoever you speak this, to feel other men's minds: methinks I could not die anywhere so contented as in the king's company,his cause being just and his quarrel honourable.

Will. That's more than we know.

Bates. Ay, or more than we should seek after; for we know enough if we know we are the king's subjects: if his cause be wrong, our obedience to the king wipes the crime of it out of us.

Will. But if the cause be not good, the king himself hath a heavy reckoning to make when all those legs and arms and heads, chopped off in a battle, shall join together at the latter day and cry all, We died at such a place; some swearing; some crying for a surgeon; some upon their wives left poor behind them; some upon the debts they owe; some upon their children rewly left. I am afeared there are few die well that die in a battle; for how can they charitably dispose of anything when blood is their argu-ment? Now, if these men do not die well, it will be a black matter for the king that led them to it; who to disobey were against all proportion of subjection.

K. Hen. So if a son, that is by his father sent about merchandise do sinfully miscarry upon the sea, the imputation of his wickedness, by your rule, should be imposed upon his father that sent him: or if a servant, under his master's command, transporting a sum of money, be assailed by robbers, and die in many irreconciled iniquities, you may call the business of the master the author of the servant's damuation: but this is not so: the king is not bound to answer the particular endings of his soldiers, the father of his son, nor the master of his servant; purpose their services. Besides, there is no king, be his cause never so spotless, if it come to the erbitrement of swords, can try it out with all unspotted soldiers: some peradventure have on them the guilt of premeditated and contrived murder, some of beguiling virgins with the For though I speak it to you, I think the king I broken seals of perjury; some making the wars

K. Hen. No, faith, is't not, Kate: but thy speaking of my tongue, and I thine, most truly falsely, must needs be granted to be much at one. But, Kate, dost thou understand thus much English,—Canst thou love me?

Kath. I cannot tell.

K. Hen. Can any of your neighbours tell, Kate? I'll ask them. Come, I know thou lovest me: and at night, when you come into your closet, you'll question this gentlewoman about me; and I know, Kate, you will to her dispraise those parts in me that you love with your heart: but, good Kate, mock me mercifully; the rather, gentle princess, because I love thee cruelly. If ever thou be'st mine, Kate,as I have a saving faith within me tells me thou shalt,-I get thee with scambling, and thou must therefore needs prove a good soldierbreeder: shall not thou and I, between Saint Denis and Saint George, compound a boy, half French, half English, that shall go to Constantinople and take the Turk by the heard? shall we not? what sayest thon, my fair flower-de-

Kath. I do not know dat.

K. Hen. No; 'tis hereafter to know, but now to promise: do but now promise, Kate, you will endeavour for your French part of such a boy; and for my English molety take the word of a king and a bachelor. How answer yon, la plus belle Katharine du monde, mon très chère et divine deesse?

Kath. Your majesté ave fausse French enough to deceive de most sage damoiselle dat is en

K. Hen. Now, fie upon my false French! By mine honour, in true English, I love thee, Kate: by which honour I dare not swear thou lovest me; yet my blood begins to flatter me that thou dost, notwithstanding the poor and untempering effect of my visage. Now, beshrew my father's ambition! he was thinking of civil wars when he got me: therefore was I created with a stubborn outside, with an aspect of iron, that when I come to woo ladies I fright them. But, in faith, Kate, the elder I wax the better I shall appear: my comfort is that old age, that ill layer-up of beauty, can do no more spoil upon my face: thou hast me, if thou hast me, at the worst; and thou shalt wear me, if thou wear me, better and better:—and therefore tell me, most fair Katharine, will you have me? Put off your maiden blushes; avouch the thoughts of your heart with the looks of an empress; take me by the hand and say,-Harry of England, I am thine: which word thou shalt no sooner bless mine ear withat but I wanted thee aloud, England is thine, Ireland is thine, France is thine, and Henry Plantagenet is thine; who, though I speak it before his face, if he be not fellow with the best king, thou whalt find the best king of good fellows. Come no sooner bless mine ear withal but I will tell shalt find the best king of good fellows. your answer in broken music,—for thy voice is) music and thy English broken; therefore, queen of all, Katharine, break thy mind to me in broken English,—wilt thou have me?

Kath. Dat is as it sall please de roi mon père. I they see not what they do.

K. Hen. Nay, it will please him well, Kate, it shall please him, Kate.

Kath. Den it sall also content me.

K. Hen. Upon that I kiss your hand, and I call you my queen.

Kath. Laissez, mon seigneur, laissez, laissez: ma foi, je ne veux point que vous abaissez votre grandeur en baisant la main d'une votre indigne serviteur; excusez-moi, je vous supplie, mon très puissant seigneur.

Alice. Oui, vraiment.

K. Hen. O Kate, nice customs court'sy to great kings. Dear Kate, you and I cannot be confined within the weak list of a country's fashion: we are the makers of manners, Kate; and the liberty that follows our places stops the mouth of all find-faults,—as I will do yours for upholding the nice fashion of your country in denying me a kiss: therefore, patiently and yielding. [Kissing her.] You have witchcraft in your lips, Kate: there is more eloquence in a sugar touch of them than in the tongues of the French council; and they should sooner per-suade Harry of England than a general petition of monarchs.—Here comes your father.

Enter the French King and Queen, Bur-GUNDY, "BEDFORD, GLOSTER, EXETER, WARWICK, WESTMORELAND, and other French and English Lords.

Bur. God save your majesty! my royal. cousin,

K. Hen. I would have her learn, my fair cousin, how perfectly I love her; and that is good English.

Bur. Is she not apt?

K. Hen. Our tongue is rough, coz, and my condition is not smooth; so that, having neither the voice nor the heart of flattery about me, I cannot so conjure up the spirit of love in her that he will appear in his true likeness.

Bur. Pardon the frankness of my mirth if I answer you for that. If you would conjure in her you must make a circle; if conjure up love in her in his true likeness, he must appear naked and blind. Can you blame her, then, being a maid yet rosed-over with the virgin crimson of modesty, if she deny the appearance of a naked blind boy in her naked seeing self? It were, my lord, a hard condition for a maid to consign

K. Hen. Yet they do wink and yield; as love is blind and enforces.

Orl. The sun doth gild our armour; up, my lords!

Dau. Montez à chevall-My horsel varlet, laquais! ha!

Orl. O brave spirit!
Dau. Via!—les eaux et la terre,—
Orl. Rienpuis? l'air et le feu,— Dau. Ciel! cousin Orleans.

Enter Constable.

Now, my lord constable!

Con. Hark, how our steeds for present service neigh!

Dau. Mount them, and make incision in their hides,

That their hot blood may spin in Engli eyes, And don't them with superfluons courage, hal Ram. What, will you have them weep our horses' blood?

How shall we, then, behold their natural tears?

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. The English are embattled, you French peers.

Con. To horse, you gallant princes! straight to horse!

Do but behold yon poor and starved band, And your fair show shall suck away their souls, Leaving them but the shales and husks of men-There is not work enough for all our hands; Scarce blood enough in all their sickly veins
To give each naked curtle-axe a stain,
That our French gallants shall to-day draw out,
And sheathe for lack of sport: let us but blow
on them,

The vapour of our valour will o'erturn them.
'Tis positive 'gainst all exceptions, lords,
That our superfluons lackevs and our peasants,—

Who in unnecessary action swarm
About our squares of battle,—were enow
To purge this field of such a hilding foe;
Though we upon this mountain's basis by
Took stand for idle speculation,—
But that our honours must not. What's t say?

A very little little let us do, And all is done. Then let the trumpets sound The tucket-sonance and the note to mount: For our approach shall so much dare the field That England shall couch down in fear and yield.

Enter GRANDPREE.

Grand. Why do you stay so long, my lords of France?
Youd island carrions, desperate of their bones, Ill-favouredly become the morning field:
Their ragged curtains poorly are let loose, And our air shakes them passing scornfully:
Big Mars seem bankrupt in their beggerd host. And faintly through a rusty beaver peeps:
The horsemen sit like fixed candlesticks,
With torch-staves in their hand; and their poor jades

Lob down their heads, dropping the hides and hips, The gum down-roping from their pale-dead eyos, And in their pale dull mouths the gimmel-bit

Lies foul with chew'd grass, still and motionless; And their executors, the knavish crows, Fly o'er them, all impatient for their hour. Description cannot suit itself in words To demonstrate the life of such a battle In life so lifeless as it shows itself.

Con. They have said their prayers and they stay for death. [fresh suits,

The circumstance I'll tell you more at large.
The tenth of August last this dreadful lord,
Retiring from the siege of Orleans,
Having full scarce six thousand in his tropp,
By three-and-twenty thousand of the French
Was round encompassed and set upon.
No leisure had he to enrank his men;
He wanted pikes to set before his archers;
Instead whereof, sharp stakes, pluck'd ont of hedges,

They pitched in the ground confusedly,
To keep the horsemen off from breaking in.
More than three hours the fight continued;
Where valiant Talbot, above human thought,
Enacted wonders with his sword and lance:
Hundreds he sent to hell, and none durst stand
him:

Here, there, and everywhere, enrag'd he flew: The French exclaim'd the devil was in arms; All the whole army stood agaz'd on him: His soldiers, spying his undaunted spirit, A Talbot! a Talbot! cried out amain, And rush'd into the bowels of the battle. Here had the conquest fully been seal'd up If Sir John Fastolfe had not play's the coward: He, being in the vaward, -plac'd behind, With purpose to relieve and follow them, Cowardly fled, not having struck one stroke. Hence grew the general wreck and massacre; Enclosed were they with their enemies: A base Walloon, to win the Dauphin's grace, Thrust Talbot with a spear into the back; Whom all France, with their chief assembled strength,

Durst not presume to look once in the face.

Bed. Is Talbot slain? then I will slay myself,
For living idly here in pomp and ease,
Whilst such a worthy leader, wanting aid,
Unto his dastard foemen is betray'd.

Faintly besiege us one hour in a month.

Alen. They want their porridge and their fat bull-beeves:

Either they must be dieted like mules, And have their provender tied to their mouths, Or piteous they will look, like drowned mice.

Reig. Let's raise the siege why live we idly here?

Talbot is taken, whom we wont to fear: Remaineth none but mad-brain'd Salisbury; And he may well in fretting spend his gall,— Nor men nor money hath he to make war.

Char. Sound, sound alarum! we will rush on them.

Now for the honour of the forlorn French!— Him I forgive my death that killeth me, When he sees me go back one foot or flee.

K. Hen. How now! what means this, herald?

know'st thon not That I have fin'd these bones of mine for ransom?

Com'st thon again for ransom?

No, great king: Mont. I come to thee for charitable license. That we may wander o'er this bloody field To book our dead, and then to bury them; To sort our nobles from our common men; For many of our princes,—woe the while!— Lie drown'd and soak'd in mercenary blood;-So do our vulgar drench their peasant limbs In blood of princes; -- and their wounded steeds Fret fetlock deep in gore, and with wild rage Yerk out their armed heels at their dead masters,

Killing them twice. O, give us leave, great king

To view the field in safety, and dispose Of their dead bodies!

tell thee truly, herald, K. Hen. I know not if the day be ours or no: For yet a many of your horsemen peer And gallop o'er the field.

Mont. The day is yours. K. Hen. Praised be God, and not our strength, Flu. Your majesty says very true: if your majesties is remembered of it, the Welshmen did goot service in a garden where leeks did grow, wearing leeks in their Monmouth caps; which, your majesty knows, to this hour is an honourable padge of the service; and I do pelieve your majesty takes no scorn to wear the leek upon Saint Tavy's day.

K. Hen. I wear it for a memorable honour; For I am Welsh, you know, good countryman. Flu. All the water in Wye cannot wash your majesty's Welsh plood out of your pody, I can tell you that: Got pless it and preserve it as long as it pleases his grace and his majesty too!

K. Hen. Thanks, good my countryman. Flu. By Cheshu, I am your majesty's countryman, I care not who know it; I will confess it to all the 'orld: I need not be ashamed of your majesty, praised be Got, so long as your majesty is an honest man.

K. Hen. God keep me so!—Our heralds go

Will. An 't please your majesty, 'tis the gage of one that I should fight withal, if he be alive.

K. Hen. An Englishman?

Will. An 't please your majesty, a rascal that swaggered with me last night; who, if alive and ever dare to challenge this glove, I have sworn to take him a box o' the ear: or if I can see my glove in his cap,—which he swore, as he was a soldier, he would wear if alive,—I will strike it out soundly.

K. Hen. What think yon, Captain Finellen?

K. Hen. Then keep thy vow, sirrah, when thou meetest the fellow.

Will. So I will, my liege, as I live. K. Hen. Who servest thou under? Will. Under Captain Gower, my liege. Flu. Gower is a good captain, and is goot knowledge and literatured in the wars. K. Hen. Call him hither to me, soldier.

Will. I will, my liege. K. Hen. Here, Fluellen; wear thou this favour for me, and stick it in thy cap: when Alencon and myself were down together I pluck'd this glove from his helm: if any man Fought on the day of Crispianns.

Flu. Your grandfather of famous memory, pluck'd this glove from his helm: if any man an't please your majesty, and your great-uncle challenge this, he is a friend to Alencon and an Edward the Plack Prince of Wales, as I have eventy to our person; if thou encounter any

The interim, by remembering you 'tis past. Then brook abridgment; and your eyes advance, After your thoughts, straight back again to France.

ACT V.

SCENE I .- FRANCE. An English Court of Guard.

Enter Fluellen and Gower.

Gow. Nay, that's right; but why wear you your leek to-day? Saint Davy's day is past. There is occasions and causes why and wherefore in all things: I will tell you, as my friend, Captain Gower:-the rascally, scald, peggarly, lousy, pragging knave, Pistol,-which you and yourself, and all the 'orld, know to be no petter than a fellow, look you now, of no merits,—he is come to me, and prings me pread and salt yesterday, look you, and pid me eat my leek: it was in a place where I could not preed no contention with him; but I will be so pold as to wear it in my cap till I see him once again, and then I will tell him a little piece of my desires.

Gow. Why, here be comes, swelling like a turkey-cock.

Flu. 'Tis no matter for his swellings nor his turkey-cocks.

Enfer PISTOL.

Got pless you, Auncient Pistol! you scurvy, lousy knave, Got pless you!

Pist. Ha! art thou bedlam? dost thou thirst, base Trojan,

To have me fold up Parca's fatal web? Hence! I am qualmish at the smell of leek.

Flu. I pesecch you beartily, scurvy, lousy knave, at my desires, and my requests, and my petitions, to eat, look yon, this leek: because, look you, you do not love it, nor your affections, and your appetites, and your digestions, does not agree with it, I would desire yon to eat it.

Pist. Not for Cadwallader and all his goats. Flu. There is one goat for you. [Strikes m.] Will you be so goot, scald knave, as him.eat it?

Pist. Base Trojan, thon shalt die.
Flu. Yon say very true, scald knave,—when Got's will is: I will desire you to live in the meantime and eat your victuals: come, there is sance for it. [Striking him again.] You called me vesterday mountain-squire; but I will make you to-day a squire of low degree. I pray you, fall to: if you can mock a leek you can eat a leek.

Gow. Enough, captain: you have astonished him.

Flu. I say, I will make him eat some part of my leek, or I will peat his pate four days.— Pite, I pray you; it is goot for your green wound and your ploody coxcomb.

Pist. Mnst I bite?

Wretched shall France be only in my name. [Thunder heard; afterwards an alarum. stir is this? What tumult's in the What stir is this? heavens?

Whence cometh this alarum, and the noise?

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord, my lord, the French have gather'd head: The Dauphin, with one Joanla Pucelle join'd,-A holy prophetess new risen up,-Is come with a great power to raise the siege. [SAL, lifts himself and groans.

Alarum; skirmishings. Enter TALBOT, pursuing the DAUPHIN, drives him in, and exit: then enter JOAN LA PUCELLE, driving Englishmen before her, and exit after them: then re-enter TALBOT.

Tal. Where is my strength, my valour, and my force?

Our English troops retire, I cannot stay them; A woman clad in armour chaseth them. Here, here she comes.

Enter LA PUCELLE.

I'll have a bout with thee; Devil or devil's dam, I'll conjure thee: Blood will I draw on thee,—thou art a witch,—
And straightway give thy soul to him thou When they shall hear how we have play'd the serv'st.

Puc. Come, come, 'tis only I that must dis-They fight. grace thee.

Tal. Heavens, can you suffer hell so to pre-(courage, vail? My breast I'll burst with straining of my And from my shoulders crack my arms asunder, But I will chastise this high-minded strumpet.

They fight again. Puc. [Retiring.] Talbot, farewell: thy hour is not yet come: I must go victual Orleans forthwith.

O'ertake me if thou canst; I scorn thy strength. Go, go, cheer up thy hunger-starved men; Help Salishury to make his testament: This day is ours, as many more shall be.

LA Puc. enters the town with Soldiers. Tal. My thoughts are whirled like a potter's wheel;

I know not where I am nor what I do: A witch by fear, not force, like Hannibal Drives back our troops, and conquers as she

The shame hereof will make me hide my head! [Alarum. Retreat. Exeunt TALBOT and Forces, &c.

Flourish. Enter on the walls, LA PUCELLE, CHARLES, REIGNIER. ALENCON. and Soldiers.

Puc. Advance our waving colours on the walls:

Rescu'd is Orleans from the English:-Thus Joan la Pucelle hath perform'd her word. Char. Divinest creature, Astræa's daughter,

How shall I honour thee for this success? Thy promises are like Adonis' gardens, That one day bloom'd and fruitful were the France, triumph in thy glorious prophetess!—. Recover'd is the town of Orleans: More blessed hap did ne'er befall our state.

Reig. Why ring not out the bells aloud throughout the town?

Dauphin, command the citizens make bonfires, And feast and banquet in the open streets, To celebrate the joy that God hath given us. Alen. All France will be replete with mirth men. Char. 'Tis Joan, not we, by whom the day is won;

For which I will divide my crown with her; And all the priests and friars in my realm Shall in procession sing her endless praise. A statlier pyramis to her I'll rear Than Rhodope's of Memphis ever was: In memory of her when she is dead, Her ashes, in an urn more precious Than the rich jewell'd coffer of Darius, Transported shall be at high festivals Before the kings and queens of France. No longer on Saint Denis will we cry, But Joan la Pucelle shell be France's saint. Come in, and let us banquet royally, After this golden day of victory.

ACT II.

Scene I.—Before Orleans.

Enter to the Gate a French Sergeant and two Sentinels.

Serg. Sirs, take your places and be vigilant:

Which you have cited, you must buy that peace With full accord to all our just demands; Whose tenors and particular effects You have, enschedul'd briefly, in your hands. Bur. The king hath heard them; to the which as yet There is no answer made.

Well, then, the peace K. Hen. Which you before so urg'd lies in his answer.

Fr. King. I have but with a cursory eye O'erglanc'd the articles: pleaseth your grace To appoint some of your council presently To sit with us once more, with better heed To re-survey them, we will suddenly Pass our accept and peremptory answer.

K. Hen. Brother, we shall. -Go uncle (Gloster.

And brother Clarence,—and you, brother Warwick,—and Huntington,—go with the king; And take with you free power to ratify, Augment, or alter, as your wisdoms best Shall see advantageable for our dignity, Anything in or out of our demands: And we'll consign thereto.-Will you, fair sister,

Go with the princes or stay here with us? O. Isa. Our gracious brother, I will go with them:

Haply a woman's voice may do some good When articles too nicely urg'd be stood on.

K. Hen. Yet leave our cousin Katharine here with us:

She is our capital demand, compris'd Within the fore-rank of our articles.

Q. Isa. She hath good leave.
[Execut all but K. Hen., KATH., and ALICE.
K. Hen. Fair Katharine, and most fair Will you vouchsafe to teach a soldier terms Such as will enter at a lady's ear,

And plead his love-suit to her gentle heart?

Kath. Your majesty shall mock at me; I cannot speak your England.

K. Hen. O fair Katharine, if you will love me soundly with your French heart, I will be glad to hear you confess it brokenly with your English tongue. Do you like me, Kate?

Kath. Pardonnez-moi, I cannot tell vat is

K. Hen. An angel is like you, Kate, and you are like an angel.

Kath. Que dit-il? que je suis semblable à les anges? Alice. Oui, vraiment, sauf votre grace, ainsi

K. Hen. I said so, dear Katharine; and I must not blush to affirm it.

Kath. O bon Dieu! les langues des hommes sont pleines de trompéries.

K. Hen. What says she, fair one? that the tongues of men are full of deceits?

Alice. Oùi, dat de tongues of de mans is be full of deceits,-dat is de princess.

The princess is the better English-I' faith, Kate, my wooing is fit for thy understanding: I am glad thou canst speak no better English; for if thou couldst, thou wouldst find me such a plain king that thou wouldst think I had sold my farm to buy my crown. I know no ways to mince it in love. but directly to say I love you; then, if you urge | French, unless it be to laugh at me.

me further than to say, Do you in faith? I wear out my suit. Give me your answer; i' faith, do; and so clap hands and a bargain; how say you, lady?

Kath. Sauf votre honneur, me understand vell.

K. Hen. Marry, if you would put me to verses or to dance for your sake, Kate, why you undid me: for the one I have neither words nor measure, and for the other I have no strength in measure, yet a reasonable measure in strength. If I could win a lady at leap-frog, or by vaulting into my saddle with my armour on my back, under the correction of bragging be it spoken, I should quickly leap into a wife. Or if I might buffet for my love, or bound my horse for her favours, I could lay on like a butcher, and sit like a jack-an-apes, never off. But, before God, Kate, I cannot look greenly, nor gasp out my eloquence, nor I have no cunning in protestation; only downright oaths, which I never use till urged, nor never break for urging. If thou canst love a fellow of this temper, Kate, whose face is not worth sun-burning, that never looks in his glass for love of anything he sees there, let thine eye be thy cook. I speak to thee plain soldier: if thou canst love me for this, take me; if not, so say to thee that I shall die is true,-but for thy love, by the Lord, no; yet I love thee too. And while thou livest, dear Kate, take a fellow of plain and uncoined constancy; for he perforce must do thee right, because he hath not the gift to woo in other places: for these fellows of infinite tongue, that can rhyme themselves into ladies' favours, they do always reason themselves out again. What! a speaker is but a prater; a rhyme is but a ballad. A good leg will fall; a straight back will stoop; a black beard will turn white: a curled pate will grow bald; a fair face will wither; a full eye will wax hollow: but a good heart, Kate, is the sun and the moon; or, rather, the sun, and not the moon,-for it shines bright and never changes, but keeps his course truly. If thou would have such a one, take me: and take me, take a soldier; take a soldier, take a king: and what sayest thou, then, to my love? speak, my fair, and fairly, I pray thee. Kath. Is it possible dat I should love de enemy of France?

K. Hen. No; it is not possible you should love the enemy of France, Kate: but in loving me you should love the friend of France; for I love France so well that I will not part with a village of it; I will have it all mine: and, Kate, when France is mine and I am yours, then yours is France and you are mine.

Kath. I cannot tell vat is dat. K. Hen. No, Kate? I will tell thee in French; which I am sure will hang upon my tongue like a new-married wife about her husband's neck, hardly to be shook off. j'ai la possession de France, et quand vous avez la possession de moi,—let me see, what then? Saint Denis be my speed1-donc votre est France et vous êtes mienne. It is as easy for me, Kate, to conquer the kingdom as to speak so much more French: I shall never move thee in Now have I paid my vow unto his soul; For every drop of blood was drawn from him, There hath at least five Frenchmen died tonight.

And that hereafter ages may behold What ruin happen'd in revenge of him, Within their chiefest temple I'll erect A tomb, wherein his corpse shall he interr'd: Upon the which, that every one may read, Shall be engrav'd the sack of Orleans, The treacherous manner of his mournful death, And what a terror he had been to France. But, lords, in all our bloody massacre. I muse we meet not with the Dauphin's grace. His new-come champion, virtuous Joan of Arc. Nor any of his false confederates.

Bed. Tis thought, Lord Talbot, when the fight began,

Rous'd on the sudden from their drowsy beds, They did, amongst the troops of armed men, Leap o'er the walls for refuge in the field.

Bur. Myself,—as far as I could well discern For smoke and dusky vapours of the night, Am sure I scar'd the Dauphin and his trull, When arm in arm they both came swiftly running, Like to a pair of loving turtle-doves, That could not live asunder day or night. After that things are set in order here, We'll follow them with all the power we have.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. All hail, my lords! Which of this princely train Call ye the warlike Talbot, for his acts So much applauded through the realm of France?

Tal. Here is the Talbot: who would speak with him?

Mess. The virtuous lady, Countess of Auvergne, With modesty admiring thy renown, By me entreats, great lord, thou wouldst vouchsafe

To visit her poor castle where she lies, That she may boast she hath heheld the man Whose glory fills the world with loud report.

Bur. Is it even so? Nay, then, I see our

Tal. Ne'er trust me then; for when a world of men

Could not prevail with all their oratory Yet hath a woman's kindness overrul'd: And therefore tell her I return great thanks, And in suhmission will attend on her. Will not your honours hear me company?

Bed. No, truly; it is more than manners will: And I have heard it said, unbidden guests Are often welcomest when they are gone.

Tal. Well then, alone, since there's no remedy,

I mean to prove this lady's courtesy.-Come hither, captain. [Whispers.] You perceive my mind?

Capt. I do, my lord, and mean accordingly. [Exeunt.]

Scene III.—Auvergne. Court of the Castle. Enter the Countess and her Porter.

Count. Porter, remember what I gave in charge; me. And when you have done so, hring the keys to

I shall as famous he hy this exploit As Scythian Tomyris by Cyrus' death. Great is the rumor of this dreadful knight, And his achievements of no less account: Fain would mine eyes be witness with mine ears,

To give their censure of these rare reports.

Enter Messenger and TALBOT.

Mess. Madam. According as your ladyship desir'd, By message crav'd, so is Lord Talbot come. Count. And he is welcome. What! is this the man? Mess. Madam, it is. Is this the scoure of France? Is this the Talhot, so much fear'd abroad That with his name the mothers still their babes?

Should strike such terror to his enemies.

Tal. Madam, I have been hold to trouble

But since your ladyship is not at leisure, I'll sort some other time to visit you. [Going. Count. What means he now?-Go ask himwhither he goes.

Mess. Stay, my Lord Talbot; for my lady craves

To know the cause of your abrupt departure. Tal. Marry, for that she's in a wrong belief, I go to certify her Talbot's here.

Re-enter Porter with keys.

Count. If thou be he, then art thou prisoner. Tal. Prisoner! to whom?

Count. To me, blood-thirsty lord; And for that cause I train'd thee to my house. Long time thy shadow hath heen thrall to me, For in my gallery thy picture hangs: But now the substance shall endure the like; And I will chain these legs and arms of thine, That hast by tyranny these many years Wasted our country, slain our citizens, And sent our sons and hushands captivate.

Tal. Ha, ha, ha! Count. Laughest thou, wretch? thy mirth shall turn to moan.

Tal. I laugh to see your ladyship so fond To think that you have aught but Talbot's Whereon to practise your severity. Count. Why, art not thou the man? I am indeed. Count. Then have I substance too.

K. Hen. Then, good my lord, teach your consin to consent winking.

Bur. I will wink on her to consent, my lord, if you will teach her to know my meaning: for maids well summered and warm kept are like flies at Bartholomew-tide, hlind, though they have their eyes; and then they will endure handling, which before would not abide looking on.

K. Hen. This moral ties me over to time and a hot summer; and so I shall catch the fly, onr consin, in the latter end, and she must he hlind too.

Bur. As love is, my lord, before it loves.

K. Hen. It is so: and you may, some of yon, thank love for my blindness, who cannot see many a fair French city for one fair French maid that stands in my way.

Fr. King. Yes, my lord, you see them perspectively, the cities turned into a maid; for they are all girdled with maiden walls that war hath never entered.

K. Hen. Shall Kate be my wife?

Fr. King. So please you. K. Hen. I am content; so the maiden cities you talk of may wait on her: so the maid that stood in the way of my wish shall show me the way to my will.

Fr. King. We have consented to all terms of reason.

K. Hen. Is 't so, my lords of England? West. The king hath granted every article: His daughter first; and, in sequel, all,

According to their firm proposed natures.

Exe. Only, he hath not yet subscribed this:—Where your majesty demands that the King of France, having any occasion to write for matter of grant, shall name your highness in this form and with this addition, in French,— Notre très cher fils Henry, roi d'Angleterre, héritier de France; and thus in Latin, Procelarissimus filius noster Henricus, 1ex Angliae et haeres Franciae.

Fr. King. Nor this I have not, brother, so

denied

But your request shall make me let it pass. K. Hen. I pray you, then, in love and dear alliance,

Let that one article rank with the rest:

And thereupon give me your daughter.

Fr. King. Take her, fair son; and from her blood raise up

Issue to me; that the contending kingdoms Of France and England, whose very shores look pale

With envy of each other's happiness, May cease their hatred; and this dear conjunc-Plant neighbourhood and Christian-like accord In their sweet bosoms, that never war advance His bleeding sword 'twixt England and fair France.

All. Amen!

K. Hen. Now, welcome, Kate:-and bear ...

me witness all, That here I kiss her as my sovereign queen.

Flourish. Q. Isa. God, the best maker of all marriages, Combine your hearts in one, your realms in one! As man and wife, being two, are one in love, So be there 'twixt your kingdoms such a spousal That never may ill office or fell jealousy, Which troubles oft the hed of hiessed marriage. Thrust in hetween the paction of these kingdoms,

To make divorce of their incorporate league; That English may as French, French English-

2 Mess. Lords, view these letters, full of bad mischance.

France is revolted from the Euglish quite, Except some petty towns of no import: The Dauphin Charlesis crowned king in Rheims; The Bastard of Orleans with him is join'd: Reignier, Duke of Anjou, doth take his part; The Duke of Alençon flieth to his side.

Exe. The Dauphin crowned king! all fly to himl

O, whither shall we fly from this reproach? Glo. We will not fly, but to our enemies' throats:

Bedford, if thou be slack I'll fight it out Bed. Gloster, why doub'st thou of my forwardness?

An army have I muster'd in my thoughts, Wherewith already France is overrun.

3 Mess. My gracious lords,—to add to your laments,

More than I do,—except I he provok'd?
No, my good lords, it is not that offends;
It is not that that hath incens'd the duke:
It is because no one should sway but he;
No one hut he should he ahout the king;
And that engenders thunder in his hreast,
And makes him roar these accusations forth.
But he shall know I am as good—

Glo.

Thou bastard of my grandfatherl—

Win. Ay, lordly sir; for what are you, I pray,

But one imperious in another's throne?

Glo. Am I not protector, saucy priest?

Win. And am not I a prelate of the church?

Glo. Yes, as an outlaw in a castle keeps,

And useth it to patronage his theft.

Win. Unreverent Glosterl
Glo.
Thou art reverent

Touching thy spiritual function, not thy life.

Win. Rome shall remedy this.

War.

Som. My lord, it were your duty to forhear.

War. Ay, see the hishop he not overhorne.

Som. Methinks my lord should be religious,

And know the office that belongs to such.

War. Methinks his lordship should be humhler;

It fitteth not a prelate so to plead. [near. Som. Yes, when his holy state is touch'd so

War. State holy or unhallow'd, what of that? Is not his grace protector to the king? [tongue, Plan. Plantagenet, I see, must hold his Lest it he said, Speak, sirrah, when you should; Must your bold verdict enter talk with lords! Else would I have a fling at Winchester.

K. Hen. Uncles of Gloster and of Winchester, The special watchmen of our English weal, I would prevail, if prayers might prevail, To join your hearts in love and amity. O, what a scandal is it to our crown That two such noble peers as ye should jarl Believe me, lords, my tender years can tell Civil dissension is a viperous worm That gnaws the bowels of the commonwealth.

[A noise within, "Down with the tawney coats"

What tumult's this?

War. An uproar, I dare warrant, Begun through malice of the bishop's men!
[A noise again, "Stones! Stones!"

Enter the Mayor of London, attended.

May. O, my good lords,—and virtuous
Henry,—

Pity the city of London, pity us!
The bishop and the Duke of Gloster's men,
Forhidden late to carry any weapon,
Have fill'd their pockets full of pebble stones,
And, banding themselves in contrary parts,
Do pelt so fast at one another's pate, [out;
That many have their giddy brains knock'd
Our windows are broke down in every street,
And we, for fear, compell'd to shut our shops.

Enter, skirmishing, the Retainers of GLOSTER and WINCHESTER, with bloody pates.

K. Hen. We charge you, on allegiance to ourself, peace.—
To hold your slaught'ring hands, and keep the Pray, uncle Gloster, mitigate this strife.

I Serv. Nay, if we he
Forhidden stones, we'll fall to it with our teeth.
2 Serv. Do what ye dare, we are as resolute.
[Skirmish again.

Glo. You of my household, leave this peevish broil,

And set this unaccustom'd fight aside.

3 Serv. My lord, we know your grace to be a

Just and upright; and for your royal birth Inferior to none hut to his majesty:
And ere that we will suffer such a prince,
So kind a father of the commonweal,
To he disgraced hy an inkhorn mate,
We, and our wives and children, all will fight,
And have our bodies slaughter'd hy the foes.
I Serv. Ay, and the very parings of our nails
Shall pitch a field when we are dead.

[Skirmish again.

Glo. Stay, stay, I sayl
And if you love me, as you say you do,

Let me persuade you to forbear awhile.

K. Hen. O, how this discord doth afflict my soul!—

Can you, my Lord of Winchester, behold My sighs and tears, and will not once relent? Who should be pitful if you he not? Or who should study to prefer a peace, If holy churchmen take delight in hroils?

If holy churchmen take delight in hroils?

War. Yield, my lord protector;—yield,
Winchester;—

Except you mean, with obstinate repulse,
To slay your sovereign and destroy the realm.
You see what mischief, and what murder too,
Hath been enacted through your enmity;
Then be at peace, except ye thirst for blood.
Win. He shall submit, or I will never yield.

Win. He shall submit, or I will never yield.
Glo. Compassion on the king commands me stoop;

Or I would see his heart out, ere the priest Should ever get that privilege of me. War. Behold, my Lord of Winchester, the duke

Hath banish'd moody discontented fury,

As by his smoothed brows it doth annear.

As hy his smoothed brows it doth appear:
Why look you still so stern and tragical?
Glo. Here, Winchester, I offer thee my hand.
K. Hen. Fie, uncle Beaufort! I have heard

you preach
That malice was a great and grievous sin;
And will not you maintain the thing you teach,
But prove a chief offender in the same?

War. Sweet king!—the bishop hath a kindly gird.—

For shame, my Lord of Winchester, relent! What, shall a child instruct you what to do? Win. Well, Duke of Gloster, I will yield to Love for thy love and hand for hand I give.

Glo. Ay, hut, I fear me, with a hollow heart.—
See here, my friends and loving countrymen;
This token serveth for a flag of truce
Betwixt ourselves and all our followers:
So help me God, as I dissemble not!

Win. So help me God, as I intend it not [Aside.

K. Hen. O loving uncle, kind Duke of Gloster,
How joyful am I made by this contract!—

For none but Samsons and Goliasses It sendeth forth to skirmish. One to ten! Lean raw-bon'd rascals! who would e'er sup-

They had such courage and audacity?

Char. Let's leave this town; for they are hair-brain'd slaves,

And hunger will enforce them to be more eager: Of old I know them; rather with their teeth The walls they'll tear down than forsake the siege.

Reig. I think, by some odd gimmers or device,

Their arms are set, like clocks, still to strike on; Else ne'er could they hold out so as they do. By my consent, we'll even let them alone. Alen. Be it so.

Enter the Bastard of Orleans.

Bast. Where's the Prince Dauphin? I have news for him.

Char. Bastard of Orleans, thrice welcome to Bast. Methinks your looks are sad, your cheer appall'd:

Hath the late overthrow wronght this offence? Be not dismay'd, for snccor is at hand: A holy maid hither with me I bring, Which, by a vision sent to her from heaven, Ordained is to raise this tedious siege. And drive the English forth the bounds of France. The spirit of deep prophecy she hath, Exceeding the nine sinyls of old Rome: What's past and what's to come she can descry. Speak, shall I call her in? Believe my words, For they are certain and infallible.

Char. Go, call her in. [Exit BASTARD.]

But first, to try her skill, Reignier, stand thou as Dauphin in my place: Question her proudly; let thy looks be stern: By this means shall we sound what skill she Retires.

Re-enter the Bastard of Orleans, with La PUCELLE.

Reig. Fair maid, is't thou wilt do these wondrous feats?

Puc. Reignier, is't thou that thinkest to beguile me?-[behind; Where is the Dauphin?-Come, come from I know thee well, though never seen before. Be not amaz'd, there's nothing hid from me: In private will I talk with thee apart .-

Stand hack, you lords, and give us leave awhile. Reig. She takes upon her hravely at first dasb. (daughter,

Puc. Dauphin, I am by birth a shepherd's My wit untrain'd in any kind of art. Heaven and our Lady gracious hath it pleas'd To shine on my contemptible estate: Lo, whilst I waited on my tender lambs, And to sun's parching heat display'd my cheeks, God's mother deigned to appear to me, And in a vision full of majesty Will'd me to leave my hase vocation, And free my country from calamity: Her aid she promis'd and assur'd success: In complete glory she reveal'd herself; And whereas I was black and swart before,

With those clear rays which she infus'd on me. That heauty am I bless'd with which you see. Ask me what question thou canst possible. And I will answer unpremeditated: My courage try by comhat if thou dar'st, And thou shalt find that I exceed my sex. Resolve on this,—thou shalt he fortunate

If thou receive me for thy warlike mate.

Char. Thou hast astonish'd me with thy high terms:

Only this proof I'll of thy valour make,-In single combat thou shalt huckle with me: And if thou vanquishest, thy words are true: Otherwise I renounce all confidence.

Puc. I am prepar'd: here is my keen-edg'd sword,

Deck'd with five flower-de-luces on each side: The which at Touraine, in Saint Katherine's churchyard,

Out of a great deal of old iron I chose forth.

Char. Then come, o' God's name; I fear no woman.

Puc. And while I live I'll ne'er fly from a man. [They fight.

Char. Stay, stay thy hands! thou art an Amazon.

And fightest with the sword of Dehorah.

Puc. Christ's mother helps me, else I were too weak. [help me: Char. Whoe'er helps thee, 'tis thou that must Impatiently I burn with thy desire; My beart and hands thou hast at once subdu'd. Excellent Pucelle, if thy name be so,

Let me thy servant and not sovereign be: 'Tis the French Dauphin sueth to thee thus. Puc. I must not yield to any rites of love,

For my profession's sacred from above: When I have chased all thy foes from hence, Then will I think upon a recompense.

Char. Meantime look gracious on thy prostrate thrall.

Reig. My lord, methinks, is very long in talk. Alen. Doubtless he shrives this woman to her smock;

Else ne'er could he so long protract his speech.

Reig. Shall we disturb him, since he keeps no mean? Alen. He may mean more than we poor men do know: These women are shrewd tempters with their tongues. Reig. My lord, where are you? what devise you on? Shall we give over Orleans, or no?

Puc. Why, no, I say, distrustful recreants! Fight till the last gasp; I will he your guard.

Char. What she says I'll confirm: we'll fight it out.

Puc. Assign'd am I to be the English This night the siege assuredly I'll raise: Expect Saint Martin's summer, halcyon days, Since I have entered into these wars. Glory is like a circle in the water, Which never ceaseth to enlarge itself, Till by broad spreading it disperse to naught. With Henry's death the English circle ends; Dispersed are the glories it included. Now am I like that proud insulting ship Which Casar and his fortune bare at once.

Alarum: excursions. Enter, from the Town, BEDFORD, brought in sick in a chair, with TALBOT, BURGUNDY, and the English Forces. Then enter on the walls La PUCELLE, CHARLES, BASTARD, ALERGON, and others.

Puc. Good-morrow, gallants! want ye corn for bread?

I think the Duke of Burgundy will fast
Before he'll buy again at such a rate:
'Twas full of darnel;—do you like the taste?
Bur. Scoff on, vile fiend and shameless courtezan!

I trust ere long to choke thee with thine own,
And make thee curse the harvest of that corn.

Char. Your grace may starve, perhaps, before that time.

[treason!

Bed. Olet no words, but deeds, revenge this Puc. What will you do, good gray-beard? break a lance,

And run a tilt at death within a chair?

Tal. Foul fiend of France, and bag of all despite.

Encompass'd with thy lustful paramours!
Becomes it thee to taunt his valiant age,
And twit with cowardice a man half dead?
Damsel, I'll have a bout with you again,
Or else let Talbot perish with this shame.
Puc. Are you so hot, sir?—Yet, Pucelle, hold thy peace;

If Talbot do but thunder, rain will follow.
[TALBOT and the rest consult together.
God speed the parliament! who shall be the speaker? [field?

Tal. Dare ye come forth and meet us in the Puc. Belike your lordship takes us then for fools.

To try if that our own be ours or no.

Tal. I speak not to that railing Hecate,
But unto thee, Alencon, and the rest;
Will ye, like soldiers, come and fight it out?

Alen. Signior, no. [France! Tal. Signior, hang!—base multeers of Like peasant foot-boys do they keep the walls, And dare not take up arms like gentlemen.

Puc. Away, captain! let's get us from the walls;

For Talbot means no goodness, by his looks.— God b'wi' you, my lord! we came but to tell you That we are here.

[Exeunt LA Puc., &c., from the walls. Tal. And there will we be too, ere it be long Or else reproach be Talbot's greatest fame!—
Vow, Burgundy, by honour of thy house,— Prick' on by public wrongs sustain'd in

France,—
Either to get the town again or die;
And I,—as sure as English Henry lives,
And as his father here was conqueror;
As sure as in this late-betrayed town
Great Cœur-de-lion's heart was buried,—
So sure I swear to get the town or die. {vows.

Bur. My vows are equal partners with thy Tal. But ere we go, regard this dying prince, I The valiant Duke of Bedford.—Come, my lord, We will bestow you in some better place, Fitter for sickness and for crazy age.

Bed. Lord Talbot, do not so dishonour me: A gentler heart did never sway in court;
Here will I sit before the walls of Rouen,
And will be partner of your weal or woe.

But kings and mightiest potentates must
For that's the end of human misery.

Bur. Courageous Bedford, let us now persuade you.

Bed. Not to be gone from hence; for once I read

That stout Pendragon, in his litter, sick Came to the field, and vanquished his foes: Methinks I should revive the soldier's hearts, Because I ever found them as myself.

Tal. Undaunted spirit in a dying breast!— Then be it so:—heavens keep old Bedford safe!— And now no more ado, brave Burgundy, But gather we our forces out of hand, And set upon our boasting enemy.

[Exeunt into the Town, BUR., TAL., and Forces, leaving BED. and others.

Alarum: excursions. Enter Sir John .
FASTOLFE, and a Captain.

Cap. Whither away, Sir John Fastolfe, in such haste? (flight: Fast. Whither away! to save myself by

We are like to have the overthrow again. (bot?

Cap. What! will you fly, and leave Lord TalFast.

Ay,

All the Talbots in the world, to save my life. [Exit.

Cap. Cowardly knight! ill fortune follow thee! [Exit into the Town.

Retreat: excursions. Re-enter, from the town,
LA PUCELLE, ALENÇON, CHARLES, &c., and exeunt flying.

Bed. Now, quiet soul, depart when heaven please,

For I have seen our enemies' overthrow.
What is the trust or strength of foolish man?
They that of late were daring with their scoffs
Are glad and fain by flight to save themselves.
[Dies, and is carried off in his chair.

Alarum. Re-enter TALBOT, BURGUNDY, and others.

Tal. Lost and recover'd in a day again? This is a double honour, Burgundy; Yet heavens have glory for this victory!

Bur. Warlike and martial Talbot, Burgundy Enshrines thee in his heart; and there erects Thy noble deeds, as valour's monuments.

Tal. Thanks, gentle duke. But where is Pucelle now?

I think her old familiar is asleep:

Now where's the Bastard's braves, and Charles his gleeks? [grief
What all a most her her her her her her

What, all a-mort? Rouen hangs her head for That such a valiant company are fled. Now will we take some order in the town, Placing therein some expert officers; And then depart to Paris to the king, For there young Harry with his nobles lie.

Bur. What wills Lord Talbot pleaseth Burgundy.

Tal. But yet, before we go, let's not forget
The noble Duke of Bedford, late deceas'd,
But see his exequies fulfill'd in Rouen:
A braver soldier never couched lance,
A gentler heart did never sway in court;
But kings and mightiest potentates must die,
For that's the end of human misery. [Exeunt.

May. I'll call for clubs if you will not away:-This cardinal's more haughty than the devil. Glo. Mayor, farewell: thou dost but what thou mayst.

Win. Abominable Glosterl guard thy head; For I intend to have it ere long [Exeunt severally, GLO., and WIR., with their Servants.

May. See the coast clear'd, and then we will depart.-[bear! Good God, these nobles should such stomachs I myself fight not once in forty year. | Excunt.

Scene IV .- France. Before Otleans. Enter, on the walls, the Master-Gunner and his Son.

M. Gun. Sirrah, thou know'st how Orleans is besieg'd, And how the English have the suburbs won. Son. Father, I know; and oft bave shot at them.

Howe'er, unfortunate, I missed my aim. M. Gun. But now thou shalt not. Be thou rul'd by me: Chief master-gunner am I of this town; Something I must do to procure me grace. The prince's espials have informed me How the English, in the subuchs close intrench'd.

Wont, through a secret grate of iron bars In yonder tower, to overpeer the city, And thence discover how with most advantage They may vex us with shot or with assault. To intercept this inconvenience, A piece of ordnance 'gainst it I have plac'd; And even these three days have I watch'd if I Could see them.

Now do thou watch, for I can stay no longer. If thon spy'st any, run and bring me word; And thou shalt find me at the governor's.

Son. Father, I warrant you; take you no care; I'll never trouble you if I may spy them.

Enter, in an upper Chamber of a Tower, the LORDS SALISBURY and TALBOT, SIR WILLIAM GLANSDALE SIR THOMAS GARGRAVE, and others

Sal. Talbot, my life, my joy, again return'd! How wert thou handled being prisoner? Or by what means gott'st thou to be releas'd? Discourse, I pr'ythee, on this turret's top.

Tal. The Duke of Bedford had a prison

Sal. Yet tell'st thou not how thou wert entertain'd. [taunts. Tcl. Withscoffs, and scorns, and contumelious | Plantagenet, I will; and like thee, Nero, In open market-place produc'd they me,

To be a public spectacle to all: Here, said they, is the terror of the French, The scarecrow that affrights our children so. Then broke I from the officers that led me, And with my nails digg'd stones out of the ground

To hurl at the beholders of my shame: My grisly countenance made others fly; None durst come near for fear of sudden death. In iron walls they deem'd me not secure; So great fear of my name 'mongst them was Spread

That they supposed I could rend bars of steel, And spurn in pieces posts of adamant: Wherefore a guard of chosen shot I had, That walk'd about me every minute-while; And if I did but stir ont of my bed,

Ready they were to shoot me to the heart. Sal. I grieve to hear what torments you endur'd;

But we will be revenged sufficiently. Now it is supper-time in Orleans: Here, through this grate, I can count each one, And view the Frenchmen how they fortify: Let us look in; the sight will much delight thee

Sir Thomas Gargrave and Sir William Glansdale,

Let me have your express opinions Where is best place to make our battery next. Gar. I think at the north gate, for there stand lords. Glan. And I here, at the bulwark of the bridge. Tal. For anght I see, this city must be famish'd,

Or with light skirmishes enfeebled. [Shot from the town. SAL and SIR

Gar. O Lord, have mercy on me, woeful man! Tal. What chance is this that suddenly hath cross'd us? .

Speak, Salisbury; at least, if thou canst speak: How far'st thou, mirror of all martial men? One of thy eyes and thy cheek's side struck ofi!-

Accursed tower! accursed fatal hand That hath contriv'd this woeful tragedyl In thirteen battles Salisbury o'ercame; Henry the Fifth he first train'd to the wars: Whilst any trump did sound or drum struck up, His sword did ne'er leave striking in the field. Yet liv'st thou, Salisbury? though thy speech doth fail,

One eye thon hast, to look to heaven for grace: The sun with one eye vieweth all the world .-If Salisbury wants mercy at thy hands! Bear hence his body; I will help to bury it. Sir Thomas Gargrave, hast thon any life? Speak unto Talbot; nay, look up to him. Salisbury, cheer thy spirit with this comfort; Thou shalt not die whiles-

He beckons with his hand, and smiles on me, As who should say, When I am dead and gone, Remember to avenge me on the French. Play on the lute, beholding the towns burn:

Beside five hundred prisoners of esteem,— Lets fall his sword before your highness' feet, And with submissive loyalty of heart Ascribes the glory of his conquest got First to my God and next unto your grace.

First to my God and next unto your grace.

K. Hen. Is this the Lord Talbot, uncle

Gloster,

That hath so long been resident in France?

Glo. Yes, if it please your majesty, my liege.

K. Hen. Welcome, brave captain and victorious lord!

When I was young,—as yet I am not old,—I do remember how my father said
A stouter champion never handled sword.
Long since we were resolved of your truth,
Your faithful service, and your toil in war;
Yet never have you tasted our reward,
Or been reguerdon'd with so much as thanks,
Because till now wo never saw your face:
Therefore, stand up; and for these good deserts
We here create you Earl of Shrewsbury;
And in our coronation take your place.

Exeunt K. HER., GLO., Tal., and Robles. Ver. Now, sir, to you, that were so hot at sea.

Disgracing of these colours that I wear
In honour of my noble Lord of York,— Dar'st thou maintain the former words thou spak'st?

Bas. Yes, sir, as well as you dare patronage The envious barking of your saucy tongue Against my lord the Duke of Somerset.

Ver. Sirrah, thy lord I honour as he is.
Bas. Why, what is he? as good a man as

York.

Ver. Hark ye; not so: in witness, take ye that.

[Strikes him.]

Bas. Villain, thou know'st the law of arms is such

That whoso draws a sword 'tis present death, Or else this blow should broach thy dearest blood.

But I'll unto his majesty, and crave I may have liberty to venge this wrong; When thou shalt see I'll meet thee to thy cost.

Ver. Well, miscreant, I'll be there as soon

And, after, meet you sooner than you would. Exeunt.

ACT IV.

Scene I .- Paris. A Room of State.

Enter King Henry, Gloster, Exeter, York Suffole, Somerset, Winchester, Warwick, Talbot, the Governor of Paris, and others.

Glo. Lord bishop, set the crown upon his head.

Win. God save King Henry, of that name the sixth!

Glo. Now, governor of Paris, take your oath,— [Governor kneeks.

That you elect no other king but him; Esteem none friends but such as are his friends And none your foes but such as shall pretend Malicious practices against his state: This shall ye do, so help you righteous God!

[Exeunt. Gov. and his Train.

Enter SIR JOHN FASTOLFE.

Fast. My gracious sovereign, as I rode from Calais,

To haste unto your coronation,

A letter was deliver'd to my hands, Writ to your grace from the Duke of Burgunds, Tal. Shame to the Duke of Burgundy and thee! I wow'd, base knight, when I did meet thee

To tear the garter from the craven's les-

To tear the garter from thy craven's leg.—
[Plucking it off.
Which I have done,—because unworthily
Thou wast installed in that high degree.—

Pardon me, princely Henry, and the rest:
This dastard, at the battle of Patay,
When but in all I was six thousand strong,
And that the French were almost ten to one,—
Before we met, or that a stroke was given,
Like to a trusty squire, did run away:
In which assault we lost twelve hundred men
Myself, and divers gentlemen beside,
Were there surpris'd and taken prisoners.
Then judge, great lords, if I have done amiss;
Or whether that such cowards ought to wear
This ornament of knighbood, year or no.

Glo. To say the truth, this fact was infamous, And ill be seeming any common man,

Much more a knight, a captain, and a leader.

Tal. When first this order was ordain'd, my lords,

Knights of the garter were of noble birth,

Yaliant and virtuous, full of haughty courage,
Such as were grown to credit by the wars;

Not fearing death nor shrinking for distress,

But always resolute in most extremes.
He, then, that is not furnish'd in this sort
Doth but usurp the sacred name of knight,
Profaming this most honourable order,
And should,—if I were worthy to be judge,—
Be quite degraded, like a hedge-born swain
That doth presume to boast of gentle blood.

K. Hen. Stain to thy countrymen, thou hear'st thy doom!

Be packing, therefore, thou that wast a knight: Henceforth we banish thee, on pain of death.

And now, my lord protector, view the letter Sent from our uncle Duke of Burgundy.

Glo. What means his grace, that he hath thang'd his style?

(Viewing the superscription.
No more but, plain and bluntly, To the King!
Hath he forgot he is his sovereign?
Or doth this churlish superscription

Pretend some alteration in good-will?
What's here?—[Reads]—I have, upon especial cause,—

Mov'd with compassion of my country's wreck, Together with the pitiful complaints
Of such as your oppression feeds upon,— Forsaken your pernicious faction, France.
And join'd with Charles, the rightful King of O monstrous treachery! Can this be so,—

That in alliance, amity, and oaths.
There should be found such false dissembling

Near to the walls, by some apparent sign
Let us have knowledge at the court of guard.

1 Sent. Sergeant, you shall. [Ent Sergeant.]
Thus are poor servitors,

When others sleep upon their quiet beds, Constrain'd to watch in darkness, rain, and cold.

Enter TALBOT, BEDFORD, BURGUNDY, and Forces, with scaling-ladders; their drums beating a dead march.

Tcl. Lord regent and redoubted Burgundy,— By whose approach the regious of Artois, Walloon, and Picardy are friends to us,— This happy night the Frenchmen are secure, Having all day carous'd and banqueted: Embrace we, then, this opportunity, As fitting best to quittance their-deceit, Contrivid by art and beleful sorcery.

Bed. Coward of France!—how much he wrongs his fame,
Despairing of his own arm's fortitude,

But what's that Pucelle whom they farm so pure?

Tal. A maid, they say.

Bed. A maid! and be so martial!

Bed. Prop. God she prope not proceedings are

Bur. Pray God she prove not masculine ere long, If underneath the standard of the French

She carry armour, as she hath begun.

Tel. Well, let them practise and converse with spirits:

God is our fortress, in whose conquering

Let us resolve to scale their flinty bulwarks.

Bed. Ascend, brave Talbot; we will follow

Tal. Not all together: better far, I guess, That we do make our entrance several ways; That, if it chance the one of us do fail, The other yet may rise against their force.

Bed. Agreed: I'll to you corner.
Bur And I to this.
Tcl. And here will Talbot mount or make his grave.— Now, Salisbury, for thee, and for the right Of English Henry, shall this right appear How much in duty I am bound to both.

assaniti

The English scale the walls, crying St. George! a Talbot! and all enter the Town.

Sent Arm! arm! the enemy doth make

The French leap over the wells in their shirts.

Enter, several ways, Bastard, Alençon,
Reignier, helf reedy and half unreedy.

Alen. How now, my lords? what, all unready so? [well.

Bast. Unready! ay, and glad we 'scap'd so Reig. 'Twas time, I trow, to wake and leave our beds,

Hearing alarums at our chamber-doors.

Alen. Of all exploits since first I follow'd

Ne'er heard I of a warlike enterprise More venturous or desperate than this. Bast. I think this Talbot be a fiend of hell.

Reig. If not of hell, the heavens, sure, favour him.

Alen. Here cometh Charles: I marvel how he sped.

Bast. Tut! holy Joan was his defensive guard.

Enter CHARLES and LA PUCELLE.

Char. Is this thy cunning, thou deceitful dame?

Didst thou at first, to flatter us withal, Make us partakers of a little gain,

That now our loss might be ten times so much?

Puc. Wherefore is Charles impatient with his friend?

At all times will you have my power alike? Sleeping or waking, must I still prevail, Or will you blame and lay the fault on me? Improvident soldiers! had your watch been: good

This sudden mischief never could have fall'n.

Cher. Duke of Alençon, this was your default.

That, being captein of the watch to-night, Did look no better to that weighty charge. Aten. Had all your quarters been as safe

Aton. Had all your quarters been as safely kept
As that whereof I had the government,

We had not been thus shamefully surpris'd.

Bast. Mine was secure.

Reig. And so was mine, my lord. Char. And, for myself, most part of all this night,

Within her quarter and mine own precinct I was employ'd in passing to and fro, About relieving of the sentinels: Then how or which way should they first break

Then how or which way should they first break in?

Puc. Question, my lords, no further of the case, How or which way; 'tis sure they found some place

But weakly guarded, where the breach was made.

And now there rests no other shift but this,— To gather our soldiers, scatter'd and dispers'd, And lay new platforms to endamage them.

Alarum. Enter an English Soldier, crying a Talbot! a Talbot! They fly, leaving their clothes behind.

Sold. I'll be so bold to take what they have left.

The cry of Taibot serves me for a sword;
For I have loaden me with many spoils,
Using no other weapon but his name. [Exil.

SCENE IL-ORLEANS. Within the Tourn.

Enter TALBOT, BEDFORD, BURGUNDY, a Captain, and others.

Bed. The day begins to break and might is

Hed,
Whose pitchy mentle over-veil'd the earth.
Here sound retreat, and cease our hot pursuit.
[Retreat sounded.]

Tel. Bring forth the body of old Salisbury, And here advance it in the market-place, The middle centre of this cursed town. York. An if I wist he did,—but let it rest; Other affairs must now be managed.

[Exeunt York, War., and Ver. Exe. Well didst thou, Richard, to suppress thy voice:

For had the passions of thy heart burst out, I fear we should have seen decipher'd there More rancorons spite, more furious raging

broils,
Than yet can be imagin'd or suppos'd.
But howsoe'er, no simple man that sees
This jarring discord of nobility,
This shouldering of each other in the court,
This factions bandying of their favourites,
But that it doth presage some ill event.
'Tis much when sceptres are in children's hands;

But more when envy breeds unkind division; There comes the ruin, there begins confusion. [Exit.

Scene II.—France. Before Bourdeaux.

. Enter TALBOT, with his Forces.

Tal. Go to the gates of Bourdeaux, trumpeter. Summon their general unto the wall.

Trumpet sounds a parley. Enter, on the walls, the General of the French Forces, and others.

English John Talbot, captains, calls you forth, Servant in arms to Harry King of England; And thus he would,—Open your city gates; Be humble to us; call my sovereign yours, And do him homage as obedient subjects; And I'll withdraw me and my bloody power: But if you frown upon this profier'd peace You tempt the fury of my three attendants, Lean famine, quartering steel, and climbing fire; Who, in a moment, even with the earth Shall lay your stately and air -braving towers, If you forsake the offer of their love.

Gen. Thou ominous and fearful owl of death, Our nation's terror and their bloody scourgel The period of thy tyrany approacheth. On us thou canst not enter but by death; For, I protest, we are well fortified, And strong enough to issue out and fight: If thou retire, the Dauphin, well appointed, Stands with the snares of war to tangle thee: On either hand thee there are squadrons pitch'd To wall thee from the liberty of flight; And no way canst thou turn thee for redress But death doth front thee with apparent spoil, And pale destruction meets thee in the face. Ten thousand French have ta'en the sacrament, To rive their dangerous artillery Upon no Christian soul but English Talbot. Lo, there thou stand'st, a breathing valiant man, Of an invincible unconquer'd spirit! This is the latest glory of thy praise That I, thy enemy, due thee withal; For ere the glass that now begins to run Finish the process of his sandy hour, These eyes, that see thee now well coloured, Shall see thee wither'd, bloody, pale, and dead.

Hark! the Dauphin's drum, a worning bell,

Sings heavy music to thy timorous soul; And mine shall ring thy dire departure out.

Exeunt General, &c. from the Walls.

Tal. He fables not; I hear the enemy:

Out, some light horsemen, and peruse their wings.—

O, negligent and heedless discipline!
How are we park'd and bounded in a pale,—
A little herd of England's timorous deer,
Maz'd with a yelping kennel of French curs!
If we be English deer, be, then, in blood;
Not rascal-like to fall down with a pinch,
But rather, moody-mad and desperate stags,
Turn on the bloody hounds with heads of steel,
And make the cowards stand aloof at bay:
Sell every man his life as dear as mine,
And they shall find dear deer of us, my friends.—

God and Seire Coorne, Talket and Talket.

God and Saint George, Talbot and Englands' Prosper our colours in this dangerous fight! [Exeunt.

Scene III.—Plains in Gascony.

Enter YORK, with Forces; to him a Messenger.

York. Are not the speedy scouts return'd again,

That dogg'd the mighty army of the Dauphin?

Mess. They are return'd, my lord; and give it out

That he is march'd to Bordeaux with his power, To fight with Talbot: as he march'd along, By your espials were discovered Two mightier troops than that the Dauphin led, Which join'd with him, and made their march

York. A plague upon that villain Somerset, That thus delays my promised supply Of horsemen, that were levied for this siege! Renowned Talbot doth expect my aid; And I am louted by a traitor villain, And cannot help the noble chevalier: God comfort him in this necessity! If he miscarry, farewell wars in France.

for Bourdeaux.

Enter SIR WILLIAM LUCY.

Lwy. Thou princely leader of our English strength,

Never so needful on the earth of France,
Spur to the rescue of the noble Talbot,
Who now is girdled with a waist of iron,
And hemm'd about with grim desruction:
To Bourdeaux, warlike duke! to Bordeaux,
York!
[honour.

Else, farewell Talbot, France, and England's York. O God, that Somerset,—who in proud heart

Doth stop my cornets,—were in Talbot's place! So should we save a valiant gentleman By forefeiting a traitor and a coward. Mad ire and wrathful fury makes me weep, That thus we die, while remiss traitors sleep.

Lucy. O, send some succour to the distress'd lord!

York. He dies, we lose; I break my warlike word; We mourn, France smiles; we lose, they daily

All 'long of this vile traitor Somerset.

Tal. No, no, I am but shadow of myself: You are deceiv'd, my substance is not here; For what you see is but the smallest part And least proportion of humanity: I tell you, madam, were the whole frame here, It is of such a spacious lofty pitch,

Your roof were not sufficient to contain't.

Count. This is a riddling merchant for the nonce:

He will be here, and yet be is not here: How can these contrarieties agree? Tal. That will I show you presently.

He winds a Horn. Drums heard; then a Peal of Ordnonce. The Gates being forced, enter Soldiers.

How say you, madam? are you now persuaded That Talbot is but shadow of himself? These are his substance, sinews, arms, and strength,

With which be yoketh your rebellious necks, Razeth your cities, and subverts your towns, And in a moment makes them desolate.

Count. Victorious Talbot! pardon my abuse: I find thou art no less than fame hath bruited, And more than may be gather'd by thy shape. Let my presumption not provoke thy wrath: For I am sorry that with reverence I did not entertain thee as thou art.

Tal. Be not dismay'd, fair lady; nor misconstrue

The mind of Talbot as you did mistake The outward composition of his body. What have you done hath not offended me: No other satisfaction do I crave But only-with your patience-that we may Taste of your wine, and see what cates you have;

For soldiers' stomachs always serve them well.

Count. With all my heart, and think me honoured

To feast so great a warrior in my house.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV .- LONDON. The Temple Garden. Enter the EARLS OF SOMERSET, SUFFOLK, and Warwick; Richard Plantagenet, Vernon, and another Lawyer.

The garden here is more convenient. Itruth; Plan. Then say at once if I maintain'd the Or else was wrangling Somerset in the error?

Suf. Faith, I have been a truant in the law. And never yet could frame my will to it; And therefore frame the law unto my will.

Som. Judge you, my lord of Warwick, theh, between ns. (higher pitch; War. Between two hawks, which files the Between two dogs, which hath the deeper [temper; Between two blades, which bears the better

Between two girls, which hath the merriest eye;-

I have, perhaps, some shallow spirit of judgment:

But in these nice sharp quillets of the law. Good faith, I am no wiser than a daw. [ance: Plan. Tut, tut, bere is a mannerly forbear-The truth appears so naked on my side

That any purblind eye may find it out.

Som. And on my side it is so well apparell'd. So clear, so shining, and so evident,

That it will glimmer through a blind man's eye. Plan. Since you are tongue-tied and so loth to speak,

In dumb significants proclaim your thoughts: Lef him that is a true-born gentleman, And stands upon the honour of his birth. If he suppose that I have pleaded truth, From off this brier pluck a white rose with me.

Som. Let him that is no coward nor no flatterer. But dare maintain the party of the truth,

Pluck a red rose from off this thorn with me. War I love no colours; and, without all colour

Of base insinuating flattery

I pluck this white rose with Plantagenet. [set: Suf. I pluck this red rose with young Somer-And say withal, I think he held the right.

Ver. Stay, lords and gentlemen, and pluck no more

Till you conclude that he npon whose side The fewest roses are cropp'd from the tree Shall yield the other in the right opinion.

Som. Good Master Vernon, it is well objected:

If I have fewest I subscribe in silence.

Plon. And I. Ver. Then, for the truth and plainness of the I pluck this pale and maiden blossom here, Giving my verdict on the white rose side. Som. Prick not your finger as you pluck it off, Lest, bleeding, you do paint the white rose red, And fall on my side so, against your will.

Ver. If I, my lord, for my opinion bleed, Opinion shall be surgeon to my hurt, And keep me on the side where still I am.

Well, well, come on; who else? Som. Well, well, come on; who else? Law. Unless my study and my books be false,

The argument you held was wrong in you; [To SOMERSET. In sign whereof I pluck a white rose too.

Plon. Now, Somerset, where is your argument?

Som. Here in my scabbard; meditating that Shall dye your white rose in a bloody red. Plan. Meantime your cheeks do counterfeit our roses;

For pale they look with fear, as witnessing . The truth on our side

No, Plantagenet, Som. 'Tis not for fear, but anger that thy cheeks Blush for pure shame to counterfeit our roses, And yet thy tongue will not confess thy error.

Plan. Hath not thy rose a canker, Somerset? Som. Hath not thy rose a thorn, Plantagenet? Plan. Ay, sharp and piercing, to maintain his truth;

Between two horses, which doth bear him best; | Whiles thy consuming canker eats his falsehood. | ibleeding roses, Som. Well, I'll find friends to wear my That shall maintain what I have said is true, Where false Plantagenet dare not be seen.

John. No part of him but will be shame in me. [lose it. Tal. Thou never hadst renown, nor canst not

John. Yes, your renowned name: shall flight abuse it?

Tal. Thy father's charge shall clear thee from that stain.

John. You cannot witness for me, heing slain. If death be so apparent, then both fly.

Tal. And leave my followers here to fight

Tal. And leave my followers here to fight and die?

My age was never tainted with such shame.

John. And shall my youth be guilty of such blame?

No more can I be sever'd from your side Than can yourself yourself in twain divide: Stay, go, do what you will, the like do I; For live I will not if my father die.

Tal. Then here I take my leave of thee, fair Born to eclipse thy life this afternoon.

Come, side by side together live and die;

And soul with soul from France to heaven fly.

[Exeunt.

Scene VI.—A Field of Battle.

Alarum: excursions wherein Talbot's Son is hemmed about, and Talbot rescues him.

Tal. Saint George and victoryl fight, soldiers, fight:

The regent hath with Talbot broke his word, And left us to the rag of France his sword. Where is John Talbot?—pause, and take thy breath;

I gave thee life and rescu'd thee from death.

John. O, twice my father, twice am I thy son!

The life thou gav'st me first was lost and done,

Till with thy warlike sword, despite of fate,

To my determin'd time thou say'st new date.

To my determin'd time thou gav'st new date.

Tal. When from the Dauphin's crest thy sword struck fire,

It warm'd thy father's heart with proud desire Of bold-fac'd victory. Then leaden age, Quicken'd with youthful spleen and warlike

Beat down Alencon, Orleans, Burgundy, And from the pride of Gallia rescu'd thee. The ireful bastard Orleans,—that drew blood From thee, my boy, and had the maidenhood Of thy first fight,—I soon encountered, And, interchanging blows, I quickly shed Some of his bastard blood; and, in disgrace, Bespoke him thus,—Contaminated, base, And misbegotten blood I spill of thine, Mean and right poor, for that pure blood of mine

Which thou didst force from Talbot, my brave boy:—

Here, purposing the Bastard to destroy, [care,—Came in strong rescue. Speak, thy father's Art thou not weary, John? how dost thou fare? Wilt thou yet leave the battle, boy, and fly, Now thou art seal'd the son of chivalry? Fly, to revenge my death when I am dead: The help of one stands me in little stead. O, too much folly is it, well I wot, To hazard all our lives in one small boat! If I to-day die not with Frenchmen's rage, To-morrow I shall die with mickle age: By me they nothing gain an if I stay,—

'Tis hut the short'ning of my life one day: In thee thy mother dies, our household's name, My death's revenge, thy youth, and England's fame:

All these, and more, we hazard by thy stay;
All these are sav'd if thou wilt fly away.

John. The sword of Orleans hath not made

These words of yours draw life-blood from my On that advantage, bought with such a shame.— To save a paltry life, and slay bright fame,— Before young Talbot from old Talbot fly, The coward horse that bears me fall and diel And like me to the peasant boys of France; To be shame's scorn, and subject of mischance! Surely, by all the glory you have won, An if I fly, I am not Talbot's son: Then talk no more of flight, it is no boot:

If son to Taibot, die at Taibot's foot. [Crete, Tal. Then follow thou thy desperate sire of Thou Icarus; thy life to me is sweet:

If thou wilt fight, fight by thy father's side;

And, commendable prov'd, let's die in pride.

[Exeunt.

Scene VII.—Another part of the same.

Alarum: excursions. Enter Talbot wounded, supported by a Servant.

Tal. Where is my other life?—mine own is gone;— Uohn?—
O, where's young Talbot? where is valiant Triumphant death, smear'd with captivity, Young Talbot's valour makes me smile at

thee:—
When he berceiv'd me shrink and on my knee, His bloody sword he brandish'd over me, And like a hungry lion did commence Rough deeds of rage and stern impatience; But when my angry guardant stood alone, Tendering my ruin, and assail'd of none, Dizzy-ey'd fury and great rage of heart Suddenly made him from my side to start Into the clustering battle of the French; And in that sea of blood my boy did drench His overmounting spirit; and there died My Icarus, my blossom, in his pride. [borne! Serv. O my dear lord! lo where your son is

Enter Soldiers, bearing the body of JOHN TALEOT.

Tal. Thou antic death, which laugh'st us here to scorn,
Anon, from thy insulting tyranny,
Coupled in bonds of perpetuity,
Two Talbots, winged through the lither sky,

In thy despite, shall 'scape mortality.—
O thou whose wounds become hard-favour'd death,

Speak to thy father ere thou yield thy breath!
Brave death by speaking, whether he will or no;
Imagine him a Frenchman and thy foe.—
Poor boy! he smiles, methinks, as who should say, [to-day.— Had death been French, then death had died Come, come, and lay him in his father's arms: My spirit tan no longer bear these harms. Soldiers, adieu! I have what I would have, Now my old arms are young Talbot's grave. [Dies.

And did upbraid me with my father's death: Which ohloguy set bars before my tongue, Else with the like I had requited him. Therefore, good uncle, for my father's sake. In honour of a true Plantagenet, And for alliance sake, declare the cause My father, Earl of Cambridge, lost his head. Mor. That cause, fair nephew, that im-

For I am ignorant, and cannot guess. Mor. I will, if that my fading breath permit, And death approach not ere my tale be done. Henry the Fourth, grandfather to this king, Depos'd his nephew Richard, -Edward's son, The first-begotten, and the lawful heir Of Edward king, the third of that descent: During whose reign the Percies of the north. Finding his usurpation most unjust, Endeavour'd my advancement to the throne: The reason mov'd these warlike lords to this Was, for that,-young King Richard thus remov'd,

Leaving no heir begotten of his body.-I was the next by birth and parentage; For by my mother I derived am From Lionel Dake of Clarence, the third son To King Edward the Third; whereas he From John of Gaunt doth bring his pedigree, Being but fourth of that heroic line. But mark: as in this haughty great attempt They lahoured to plant the rightful heir, I lost my liberty, and they their lives. Long after this, when Henry the Fifth, Succeeding his father Bolingbroke, did reign, Thy father, Earl of Cambridge, then deriv'd From famous Edmund Langley, Duke of York, Marrying my sister, that thy mother was, Again, in pity of my hard distress, Levied an army, weening to redeem And have install'd mo in the diadem: But, as the rest, so fell that noble earl, Thus the Mortimers, And was beheaded. Mor. True; and thou seee'st that I no issue have

And that my fainting words do warrant death: Thou art my heir; the rest I wish thee gather; But yet be wary in thy studious care.

Plan. Thy grave admonishments prevail with

But yet methinks my father's execution Was nothing less than bloody tyranny.

Mor. With silence, nephew, he thou politic; Strong-fixed is the house of Lancaster, And, like a mountain, not to be remov'd. But now thy uncle is removing hence; As princes do their courts, when they are cloy'd With long continuance in a settled place.

Plan. O uncle, would some part of uncle, would some part of my young years Might but redeem the passage of your age! Mor. Thou dost then wrong me, -as the slaughterer doth Which giveth many wounds when one will kill. And for dissension, who preferreth peace

Plan. And peace, no war, befall thy parting soult In prison hast thou spent n pilgrimage, And like a hermit overpass'd thy days. Well, I will lock his counsel in my breast; And what I do imagine, let that rest.-Keepers, convey him hence; and I myself Will see his burial hetter than his life.—

[Exeunt Keepers, bearing out the body of MOR. Here dies the dusky torch of Mortimer, Chok'd with amhition of the meaner sort:-And for those wrongs, those bitter injuries, Which Somerset hath offer'd to my house, I doubt not but with honour to redress; And therefore haste I to the Parliament, Either to be restored to my blood, Or make my ill the advantage of my good. Exit.

ACT III.

Scene L.—London. The Parliament House. Flourish. Enter King Henry, Exeter, Enter KING HENRY, WARWICK, SOMERSET, GLOSTER, and Sur-FOLK; the BISHOP OF WINCHESTER, RICHARD PLANTAGENET, and others. GLOSTER offers to put up a bill; Whichester snatches it, and tears it.

Win. Com'st thou with deep premeditated. lines,

With written pamphlets studiously devis'd, Humphrey of Gloster? If thou canst accuse, Or anght intend'st to lay unto my charge, Do it without invention, suddenly: As I with sudden and extemporal speecn Purpose to answer what thou canst object.

Glo. Presumptuons priest! this place commands my patience, Or thou shouldst find thou hast dishonour'd me. Think not, although in writing I preferr'd The manner of thy vile outrageous crimes That therefore I have forg'd, or am not ablo Verbatim to rehearse the method of my pen: No, prelate; such is thy audacious wickedness. Thy lewd, pestiferous, and dissentious pranks, As very infants prattle of thy pride. Thou art a most pernicious usurer; Froward by nature, enemy to peace Lascivious, wanton, more than well beseems A man of thy profession and degree; And for thy treachery, what's more manifest,-In that thou laid'st a trap to take my life, As well at London bridge as at the Tower? Beside, I fear me, if thy thoughts were sifted, The king, thy sovereign, is not quite exempt From envious malice of thy swelling heart.

Win. Gloster, I do defy thee .- Lords, vonchsafe

To give me hearing what I shall reply. If I were covetous, ambitious, or perverse, As he will have me, how am I so poor? Or how haps it I seek not to advance Or raise myself, but keep my wonted calling? Have heen consider'd and debated on.
Your purpose is both good and reasonable;
And therefore are we certainly resolv'd
To draw conditions of a friendly peace;
Which by my Lord of Winchester we mean
Shall be transported presently to France.
Glo. And for the profier of my lord your master,

I have inform'd his highness so at large,
As, liking of the lady's virtuous gifts,
Her heauty, and the value of her dower,
He doth intend she shall be England's queen.
K. Hen. In argument and proof of which contract,

Bear her this jewel [to the Amb.], pledge of my affection.—

And so, my lord protector, see them guarded And safely brought to Dover; where, inshipp'd, Commit them to the fortune of the see.

[Exeunt K. Hen., Glo., Exe., and Ambassadors.

Win. Stay, my lord legate: you shall first receive
The sum of money which I promised
Should he delivered to his holiness
For clothing me in these grave ornaments.
Leg. I will attend upon your lordship's leisure. [Exit. Win. Now Winchester will not submit, I trow,

Or be inferior to the proudest peer. Humphrey of Gloster, thou shalt well perceive That neither in hirth or for authority The bishop will he overborne by thee: I'll either make thee stoop and hend thy knee, Or sack this country with a mutiny. [Exit.

SCENE IL-FRANCE. Plains in Anjou.

Enter Charles, Burgundy, Alencon, La Pucelle, and Forces, marching.

Char. These news, my lords, may cheer our drooping spirits:
'Tis said the stout Parisians do revolt,

And turn again unto the warlike French.

Alen. Then march to Paris, royal Charles of France,

And keep not hack your powers in dalliance.

Puc. Peace be amongst them if they turn to Else ruin combat with their palaces!

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Success unto our valiant general,
And happiness to his accomplices!
Char. What tidings send our scouts? I pr'ythee, speak.

Mess. The English army, that divided was Into two parts, is now conjoin'd in one,
And means to give you hattle presently. lis;
Char. Somewhat too sudden, sirs, the warning

But we will presently provide for them.

Bur. I trust the ghost of Talbot is not there:

Now he is gone, my lord, you need not fear.

Puc. Of all base passions fear is most accurs'd:— [thine; Command the conquest, Charles, it shall be Let Henry fret and all the world repine.

Char. Then on, my lords; and France be fortunate! [Excunt.

Scene III.—The same. Before Angiers. Alarums: excursions. Enter La Pucelle.

Puc. The regent conquers and the Frenchmen fly,— ow help, ye charming spells and periapts;

Now help, ye charming spells and periapts; And ye choice spirits that admonish me, And give me signs of future accidents,— You speedy helpers, that are substitutes Under the lordly monarch of the north, Appear, and aid me in this enterprise!

[Thunder.

Enfer Fiends.

This speedy and quick appearance argues proof Of your accustom'd diligence to me. Now, ye familiar spirits that are cull'd Out of the powerful legions under earth, Help me this once, that France may get the field.

[They walk about and speak not. O, hold me not with silence over-long! Where I was wont to feed you with my blood I'll lop a member off and give it you, In earnest of a further henefit, So you do condescend to help me now.

[They hang their heads.]
No hope to have redress?—My body shall Pay recompense if you will grant my suit.
[They shake their heads.

Cannot my body nor blood sacrifice
Entreat you to your wonted furtherance?
Then take my soul,—my hody, soul, and all,
Before that England give the French the foil.

See! they forsake me. Now the time is come That France must vail her lofty-plumed crest, And let her head fall into England's lap. My ancient incantations are too weak, And hell too strong for me to huckle with: Now, France, thy glory droopeth to the dust.

Alarums. Enter French and English, fighting. LA PUCELLE and YORK fight hand to hand: LA PUCELLE is taken. The French fly.

York. Damsel of France, I think I have you fast:

Unchain your spirits now with spelling charms, And try if they can gain your liberty.— A goodly prize, fit for the devil's grace! See how the ugly witch doth bend her brows, As if, with Circe, she would change my shape! Puc. Chang'd to a worser shape thou canst not he. [man;

York. O, Charles the Dauphin is a proper No shape but his can please your dainty eye.

Puc. A plaguing mischief light on Charles and thee!

And may ye both he suddenly surpris'd
By bloody hands, in sleeping on your heds!
York. Fell, banning hag; enchantress, hold thy tongue! [while.

Puc. I prythee, give me leave to curse as York. Curse, miscreant, when thou comest to the stake. [Exeunt.

Alarums. Enter Suffole, leading in Lady Margaret.

Suf. Be what thou wilt, thou art my prisoner. {Gazes on her.

Away, my masters! trouble us no more; But join in friendship, as your lords have done.
I Serv. Content: I'll to the surgeon's.

2 Serv. And so will I. 3 Serv. And I will see what physic the tavern affords.

[Exeunt Servants, Mayor, &c. War. Accept this scroll, most gracious sovereign;

Which in the right of Richard Plantagenet We do exhibit to your majesty.

Glo. Well urg'd my Lord of Warwick;-for, sweet prince,

An if your grace mark every circumstance, You have great reason to do Richard right; Especially for those occasions

At Eltham Place I told your majesty. [force: K. Hen. And those occasions, uncle, were of Therefore, my loving lords, our pleasure is That Richard be restored to his blood.

War. Let Richard be restored to his blood; So shall his father's wrongs be recompens'd. Win. As will the rest, so willeth Winchester.

K. Hen. If Richard will be true, not that alone,

But all the whole inheritance I give That doth belong unto the house of York, From whence you spring by lineal descent. Plan. Thy humble servant vows obedience

And humble service till the point of death. K. Hen. Stoop, then, and set your knee against my foot;

And in reguerdon of that duty done I girt thee with the valiant sword of York: Rise, Richard, like a true Plantagenet,

And rise created princely Duke of York. [fall! Plan. And so thrive Richard as thy foes may And as my duty springs, so perish they That grudge one thought against your majesty!

All. Welcome, high prince, the mighty Duke of York! Som. Perish, base prince, ignoble Duke of York! Glo. Now will it best avail your majesty To cross the seas, and to be crown'd in France: 'The presence of a king engenders love Amongst his subjects and his loyal friends, As it disanimates his enemies.

K. Hen. When Gloster says the word, King

Henry goes; For friendly counsel cuts off many foes. Glo. Your ships already are in readiness.

(Flourish. Exeunt all but EXETER. Exe. Ay, we may march in England or in France,

Not seeing what is likely to ensue. This late dissension grown betwixt the peers Burns under feigned ashes of forg'd love, And will at last break out into a flame: As fester'd members rot but by degree, Till bones and flesh and sinews fall away, So will this base and envious discord breed. And now I fear that fatal prophecy Which in the time of Henry named the Fifth Was in the mouth of every sucking babe, That Henry born at Monmouth should win all, And Henry born at Windsor should lose all: Which is so plain that Exeter doth wish His days may finish ere that hapless time Exit. Scene II.—France. Before Rouen.

Enter La Pucelle disguised, and Soldiers dressed like Countrymen, with sacks upon their backs.

Puc. These are the city-gates, the gates of

Through which our policy must make a breach: Take heed, be wary how you place your words; Talk like the vulgar sort of market-men That come to gather money for their corn. If we have entrance, -as I hope we shall .-And that we find the slothful watch but weak. I'll by a sign give notice to our friends,

That Charles the Dauphin may encounter them. I Sold. Our sacks shall be a mean to sack the city, And we be lords and rulers over Rouen; Therefore we'll knock. Knocks. Guard. [Within.] Qui est là!

Puc. Paysans, pauvres gens de France,-Poor market-folks that come to sell their corn. Guard. [Opening the gates.] Enter, go in; the market-bell is rung.

Puc. Now, Rouen, I'll shake thy bulwarks to the ground. [LA PUCELLE, &c., enter the Town.

Enter Charles, Bastard of Orleans. ALENCON, and Forces.

Char. Saint Denis bless this happy stratagem I And once again we'll sleep secure in Rouen. Bast. Here enter'd Pucelle and her practisants:

Now she is there, how will she specify Where is the best and safest passage in? Alen. By thrusting out a torch from yonder tower; Which, once, discern'd, shows that her meaning No way to that, for weakness, which she enter'd.

Enter LA PUCELLE, on a battlement, holding out a torch burning.

Puc. Behold, this is the happy wedding-torch. That joineth Rouen unto her countrymen, But burning fatal to the Talbotites.

Bast. See, noble Charles, the heacon of our friend:

The burning torch in yonder turret stands. Char. Now shine it like a comet of revenge, A prophet to the fall of all our foes! Alen. Defer no time, delays have dangerous ends; Enter, and cry The Dauphin, presently, And then do execution on the watch. [They enter. Exit LA PUCELLE above.

Alarum. Enter, from the Town, TALBOT and English Soldiers.

Tal. France, thou shalt rue this treason with thy tears, If Talbot but survive thy treachery .-

Pucelle, that witch, that damned sorceress, Hath wrought this hellish mischief unawares, That hardly we escap'd the pride of France.

(Exeunt into the Town.

Fit to be made companion with a king: What answer makes your grace unto my suit? Reig. Since thou dost deign to woo her little worth

To be the princely bride of such a lord,
Upon condition I may quietly
Enjoy mine own, the county Maine and Anjou,
Free from oppression or the stroke of war,
My daughter shall be Henry's, if he please.

Suf. That is her ransom,—I deliver her;
And those two counties I will undertake
Your grace shall well and quietly enjoy.
Reig. And I again, in Henry's royal name,

As deputy unto that gracious king, Give thee her hand, for sign of plighted faith. Suf. Reignier of France, I give thee kingly thanks,

Because this is in traffic of a king:—
And yet, methinks, I could be well content.
To be mine own attorney in this case.—

I'll over, then, to England with this news, And make this marriage to be solemniz'd. So, farewell, Reignier: set this diamond safe In golden palaces, as it becomes.

Reig. I do embrace thee as I would embrace The Christian prince, King Benry, were he here. {and prayers

Mar. Farewell, my lord: good wishes, praise, Shall Suffolk ever have of Margaret. [Going. Suf. Farewell, sweet madam: but hark you, Margaret,—

No princely commendations to my king?

Mar. Such commendations as become a maid.

A virgin, and his servent, say to him.

Suf. Words sweetly plac'd and modestly directed.

But, madam, I must trouble you again,—
No loving token to his majesty? [heart,
Mar. Yes, my good lord,—a pure unspotted
Hever yet taint with love, I send the king.

Suf. And this withal. [Kisses her. Mar. That for thyself:—I will not so presume To send such peevish tokens to a king.

(Exeunt Reig., and MAR. Suf. O, wert thou for myself!—But, Suffolk, stay;

Thou mayst not wander in that labyrinth:
There Minotaurs and ugly treasons lurk.
Solicit Henry with her wondrous praise:
Bethink thee on her virtues that surmount,
And natural graces that extinguish art;
Repeat their semblance often on the seas,
That when thou com'st to kneel at Henry's feet Thou mayst bereave him of his wits with wonder.

[Exil.

Scene IV.—Camp of the Duke of York in Anjou.

Enter YORK, WARWICK, and others.

York. Bring forth that sorceress, condemn'd to burn.

Enter LA Pucelle, guarded, and a Shepherd. Shep. Ah, Joan, this kills thy father's heart outright! Have I sought every country far and near, And now it is my chance to find thee out Must I behold thy timeless cruel death?

Ah; Joan, sweet daughter Joan, I'll die with

thee!

Puc. Decrepit miser! base ignoble wretch! I am descended of a gentler blood; Thou art no father nor no friend of mine.

Shep. Out, out!—My lords, an please you, 'tis not so;

I did beget her, all the parish knows: Her mother liveth yet, can testify She was the first fruit of my bachelorship.

Was the institut of my bachelorship.

War. Graceless, wilt thou deny thy parentage?

[been,— York. This argues what her kind of life hath Wicked and vile; and so her death concludes.

Shep. Fie, Joan, that thou wilt be so obstacle!
God knows thou art a collop of my flesh;
And for thy sake have I shed many a tear:

Deny me not, I pr'ythee, gentle Joan.

Puc. Peasant, avaunt!—You have subom'd

this man,
Of purpose to obscure my noble birth.

Shep. 'Tis true, I gave a noble to the priest The morn that I was wedded to her mother. Kneel down and take my blessing, good my girl. Wilt thou not stoop? Now cursed be the time Of thy nativity! I would the milk | breast Thy mother gave thee when thou such dat her Had been a little ratsbane for thy sake! Or else, when thou didst keep my lambs a-field, I wish some ravenous wolf had eaten thee! Dost thou deny thy father, cursed drab? O, burn her, burn her! hanging is too good.

York. Take her away; for she hath liv'd too long,

To fill the world with vicious qualities.

Puc. First let me tell you whom you have condemn'd:

Not me begotten of a shepherd swain, But issu'd from the progeny of kings; Virtuous and holy; chosen from above, By inspiration of celestial grace, To work exceeding miracles on earth. I never had to do with wicked spirits: But you,—that are polluted with your lusts, Stain'd with the guiltless blood of innocents, Corrupt and tainted with a thousand vices,-Because you want the grace that others have, You judge it straight a thing impossible To compass wonders but by help of devils. No, misconceived! Joan of Arc hath been A virgin from her tender infancy, Chaste and immaculate in very thought; Whose meiden blood, thus rigorously effus'd,

Will cry for vengeance at the gates of heaven.

York. Ay, ay:—away with her to execution!

War. And hark ye, sirs; because she is a maid,

Spare for no fagots, let there be enow:
Place barrels of pitch upon the fatal stake,
That so her torture may be shortened.
Puc. Will nothing turn your unrelenting hearts?

Then, Joan, discover thine infirmity,
That warrenteth by law to be thy privilege.—
I am with child, ye bloody homicides:
Murder not, then, the fruit within my womb,
Although ye hale me to a violent death.

SCENE III .- The Plains near Roven.

Enter Charles, the Bastard, Alençon, La Pucelle, and Forces.

Puc. Dismay not, princes, at this accident. Nor grieve that Rouen is so recovered: Care is no cure, but rather corrosive, For things that are not to be remedied. Let frantic Talbot triumph for awhile And like a peacock sweep along his tail; We'll pull his plumes and take away his train, If Dauphin and the rest will be but rul'd.

Char. We have been guided by thee hitherto, And of thy cunning had no diffidence:

One sudden foil shall never breed distrust Bast. Search out thy wit for secret policies, And we will make thee famous through the world.

Alen. We'll set thy statue in some holy place, And have thee reverenc'd like a blessed saint: Employ thee, then, sweet virgin, for our good.

Puc. Then thus it must be; this doth Joan devise:

By fair persuasions, mix'd with sugar'd words, We will entice the Duke of Burgundy To leave the Talbot and to follow us. Ithat, Char. Ay, marry, sweeting, if we could do France were no place for Henry's warriors; Nor should that nation boast it so with us.

But be extirped from our provinces. Alen. For ever should they be expuls'd from · France.

And not have title of an earldom here. Puc. Your bonours shall perceive how I will work

To bring this matter to the wished ena.

Drums heard. Hark! by the sound of drum you may perceive Their powers are marching unto Paris-ward.

An English March. Enter, and pass over at a distance, TALBOT and his Forces.

There goes the Talbot, with his colours spread, And all the troops of English after him.

A French March. Enter the DUKE OF BURGUNDY and his Forces.

Now in the rearward comes the duke and his: Fortune in favour makes him lag bebind. Summon a parley; we will talk with him.

(A parley sounded. Char. A parley with the Duke of Burgundy! Bur. Who craves a parley with the Burgundy? Puc. The princely Charles of France, thy countryman.

Bur. What say'st thou, Charles? for I am marching hence. Char. Speak, Pucelle, and enchant him with thy words. France! Puc. Brave Burgundy, undoubted hope of Stay, let thy humble handmaid speak to thee. Bur. Speak on; but be not over-tedious.

Puc. Look on thy country, look on fertile Hearing of your arrival in this realm,

France. And see the cities and the towns defac'd By wasting ruin of the cruel foel As looks the mother on her lovely babe When death doth close his tender dying eyes, See, see the pining malady of France;

Behold the wounds, the most unnatural wounds Which thou thyself hast given her woeful breast

O, turn thy edged sword another way: Strike those that hurt, and hurt not those that help! One drop of blood drawn from thy country's

Should grieve thee more than streams of foreign gore: Return thee, therefore, with a mood of tears, And wash away thy country's stained spots.

Bur. Either she hath bewitch'd me with her words.

Or nature makes me suddenly relent. Puc. Besides, all French and France ex-claims on thee Doubting thy birth and lawful progeny. Who join'st thou with but with a lordly nation That will not trust thee but for profit's sake? When Talbot hath set footing once in France, And fashion'd thee that instrument of ill. Who then but English Henry will be lord, And thou be thrust out like a fugitive?

Call we to mind, -and mark but this for proof,-Was not the Duke of Orleans thy foe? And was he not in England prisoner? But when they beard he was thine enemy,

They set him free, without his ransom paid, In spite of Burgundy and all his friends. See, then, thou fight'st against thy countrymen, And join'st with them will be thy slaughter-men. Come, come, return; return, thou wand'ring

lord:

Charles and the rest will take thee in their arms. Bur. I am vanquished; these baughty words of hers

Have batter'd me like roaring cannon-shot, And made me almost yield upon my knees. Forgive me, country, and sweet countryment . And, lords, accept this hearty kind embrace: My forces and my power of men are yours:

, farewell, Talbot; I'll no longer trust thee. Puc. Done like a Frenchman,—turn, and turn again! Char. Welcome, brave duke! thy friendship makes us fresb. breasts. Bast. And doth beget new courage in our Alen. Pucelle hath bravely play'd her part in this.

And doth deserve a coronet of gold. Char. Now let us on, my lords, and join our powers: And seek how we may prejudice the foe. Exeunt.

Scene IV .- Paris. A Room in the Palace.

Enter KING HENRY, GLOSTER, and other Lords, VERNON, BASSET, &c. TALBOT and some of his Officers.

Tal. My gracious prince, -and honourable

I have awhile given truce unto my wars, To do my duty to my sovereign: In sign whereof, this arm, -that hatb reclaim'd To your obedience fifty fortresses,

Twelve cities, and seven walled towns of strength.

Of beauteous Margaret hath astonish'd me: Her virtues, graced with external gifts, Do breed love's settled passions in my heart: And like as rigour of tempestuous gusts Provokes the mightiest hulk against the tide, So am I driven, by breath of her renown, Either to suffer shipwreck or arrive
Where I may have fruition of her love.

Where I may have fruition of her love. [tale Suf. Tush, my good lord,—this superficial Is but a preface of her worthy praise:
The chief perfections of that lovely dame,—Had I sufficient skill to utter them,—Would make a volume of enticing lines, Able to ravish any dull conceit:
And, which is more, she is not so divine, So full-replete with choice of all delights, But, with as humble lowliness of mind, She is content to be at your command; Command, I mean, of virtuous chaste intents, To love and honour Henry as her lord.

K. Hen. And otherwise will Henry ne'er pre-

Sume.
Therefore, my lord protector, give consent
That Margaret may be England's royal queen.
Glo. So should I give consent to flatter sin.
You know, my lord, your highness is betroth'd
Unto another lady of esteem:
[tract,
How shall we, then, dispense with that conAnd not deface your honour with reproach?

Suf. As doth a ruler with unlawful eaths; Or one that, at a triumph having vow'd To try his strength, forsaketh yet the lists By reason of his adversary's odds:
A poor earl's daughter is unequal odds, And therefore may be broke without offence.
Glo. Why, what, I pray, is Margaret more than that?

Her father is no better than an earl,
Although in glorious titles he excel.

Suf. Yes, my lord, her father is a king,
The King of Naples and Jerusalem;
And of such great authority in France
As his alliance will confirm our peace,
And keep the Frenchmen in allegiance.

Glo. And so the Earl of Armagnac may do, Because he is uear kinsman unto Charles.

Exe. Beside, his wealth dotl warrant a liberal dower;

While Reignier sooner will receive than give.
Suf. A dower, my lords! disgrace not so your king,

That he should be so abject, base, and poor,
To choose for wealth, and not for perfect love.
Henry is able to enrich his queen,
And not to seek a queen to make him rich:
So worthless peasants bargain for their wives,
As market-men for oxen, sheep, or horse.
Marriage is a matter of more worth
Than to be dealt in by attorneyship;

Not whom we will, but whom his grace affects, Must be companion of his nuptial bed: And therefore, lords, since he affects her most, It most of all these reasons bindeth us In our opinions she should be preferr'd. For what is wedlock forced but a hell, An age of discord and continual strife? Whereas the contrary bringeth bliss, And is a pattern of celestial peace. Whom should we match with Henry, being a king.

king,
But Margaret, that is daughter to a king?
Her peerless feature, joined with her birth,
Approves her fit for none but for a king:
Her valient courage and undaunted spirit,—
More than in women commonly is seen,—
Will answer our hope in issue of a king;
For Henry, son unto a conqueror,
Is likely to beget more conquerors,
If with a lady of so high resolve
As is fair Margaret he be link'd in love. [me
Then yield, my lords; and here conclude with That Margaret shall be queen, and none but she.

K. Hen. Whether it be through force of your report.

My noble Lord of Suffolk, or for that
My tender youth was never yet attaint
With any passion of inflaming love,
I cannot tell; but this I am assur'd,
I feel such sharp dissension in my breast,
Such fierce alarums both of hope and fear,
As I am sick with working of my thoughts.
Take therefore shipping; post, my lord,

France;
Agree to any covenants; and procure
That Lady Margaret do vouchsafe to come
To cross the seas to England, and be crown'd.
King Henry's faithful and anointed queen:
For your expenses and sufficient charge,
Among the people gather up a tenth.
Be gone, I say; for, till you do return,
I rest perplexed with a thousand cares.—
And you, good uncle, banish all offence:
If you do censure me by what you were,
Not what you are, I know it will excuse
This sudden execution of my will.
And so, conduct me where, from company,
I may revolve and ruminate my grief. [Exit.

Glo. Ay, grief, I fear me, both at first and last. [Exeunt Gloster and Exeter. Suf. Thus Suffolk hath prevailed; and thus he goes,

As did the youthful Paris once to Greece,
With hope to find the like event in love,
But prosper better than the Trojan did.
Margaret shall now be queen, and rule the king,
But I will rule both her, the king, and realm.
[Exit.

K. Hen. Is that the worst this letter doth contain?

Glo. It is the worst, and all, my lord, he talk with him. writes.

Suf. Mylord protector, so it please your grace,
Here are the articles of contracted peace
Between our sovereign and the French King

Charles,
For eighteen months concluded by consent.

Glo. [Reads.] Imprimis, It is agreed between The French King Charles and William De-la-Poole, Marquess of Suffolk, ambassador for Henry King of England, that the said Henry shall espouse the Lady Margaret, daughter unto Reignier King of Nables, Sicilia, and Jerusalem; and crown her Queen of England ere the thirtieth of May next ensuing.—Item,—That the duchy of Anjou and the county of Maine shall be released and delivered to the king her father,—K. K. Hen. They please us well.-Lord marquess, kneel down:

We here create thee the first Duke of Suffolk, And girt thee with the sword.—Cousin of York, We here discharge your grace from being regent I' the parts of France, till term of eighteen months

Be full expir'd.—Thanks, uncle Winchester,
'aster, York, Buckingham, Somerset,
-lisbury, and Warwick;

We thank you all for this great favour done, In entertainment to my princely queen. Come, let us in; and with all speed provide To see her coronation be perform'd.

[Exeunt King, Queen, and Suffolk.

Glo. Brave peers of England, pillars of the state,

To you Duke Humphrey must unload his grief,-Your grief, the common grief of all the land. What! did my brother Henry spend his youth, His valour, coin, and people in the wars? Did he so often lodge in open field, In winter's cold and summer's parching heat, To conquer France, his true inheritance? And did my brother Bedford toil his wits Have you yourselves, Somerset, Buckingham, Brave York, Salisbury, and victorious Warwick, Receiv'd deep scars in France and Normandy? Or hath mine uncle Beaufort and myself, With all the learned council of the realm, Studied so long, sat in the council-house Early and late, debating to and fro lawe How France and Frenchmen might be kept in And hath his highness in his infancy Been crown'd in Paris, in despite of foes? And shall these labours and these honours die? Shall Henry's conquest, Bedford's vigilance, Your deeds of war, and all our counsel die? O peers of England, shameful is this leaguel Fatal this marriage! cancelling your fame, Blotting your names from books of memory, Razing the characters of your renown. Defacing monuments of conquer'd France,

Undoing all, as all had never been!

Car. Nephew, what means this passionate discourse,

This peroration with such circumstance?

For France, 'tis ours; and we will keep it still. Glo. Ay, uncle, we will keep it if we can; But now it is impossible we should:
Suffolk, the new-made duke that rules the roast Hath given the duchy of Anjou and Maine Unto the poor King Reignier, whose large style Agrees not with the leanness of his purse.

Sal. Now, by the death of Him that died for all,

These counties were the keys of Normandy:— But wherefore weeps Warwick, my valiant son! War. For grief that they are past recovery: For were there hope to conquer them again My sword should shed hot blood, mine eyes

I never read but England's kings have had Large sums of gold and dowries with their wives; And our King Henry gives away his own, To match with her that brings no vantages.

Glo. A proper jest, and never heard before, That Suffolk should demand a whole fifteenth For costs and charges in transporting her! Lucy. Then God take mercy on brave Talhot's soul:

And on his son, young John, who two hours since

I met in travel toward his warlike father! This seven years did not Talbot see his son: And now they meet where both their lives are done.

York. Alas, what joy shall noble Talbot have To bid his young son welcome to his grave? Awayi vexation almost stops my breath, That sunder'd friends greet in the hour of death.

Lucy, farewell: no more my fortune can, But curse the cause I cannot aid the man. Maine, Blois, Poictiers, and Tours are won away,

'Long all of Somerset and his delay.

[Exit, with Forces.] Lucy. Thus, while the vulture of sedition Feeds in the bosom of such great commanders, Sleeping neglection doth betray to loss The conquest of our scarce-cold conqueror. That ever-living man of memory, Henry the Fifth:-whiles they each other cross, Lives, honours, lands, and all, hurry to loss. [Exit.

SCENE IV .- Other Plains of Gascony.

Enter Somerset, with his Forces; an Officer of Talbot's with him.

Som. It is too late; I cannot send them now: This expedition was by York and Talbot Too rashly plotted; all our general force Might with a sally of the very town Be buckled with: the over-daring Talbot Hath sullied all his gloss of former honour By this unheedful, desperate, wild adventure: York set him on to fight and die in shame, .That, Talbot dead, great York might bear the Off. Here is Sir William Lucy, who with me Set from our o'er-matched forces forth for aid.

Enter SIR WILLIAM LUCY.

Som. How now, Sir William! whither were you sent?

Lucy. Whither, my lord! from bought and sold Lord Talbot;

Who, ring'd about with bold adversity, Cries out for noble York and Somerset, To beat assailing death from his weak legions: And whiles the honourable captain there Drops bloody sweat from his war-wearied limbs.

And, in advantage lingering, looks for rescue, You, his false hopes, the trust of England's honour.

Keep off aloof with worthless emulation. Let not your private discord keep away The levied succours that should lend him aid, While he, renowned noble gentleman, Yields up his life unto a world of odds: Orleans the Bastard, Charles, Burgundy, Alencon, Reignier, compass him about, And Talbot perisheth by your default. Som. York set him on, York should have sent him aid.

Lucy. And York as fast upon your grace exclaims;

Swearing that you withhold his levied horse, Collected for this expedition.

Som. York lies; he might have sent and had the horse;

I owe him little duty and less love:

And take foul scorn to fawn on him by sending. Lucy. The fraud of England, not the force of France,

Hath now entrapp'd the noble-minded Talbot: Never to England shall he bear his life;

But dies betray'd to fortune by your strife. Som. Come, go; I will despatch the horsemen straight:

Within six hours they will be at his aid. Lucy. Too late comes rescue; he is ta'en or slain: For fly he could not, if he would have fled; And fly would Talbot never, though he might. Som. If he be dead, brave Talbot, then, adieu1 Lucy. His fame lives in the world, his shame in you. Exeunt.

Scene V .- The English Camp near Bourdeaux. Enter Talbot and John his Son.

Tal. O young John Telbot! I did send for thee To tutor thee in stratagems of war, That Talbot's name might be in thee reviv'd When sapless age and weak unable limbs Should bring thy father to his drooping chair. But,—O malignent and ill-boding stars!— Now thou art come unto a feast of death, A terrible and unavoided danger: Therefore, dear boy, mount on my swiftest And I'll direct thee how thou shalt escape

By sudden flight: come, dally not, begone.

John. Is my name Talbot? and am I your son?

And shall I fly? O, if you love my mother, Dishonour not her honourable name, To make a bastard and a slave of mel The world will say, he is not Talbot's blood That basely fied when noble Talbot stood.

Tal. Fly to revenge my death, if I be slein. John. He that flies so will ne'er return again. Tcl. If we both stay we both are sure to die. John. Then let me stay; and, father, do you

Your loss is great, so your regard should be; My worth unknown, no loss is known in me. Upon my death the French can little boast; In yours they will, in you all hopes are lost. Flight cannot stain the honour you have won; But mine it will, that no exploit have done; You fied for vantage, every one will swear; But if I bow, they'll say it was for fear. There is no hope that ever I will stay. If the first hour I shrink and run away.

Here, on my knee, I beg mortality, Rather than life preserv'd with infamy. Tal. Shall all thy mother's hopes lie in one John. Ay, rather than I'll shame my mother's Tal. Upon my blessing I command thee go. John. To fight I will, but not to fly the foe.

Tal. Part of thy father may be say'd in thee.

And Humphrey with the peers be fall'n at jars: Then will I raise aloft the milk-white rose, With whose sweets mell the air shall he perfum'd; And in my standard bear the arms of York, To grapple with the house of Lancaster; And, force perforce, I'll make him yield the crown,

Whose bookish rule hath pull'd fair England down. Exit.

Scene II .- London. A Room in the Duke OF GLOSTER'S House.

Enter GLOSTER and the Duchess.

Duch. Why droops my lord, like over-ripen'd corn

Hanging the head at Ceres' plenteous load? Why doth the great Duke Humphrey knit his

As frowning at the favours of the world? Why are thine eyes fix'd to the sullen earth Gazing on that which seems to dim thy sight? What see'st thou there? King Henry's diadem. Enchas'd with all the honours of the world? If so, gaze on, and grovel on thy face Until thy head be circled with the same. Put forth thy hand, reach at the glorious gold:— What, is 't too short? I'll lengthen it with mine; And, having both together heav'd it up, We'll both together lift our heads to heaven; And never more abase our sight so low As to vouchsafe one glance unto the ground. Glo. O Nell, sweet Nell, if thou dost love thy lord. Banish the canker of ambitious thoughts! And may that thought, when I imagine ill Against my king and nephew, virtuous Henry,

Be my last breathing in this mortal world: My troublous dream this night doth make me sad.

Duch. What dream'd my lord? tell me, and I'll requite it

With sweet rehearsal of my morning's dream. Glo. Methought this staff, mine office-badge in court,

Was broke in twain; by whom I have forgot, But, as I think, it was by the cardinal; And on the pieces of the broken wand Were plac'd the heads of Edmund Duke of Somerset,

And William-De-la-Poole, first Duke of Suffolk. This was my dream; what it doth bode God knows. Duch. Tut, this was nothing but an argument That he that breaks a stick of Gloster's grove Shall lose his head for his presumption. But list to me, my Humphrey, my sweet duke: Methought I sat in seat of majesty In the cathedral church of Westminster, And in that chair where kings and queens are crown'd;

Where Henry and Dame Margaret kneel'dio me, And on my head did set the diadem.

Glo. Nay, Eleanor, then must I chide out-Presumptuous dame, ill-nurtur'd Eleanor! Art thou not second woman in the realm, And the protector's wife, belov'd of him?

Hast thou not worldly pleesure at command, Above the reach or compass of thy thought? And wilt thou still be hammering treachery, To tumble down thy husband and thyself From top of honour to disgrace's feet? Away from me, and let me hear no more!

Duch. What, what, my lordl are you so choleric

With Eleanor for telling but her dream? Next time I'll keep my dreams unto myself, And not be check'd.

Glo. Nay, be not angry, I am pleas'd again.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord protector, 'tis his highness' pleasuro

You do prepare to ride unto Saint Albans, Whereas the king and queen do mean to hawk. Glo. I go.—Come, Nell,—thou wilt ride with us?

Duch. Yes, my good lord, I'll follow pre-Exeunt GLOSTER and Messenger. Follow I must; I cannot go before While Gloster bears this base and humble mind. Were I a man, a duke, and next of blood I would remove these tedious stumbling-blocks. And smooth my way upon their headless necks: And, being a woman, I will not be slack To play my part in fortune's pageant.--Where are you there, Sir John? nay, fear not, man,

We are alone; here's none but thee and I.

Enter Hume,

Hume. Jesus preserve your royal majesty! Duch. What say'st thou? majesty! I am but Hume. But, by the grace of God and Hume's

Your grace's title shall be multiplied:

Duch. What say'st thou, man? hast thou as yet conterr'd

With Margery Jourdain, the cunning witch, With Roger Bolingbroke, the conjurer? And will they undertake to do me good?

Hume. This they have promised,—to show your highness

A spirit rais'd from depth of under-ground, That shall make answer to such questions As by your grace shall be propounded him.

Duch. It is enough; I'll think upon the questions:

When from Saint Albans we do make return We'll see these things effected to the full. Here, Hume, take this reward; make merry, man.

With thy confederates in this weighty cause. Exit.

Hume. Hume must make merry with the duchess' gold;

Marry, and shall. But, how now, Sir John

Seal up your lips, and give no words but mum: The business asketh silent secrecy. Dame Eleanor gives gold to bring the witch: Gold cannot come amiss were she a devil.

Yet have I gold flies from another coast:-I dare not say from the rich cardinal, And from the great and new-made Duke of Suffolk;

Yet I do find it so: for, to be plain,

Alarums. Exeunt Soldiers and Servant, leaving the two bodies. Enter CHARLES, ALENCON, BURGUNDY, BASTARD, LA PUCELLE and Forces.

Char. Had York and Somerset brought rescue in,

We should have found a bloody day of this.

Bast. How the young whelp of Talbot's, raging-wood,

Did flesh his puny sword in Frenchmen's blood!

Puc. Once I encounter'd him, and thus I said,

Thou maiden youth, be vanquish'd by a maid:

But, with a proud majestical scorn,

He answer'd thus, Young Talbot was not born

To be the pillage of a giglot wench:

So, rushing in the bowels of the French,

He left me proudly, as unworthy fight.

Bur. Doubtless he would have made a noble knight:—

See where he lies inhersed in the arms

See where he lies inhersed in the arms
Of the most bloody nurser of his harms!
Bast. Hew them to pieces, hack their bones
asunder,

Whose life was England's glory, Gallia's wonder.

Char. O, no; forbearl for that which we have fled

During the life, let us not wrong it dead.

Enter SIR WILLIAM LUCY, attended; a French Herald preceding.

Lucy. Herald,
Conduct me to the Dauphin's tent, to know
Who hath obtain'd the glory of the day, Char. On what submissive message art thou sent?

Lucy. Submission, Dauphin! 'tis a mere French word;

We English warriors wot not what it means. I come to know what prisoners thou hast ta'en, And to survey the bodies of the dead.

Char. For prisoners ask'st thou? hell our prison is.

But tell me whom thou seek'st. [field, Lucy. But where's the great Alcides of the Valiant Lord Talbot, Earl of Shrewsoury,— Created, for his rare success in arms, [ence; Great Earl of Washford; Waterford, and Vallord Talbot of Goodrig and Urchinfield, Lord Strange of Blackmere, Lord Verdun of Alton. [Sheffield, Lord Cromwell of Wingfield, Lord Furnival of That thrice victorious Lord of Falconbridge; Knight of the noble order of Saint George, Worthy Saint Michael, and the Golden Fleece; Great Marshal to Henry the Sixth Of all his wars within the realm of France?

Of all his wars within the realm of France?

Puc. Here is a silly-stately style indeed!

The Turk, that two-and-fifty kingdoms hath,

Writes not so tedious a style as this.—

Him that thou magnifiest with all these titles,

Stinking and fly-blown, lies here at our feet.

Lucy. Is Talbot slain,—the Frenchmen's

only scourge,
Your kingdom's terror and black Nemesis?
O were mine eye-balls into bullets turn'd,
That I, m rage, might shoot them at your faces!
O that I could but call these dead to life!
It were enough to fright the realm of France:
Were but his picture left among you here,

It would amaze the proudest of you all.

Give me their bodies, that I may bear them
hence,

And give them burial as beseems their worth.

Puc. I think this upstart is old Talbot's ghost. He speaks with such a proud commanding spirit. [here, For God's sake, let him have 'em; to keep them

They would but stink, and putrefy the air.

Char. Go, take their bodies hence.

Lucy.

I'll bear them hence:

Lucy. I'll bear them.
But from their ashes shall be rear'd

A phoenix that shall make all France afeard.

Char. So we be rid of them, do with 'em what thou wilt.—

And now to Paris in this conquering vein: All will be ours, now bloody Talbet's slain.

Exeunt.

ACT V.

Scene I.-London. A Room in the Palace.

Enter King Henry, Gloster, and Exeter.

K. Hen. Have you perus'd the letters from the pope,

The emperor, and the Earl of Armagnac?

Glo. I have, my lord: and their intent is this,—

They humbly sue unto your excellence
To have a godly peace concluded of
Between the realms of England and of France.
K. Hen. How doth your grace affect their

K. Hen. How doth your grace sheet their motion? [means Glo. Well, my good lord; and as the only To stop effusion of our Christian blood,

To stop effusion of our Christian blood, And stablish quietness on every side. [thought K. Hen. Ay, marry, uncle; for I always It was both impious and unnatural

That such immanity and bloody strife
Should reign among professors of one faith.

Glo. Beside, my lord, the sooner to effect

And surer bind this knot of amity, The Earl of Armagnac,—near knit to Charles, A man of great authority in France,— Profiers his only daughter to your grace In marriage, with a large and sumptuous dowry.

In marriage, with a large and sumptuous dowry.

K. Hen. Marriage, uncle! alas, my years are young;

And fitter is my study ena my books
Then wanton dalliance with a peramour.
Yet, call the ambassadors; and as you please,
So let them have their answers every one:
I shall be well content with any choice
Tends to God's glory and my country's weal.

Enter a Legate and two Ambassadors, with Winchester, now Cardinal Beaufort, in a Cardinal's habit.

Exe. What! is my Lord of Winchester install'd,

And call'd unto a cardinal's degree?
Then I perceive that will be verified
Henry the Fifth did sometime prophesy,—
If once he come to be a cardinal,

He'll make his cap co-equal with the crown. K. Hen. My lords ambassadors, your several Buck. All in this presence are thy betters, Warwick.

War. Warwick may live to be the hest of all. Sal. Peace, son!—and show some reason, Buckingham, Why Somerset should he preferr'd in this. Q. Mar. Because the king, forsooth, will have it so.

Glo. Madam, the king is old enough himself To give his censure: these are no women's matters. grace

Q. Mar. If he be old enough, what needs your To he protector of his excellence?

Glo. Madam, I am protector of the realm: And, at his pleasure, will resign my place.

Suf. Resign it then, and leave thine insolence. Since thou wert king,—as who is king but thou?-

The commonwealth hath daily run to wreck; The Dauphin hath prevail'd heyond the seas; And all the peers and nobles of the realm Have been as bondmen to thy sovereignty.

Car. The commons hast thou rack'd; the clergy's bags

Are lank and lean with thy extortions. Som. Thy sumptuous buildings and thy wife's attire

Have cost a mass of public treasury. Buck. Thy cruelty in execution Upon offenders hath exceeded law And left thee to the mercy of the law.

Q. Mar. Thy sale of offices and towns in France,

. If they were known, as the suspect is great,-Would make thee quickly hop without thy head.

Exit GLOSTER. The QUEEN drops her fan.

Give me my fan: what, minion! can you not? [Gives the Duchess a box on the ear.

I cry you mercy, madam; was it you?

Duch. Was't I? yea, it was, prond French-

I'd set my ten commandments in your face. K. Hen. Sweet aunt, be quiet; 'twas against in time; her will.

She'll hamper thee, and dandle thee like a haby:

Though in this place most master wear no hreeches,

She shall not strike Dame Eleanor unreveng'd. Exit.

Buck. Lord cardinal, I will follow Eleanor, And listen after Humphrey, how he proceeds: She's tickled now; her fume needs no spurs, She'll gallop fast enough to her destruction.

Re-enter GLOSTER.

Glo. Now, lords, my choler being over-blown With walking once about the quadrangle. I come to talk of commonwealth affairs. As for your spiteful false objections, Prove them, and I lie open to the law: But God in mercy so deal with my soul As I in duty love my king and country! But to the matter that we have in hand:-I say, my sovereign, York is meetest man To be your regent in the realm of France.

Suf. Before we make election, give me leave To show some reason, of no little force, That York is most unmeet of any man. imeet:

York. I'll tell thee, Suffolk, why I am un-First, for I cannot flatter thee in pride; Next, if I be appointed for the place, My Lord of Somerset will keep me here, Without discharge, money, or furniture, Till France he won into the Dauphin's hands: Last time, I danc'd attendance on his will Till Paris was hesieg'd, famish'd, and lost.

Enter Servants of Suffolk, bringing in HORNER and PETER.

Suf. Because here is a man accus' dof treason: Pray God the Duke of York excuse himself! York. Doth any one accuse York for a traitor? K. Hen. What mean'st thou, Suffolk? tell. me, what are these?

Suf. Please it your majesty, this is the man That doth accuse his master of high treason: His words were these,—that Richard Duke of York

Was rightful heir unto the English crown, And that your majesty was an usurper.

K. Hen. Say, man, were these thy words? An't shall please your majesty, I never Hor. said nor thought any such matter: God is my witness, I am falsely accused by the villain.

Pet. By these ten hones, my lords lholding up his hands, he did speak them to me in the garret one night, as we were scouring my Lord of York's armour.

York. Base dunghill villain and mechanical, I'll have thy head for this thy traitor's speech.-I do heseech your royal majesty,

Let him have all the rigour of the law.

Hor. Alas, my lord, hang me if ever I spake 🦈 the words. My accuser is my prentice; and when I did correct him for his fault the other day, he did vow upon his knees he would be even with me: I have good witness of this; Duch. Against her will! good king, look to't | therefore I heseech your majesty, do not cast away an honest man for a villain's accusation.

K. Hen. Uncle, what shall we say to this in law? Glo. This doom, my lord, if I may judge: Let Somerset be regent o'er the French. Because in York this breeds suspicion; And let these have a day appointed them For single comhat in convenient place, For he hath witness of his servant's malice: This is the law, and this Duke Humphrey's doom. . .. Exit.

Suf. See, Reignier, see, thy daughter prisoner!
Reig. To whom?

Suf. To me.

Reig. Suffolk, what remedy? I am a soldier, and unapt to weep

Or to exclaim on fortune's fickleness.

Suf. Yes, there is remedy enough, my lord:
Conseut,—and for thy honour give cousent,—
Thy daughter shall be wedded to my king;
Whom I with pain have woo'd and won thereto;
And this her easy-held imprisonment

Hath gain'd thy daughter princely liberty.

Reig. Speaks Suffolk as he thinks?

Suf.

Fair Margaret knows
That Suffolk doth not fighter, face, or feigu.

Reig. Upon thy princely warrant I descend,
To give thee answer of thy just demand.

Exit REIGNIER from the Walls, Suf. And here I will expect thy coming.

Trumpets sound. Enter REIGNIER below.

Reig. Welcome, brave earl, into our terri-

K. Hen. But what a point, my lord, your falcon made,

And what a pitch she flew above the rest!-To see how God in all his creatures works! Yea, man and birds are fain of climbing high. Suf. No marvel, an it like your majesty,

My lord protector's hawks do tower so well; They know their master loves to be aloft, And bears his thoughts above his falcon's pitch.

Glo. My lord, 'tis but a base ignoble mind That mounts no higher than a bird can soar. Car. I thought as much; he would be above the clouds. Glo. Ay, my lord cardinal,—how think you by Were it not good your grace could fly to heaven?

Aside to GLO. K. Hen. The winds grow high; so do your stomachs, lords.

How irksome is this music to my heart! When such strings jar, what bope of harmony! I pray, my lords, let me compound this strife.

Enter a Townsman of Saint Albans, crying "A Miracle!"

Glo. What means this noise? Fellow, what miracle dost thou proclaim? Towns. A miraclel a miracle!

Suf. Come to the king, and tell him what shrine, miracle.

Towns. Forsooth, a blind man at St. Albans' Within this balf hour hath receiv'd his sight; A man that ne'er saw in his life before. K. Hen. Now, God pe prais'd that to believing souls Gives light in darkness, comfort in despair!

Enter the Mayor of At. Albans and his brethren; and Simpcox, borne between two persons in a chair, his Wife and a multitude following.

Car. Here come the townsmen on procession To present your highness with the man.

K. Hen. Great is his comfort in this earthly

Although by his sight his sin be multiplied. Glo. Stand by, my masters:-bring him near the king:

His highness' pleasure is to talk with him. K. Hen. Good fellow, tell us here the circumstance,

That we for thee may glorify the Lord. What, hast thou been long blind and now restor'd?

Simp. Born blind, an't please your grace. Wife. Ay, indeed, was he.

Suf. What woman is this? Wife. His wife, an't like your worship.

Glo. Hadst thou been his mother, thou couldst have better told.

K. Hen. Where wert thou born? Simp. At Berwick in the north, an't like your grace.

K. Hen. Poor soul, God's goodness hath been great to thee:

Enter CARDINAL BEAUFORT, attended.

Cer. Lord regent, I do greet your excellence With letters of commission from the king. For know, my lords, the states of Christendom, Mor'd with remorse of these cutrageous broils, Have earnestly implored a general peace Berwixt our nation and the aspiring French; And here at hand the Dauphin and his train Approacheth, to confer about some matter.

Fork. Is all our travail turn'd to this effect? After the slaughter of so many peers, So many captains, gentlemen, and soldiers, That in this quarrel have been overthrown, And sold their bodies for their country's benefit, Shall we at last conclude effeminate peace? Have we not lost most part of all the towns, By treason, falsehood, and by treachery, Our great progenitors had conquered?-O Warwick, Warwick! I forsee with grief The utter loss of all the realm of France.
War. Be patient, York: if we conclude a peace, It shall be with such strict and severe cove-As little shall the Frenchmen gain thereby.

Enter Charles, ettended: Alencon, BASTARD, REIGNIEF, and others.

Either accept the title thou usurp'st, Of benefit proceeding from our king, And not of any thailenge of desert, Or we will plague thee with incessant wars.

Reig. My lord, you do not well in obstinacy. To cavil in the course of this contract: If once it be neglected, ten to one We shall not find like opportunity.

Alen. To say the truth, it is your policy To save your subjects from such massacre And ruthless slaughters as are daily seen By our proceeding in hostility; And therefore take this compact of a truce, Although you break it when your pleasure serves. [Aside to CHARLES.

Wer. How say'st thou, Charles? shall our condition stand?

· Char. It shall;

Only reserved, you elsim no interest In any of our towns of garnson.

York. Then swear allegiance to his majesty, As thou art knight, never to dischey Nor be rebellious to the crown of England.-Thou, nor thy nobles, to the crown of England. us here: To-morrow toward London back again, To look into this business thoroughly, And call these foul offenders to their answers; And poise the cause in justice' equal scales, Whose beam stands sure, whose rightful cause prevails. Flourish. Exeunt.

SCENE II .- LONDON. The DUKE OF YORK'S Garden.

Enter YORK, SALISBURY, and WARWICK.

York. Now, my good Lords of Salisbury and Warwick.

Our simple supper ended, give me leave, In this close walk, to satisfy myself, In craving your opinion of my title. Which is infallible, to England's crown. Sal. My lord, I long to hear it at full. War. Sweet York, begin: and if thy claim be good, The Nevils are thy subjects to command.

Then thus:-

Edward the Third, my lords, had seven sons; The first, Edward the Black Prince, Prince of Wales;

The second, William of Hatfield; and the third, Lionel Duke of Clarence; next to whom Was John of Gaunt, the Duke of Lancaster: The fifth was Edmund Langley, Duke of York; The sixth was Thomas of Woodstock, Duke of Gloster;

William of Windsor was the seventh and last. Edward the Black Prince died before his father; And left behind him Richard, his only son, Who, after Edward the Third's death, reign'd as king, Till Henry Bolingbroke, Duke of Lancaster, The eldest son and heir of John of Gaunt, Crown'd by the name of Henry the Fourth, Seiz'd on the realm, depos'd the rightful king, Sent his poor queen to France, from whence sbe came.

And him to Pomfret,-where, as all you know, Harmless Richard was murder'd traitorously. War. Father, the duke hath told the truth;

Thus got the house of Lancaster the crown York. Which now they hold by force, and not by right;

For Richard, the first son's heir, being dead, The issue of the next son should have reign'd. Sal. But William of Hatfield died without an [from whose line

York. The third son, Duke of Clarence,-I claim the crown,—had issue Philippe, a March: daughter, Who married Edmund Mortimer, Earl of

Edmund had issue, Roger Earl of March; Roger had issue, Edmund, Anne, and Eleanor. Sal. This Edmund, in the reign of Boling-broke, As I have read, laid claim unto the crown; And, but for Owen Glendower, had been king, You, madam, for you are more nobly born,

Who kept him in captivity till he died. But, to the rest.

His eldest sister, Anne, York. My mother, being heir unto the crown, Married Richard Earl of Cambridge; who was

To Edmund Langley, Edward the Third's fifth By her I claim the kingdom: she was heir To Roger Earl of March; who was the son Of Edmund Mortimer; who married Philippe, Sole daughter unto Lionel Duke of Clarence: So, if the issue of the elder son Succeed before the younger, I am king.

War. What plain proceedings is more plain than this? Henry doth claim the crown from John of The fourth son; York claims it from the third. Till Lionel's issue fails, his should not reign: It fails not yet, but flourishes in thee. And in thy sons, fair slips of such a stock,-Then, father Salisbury, kneel we together; And in this private plot be we the first That shall salute our rightful sovereign

With honour of his birthright to the crown, Both. Long live our sovereign Richard, England's king!

York. We thank you, lords. But I am not your king stain'd Till I be crown'd, and that my sword be With heart-blood of the house of Lancaster; And that's not suddenly to be perform'd, But with advice and silent secrecy. Do you as I do in these dangerous days: .. Wink at the Duke of Suffolk's insolence At Beaufort's pride, at Somerset's ambition. At Buckingham, and all the crew of them, phrey: 'Tis that they seek; and they, in seeking that, Shall find their deaths, if York can propbesy. Sal. My lord, break we off, we know your Warwick mind at full.

Till they have snar'd the shepherd of the flock,

That virtuous prince, the good Duke Hum-

War. My heart assures me that the Earl of Shall one day make the Duke of York a king. York. And, Nevil, this I do assure myself,-Richard shall live to make the Earl of Warwick The greatest man in England but the king. Exeunt.

SCENE III .- LONDON. A Hall of Justice.

KING HENRY, sounded. Enter Trumpets : QUEEN MARGARET, GLOSTER, YORE, SUF-FOLK, and SALISBURY; the DUCHESS OF GLOSTER, MARGERY JOURDAIN, SOUTH-WELL, HUME, and BOLINGBROKE, under guard.

K. Hen. Stand forth, Dame Eleanor Cobham, Gloster's wife:

In sight of God and us, your guilt is great: Receive the sentence of the law, for sins Such as by God's book are adjudg'd to death. You four, from hence to prison back again; To Jourdain, &c.

From thence unto the place of execution: The witch in Smithfield shall be burn'd to ashes And you three shall be strangled on the gal-

SECOND PART OF KING HENRY VI

The abject people gazing on thy face. With envious looks, laughing at thy shame, That erst did follow thy prond chariot wheels When thou didst ride in triumph through the Bnt, soft! I think she comes; and I'll prepare My tear-stain'd eyes to see her miseries.

Enter the Duchess of Gloster in a white sheet, with papers pinned upon her back, her feet bare, and a taper burning in her hand; SIR JOHN STANLEY, a Sheriff, and Officers.

Serv. So please your grace, we'll take her from the sheriff. Glo. No, stir not for your lives: let her pass Duch. Come you, my lord, to see my open shame? [gaze1 Now thou dost penance too. Look how they See how the giddy multitude do point, [me! And nod their heads, and throw their eyes on Ah, Gloster, hide thee from their hateful looks,

And, in thy closet pent up, rue my shame And han mine enemies,-both mine and thine! Glo. Be patient, gentle Nell; forget this grief. Duch. Ah, Gloster, teach me to forget myself! For whilst I think I am thy married wife And thou a prince, protector of this land, Methinks I should not thus he led along, Mail'd up in shame, with papers on my back, And follow'd with a rabble that rejoice To see my tears and hear my deep-fet groans. The ruthless flint doth cut my tender feet; And when I start the envious people laugh, And hid me be advised how I tread. Ah, Humphrey, can I hear this shameful yoke? Trow'st thou that e'er I'll look upon the world, Or count them happy that enjoy the sun? No; dark shall he my light and night my day; To think upon my pomp shall be my hell. Sometime I'll say, I am Duke Humphrey's wife, And he a prince, and ruler of the land: Yet so he rol'd, and such a prince he was

To every idle rascal follower. But he thou mild, and hlush not at my shame; Nor stir at nothing, till the axe of death Hang over thee as sure it shortly will;

As he stood hy whilst I, his forlorn duchess,

Was made a wonder and a pointing-stock

For Suffolk,—he that can do all in all With her that hateth thee and hates us all, And York, and impious Beaufort, that false priest,

Have all lim'd hushes to betray thy wings, And, fly thou how thou canst, they'll tangle thee But fear not thou, until thy foot he snar'd. Nor never seek prevention of thy foes. [awry Glo. Ah, Nell, forhearl thou aimest all I must offend before I he attainted: And had I twenty times so many foes, And each of them had twenty times their power, All these could not procure me any scathe, So long as I am loyal, true, and crimeless. Wouldsthavemerescuetheefromthisreproach? Why, yet thy scandal were not wip'd away, But in danger for the breach of law. Thy greatest help is quiet, gentle Nell: I pray thee, sort thy heart to patience;

Enter o Herald.

Her. I summon your grace to his majesty's Parliament, holden at Bury the first of this next month.

Glo. And my consent ne'er ask'd herein This is close dealing.-Well, I will be there.

Exit Herald.

My Nell, I take my leave:—and, master sheriff, Let not her penance exceed the king's commission. [mission stays:

Sher. An't please your grace, here my com-And Sir John Stanley is appointed now

To take her with him to the Isle of Man. [here? Glo. Must you, Sir John, protect my lady Stan. So am I given in charge, may't please your grace.

Glo. Entreat her not the worse in that I pray You use her well: the world may laugh again: And I may live to do you kindness, if You do it her: and so, Sir John, farewell. Duch. What, gone, my lord, and bid me not farewell!

Glo. Witness my tears, I cannot stay to speak. Exeunt GLOSTER and Servants.

Duch. Art thou gone too? all comfort go with thee!

For none abides with me: my joy is death, Death, at whose name I oft have been afeard, Because I wish'd this world's eternity. Stanley, I pr'ythee go, and take me hence; I care not whither, for I heg no favour,

Only convey me where thou art commanded. Stan. Why, madam, that is to the-Isle of Man; There to be us'd according to your state. Duch. That's had enough, for I am but re-roach,-And shall I, then, be us'd reproachfully?

Stan. Like to a duchess and Duke Humphrey's lady; According to that state you shall be us'd.

Duch. Sheriff, farewell, and better than I fare.

Although thou hast been conduct of my shame. Sher. It is my office; and, madam, pardon me. Duch. Ay, ay, farewell; thy office is discharg'd.

Come, Stanley, shall we go? this sheet Stan. Madam, your penance done, throw off

And go we to attire you for our journey.

Duch. My shame will not be shifted with my. sheet:

No, it will hang upon my richest robes, And show itself, attire me how I can. Go, lead the way; I long to see my prison. Exeunt.

ACT III.

Scene I .- The Abbey at Bury.

the Parliament KING Flourish. Enter to CARDINAL QUEEN MARGARET, HENRY. BUCKING BEAUFORT, SUFFOLK, YORK, HAM, and others.

R. Hen. I muse my Lord of Gloster is not come:

These few days' wonder will be quickly worn. I'Tis not his wont to be the hindmost man,

She should have stay'd in France, and stary'd in France.

Before Thot: Car. My Lord of Gloster, now you grow too It was the pleasure of my lord the king. Glo. My Lord of Winchester, I know your mind:

'Tis not my speeches that you do mislike. But 'ds my presence that doth trouble ye. Rancour will out: proud prelate, in thy face I see thy fury: if I longer stay We shall begin our ancient hickerings .-Lordings, farewell; and say, when I am gone, I prophesied France will he lost ere long.

Car. So, there goes our protector in a rage. 'Tis known to you he is mine enemy; Nay, more, an enemy unto you all, And no great friend, I fear me, to the king. Consider, lords, he is the next of blood. And heir-apparent to the English crown: Had Henry got an empire by his marriage, And all the wealthy kingdoms of the west, There's reason he should be displeas'd at it. Look to it, lords; let not his smoothing words Bewitch your hearts; be wise and circumspect. What though the common people favour him, Calling him-Humphrey, the good Duke of Gloster; [voice Clapping their hands, and crying with loud Jesu mointain your royal excellence! . With God preserve the good Duke Humphrey! I fear me, lords, for all this flattering gloss, He will be found a dangerous protector.

Buck. Why should he then protect our sovereign,

He being of age to govern of himself?-Cousin of Somerset, join you with me, And altogether, with the Duke of Suffolk, We'll quickly hoise Duke Humphrey from his idelay; seat.

Car. This weighty business will not brook I'll to the Duke of Suffolk presently. [Exil. Som. Consin of Buckingham, though Humphrey's pride And greatness of his place be grief to us, Yet let us watch the haughty cardinal: His insolence is more intolerable

Than all the princes in the land beside: If Gloster he displac'd, he'll he protector.

Buck. Or thon or I, Somerset, will he protector

Despite Dake Humphrey or the cardinal. Exeunt Buckingham and Somerset. Sal. Pride went before, ambition follows him.

Whiles these do labour for their own preferment, Behoves it us to labour for the realm. I never saw hut Humphrey Duke of Gloster Did hear him like a noble gentleman. Oft have I seen the haughty cardinal, More like a soldier than a man o' the church, As stout and proud as he were lord of all, Swear like a ruffian, and demean himself Unlike the ruler of a commonweal. Warwick, my son, the comfort of my age! Thy deeds, thy plainness, and thy housekeeping, Hath won the greatest favour of the commons, To pry into the secrets of the state;

Excepting none but good Duke Humphrey:-And, brother York, thy acts in Ireland, In bringing them to civil discipline; Thy late exploits done in the heart of France, When thou wert regent for our sovereign, Have made thee fear'd and honour'd of the people:-

Join we together for the public good In what we can, to bridle and suppress The pride of Suffolk and the cardinal, With Somerset's and Buckingham's amhition; And, as we may, cherish Duke Humphrey's deeds

While they do tend the profit of the land. War. So God help Warwick, as he loves the

And common profit of his country! York. And so says York, for he hath greatest Sol. Then let's make haste away and look unto the main.

War. Unto the main! O father, Maine is That Main which by main force Warwick did

And would have kept so long as breath did Main chance, father, you meant; hut I meant Maine,-

Which I will win from France, or else be slein.

[Exeunt WARWICK and SALISBURY.

York. Anjou and Maine are given to the French;

Paris is lost; the state of Normandy Stands on a tickle point, now they are gone: Suffolk concluded on the articles; The peers agreed; and Henry was well pleas'd To change two dukedoms for a duke's fair daughter. I cannot blame them all: what is 't to them? 'Tis thine they give away, and not their own. Pirates may make cheap pennyworths of their pillage, And purchase friends, and give to courtezans, Still revelling like lords till all he gone; While as the silly owner of the goods Weeps over them, and wrings his hapless hands, And shakes his head, and trembling stands aloof, While all is shar'd, and all is horne away, Ready to starve, and dare not touch his own: So York must sit, and fret, and bite his tongue, While his own lands are hargain'd for and sold. Methinks the realms of England, France, and Ireland

Bear that proportion to my fiesh and blood As did the fatal brand of Althaea hurn'd Unto the prince's heart of Calydon. Anjou and Maine both given unto the French! Cold news for me; for I had hope of France, Even as I have of fertile England's soil. A day will come when York shall claim his own; And therefore I will take the Nevils' parts, And make a show of love to proud Duke

Humphrey, And, when I spy advantage, claim the crown, For that's the golden mark I seek to hit: Nor shall proud Lancaster usurp my right, Nor hold the sceptre in his childish fist, Nor wear the diadem upon his head, Whose church-like humours fit not for a crown. Then, York, be still awhile, till time do serve: Watch thou and wake, when others he asleep,

Glo. Why, 'tis well known that, whiles I was protector,

Pity was all the fault that was in me;
For I should melt at an offender's tears,
And lowly words were ransom for their fault.
Unless it were a bloody murderer, [gers,
Or foul felonious thief that fleec'd poor passenI never gave them condign punishment:
Murder, indeed, that bloody sin, I tortur'd
Above the felon or what trespass else.

Suf. My lord, these faults are easy, quickly

answer'd:

But mightier crimes are laid unto your charge, Whereof you cannot easily purge yourself. I do arrest you in his highness' name; And here commit you to my lord cardinal To keep, until your further time of trial. [hope

K. Hen. My Lord of Gloster, 'tis my special That you will clear yourself from all suspect: My conscience tells me you are innocent. [ous!

Glo. Ah, gracious lord, these days are danger-Virtue is chok'd with foul ambition, And charity chas'd hence by rencour's hand; Foul subornation is predominant, And equity exil'd your highness' land. I know their complot is to have my life; And if my death might make this island happy, And prove the period of their tyranny, I would expend it with all willingness: But mine is made the prologue to their play; For thousands more, that yet suspect no peril, Will not conclude their plotted tragedy. Beaufort's red sparkling eyes blab his heart's malice And Suffolk's cloudy brow his stormy hate; Sharp Buckingham unburdens with his tongue The envious load that lies upon his heart; And dogged York, that reaches at the moon Whose overweening arm I have pluck'd back, By false accuse doth level at my life:-And you, my sovereign lady, with the rest, Causeless have laid disgraces on my head, And with your best endeavour have stirr'd up My liefest liege to be mine enemy:-Ay, all of you have laid your heads together,-. Myself had notice of your conventicles, And all to make away my guiltless life. I shall not want false witness to condemn me. Nor store of treasons to augment my guilt: The ancient proverb will be well effected,-A staff is quickly found to beat a dog.

Car. My liege, his railing is intolerable:
If those that care to keep your royal person
From treason's secret knife and traitors' rage
Be thus upbraided, chid, and rated at,
And the offender granted scope of speech,
'Twill make them cool in zeal unto your grace.

Suf. Hath he not twit our sovereign lady here

With ignominious words, though clerkly couch'd,
As if she had suborned some to swear,
False allegations to o'erthrow his state?

Q. Mar. But I can give the loser leave to chide. [deed;—

Glo. Far truer spoke than meant: I lose, in-Beshrew the winners, for they play'd me falsel And well such losers may have leave to speak. Buck. He'll wrest the sense, and hold us here all day:—

Lord cardinal, he is your prisoner.

Car. Sirs, take away the duke, and guard him sure.

Glo. Ah, thus King Henry throws away his crutch Before his legs be firm to bear his body!

Thus is the shepherd beaten from thy side, And wolves are gnarling who shall gnaw thee first.

Ah, that my fear were false! ah, that it were! For, good King Henry, thy decay I fear.

[Exeunt Attendants with GLOSTER.
K. Hen. My lords, what to your wisdoms seemeth best

Do or undo, as if ourself were here.

Q. Mar. What, will your highness leave the Parliament? [with grief, K. Hen. Ay, Margaret; my heart is drown'd Whose flood begins to flow within mine eyes; My body round engirt with misery,—

For what's more miserable than discontent?—Ah, uncle Humphrey, in thy face I see

The map of honour, truth, and loyalty!
And yet, good Humphrey, is the hour to come
That e'er I prov'd thee false or fear'd thy faith.
What lowering star now envies thy estate,
That these great lords, and Margaret our queen.
Do seek subversion of thy harmless life?
Thou never didst them wrong, nor no man

wrong:
And as the butcher takes away the calf,
And binds the wretch, and beats it when it strays,
Bearing it to the bloody salughter-house;
Evenso, remorseless, have they borne him hence:
And as the dam runs lowing up and down,
Looking the way her harmless young one went,
And can do nought but wail her darling's loss;
Even so myself bewails good Gloster's case
With sad unhelpful tears; and with dimm'd eyes
Look after him, and cannot do him good,—
So mighty are his vowed enemies.
His fortunes I will weep; and 'twixt each groan,
Say, Who's a traitor? Gloster he is none. [Exil.

Q. Mar. Free lords, cold snow melts with the sun's hot beams.

Henry my lord is cold in great affairs,

Too full of foolish pity: and Gloster's show Beguiles him, as the mournful crocodile With sorrow snares relenting passengers; Or as the snake, roll'd in a flowering bank, With shining checker'd slough, doth sting a child,

That for the beauty thinks it excellent.
Believe me lords, were none more wise than I,—
And yet herein I judge my own wit good,—
This Gloster should be quickly rid the world,
To rid us from the fear we have of him.

Car. That he should die is worthy policy; But yet we want a colour for his death:

'Tis meet he be condemn'd by course of law. Suf. But, in my mind, that were no policy:
The king will labour still to save his life;
The commons haply rise to save his life;
And yet we have but trivial argument,
Morethanmistrust, that shows him worthy death.

York. So that, by this, you would not have him die.

Suf. Ah, York, no man alive so fain as Il York. 'Tis York that hath more reason for his death.— (Suffolk,—But, my lord cardinal, and you, my Lord of

They, knowing Dame Eleanor's aspiring hum-

Have hired me to undermine the duchess. And buzz these conjurations in her hrain. They say, -- A crafty knave does need no broker; Yet am I Suffolk and the cardinal's broker. Hume, if you take not heed, you shall go near To call them both a pair of crafty knaves. Well, so it stands; and thus, I fear, at last Hume's knavery will be the dnchess' wreck. And her attainture will be Humphrey's fall: Sort how it will, I shall bave gold for all.

Scene III .- LONDON. A Room in the Palace. Enter PETER and other Petitioners.

r Pet. My masters, let's stand close: my lord protector will come this way by and by, and then we may deliver our supplications in the quill.

2 Pet. Marry, the Lord protect him, for he's a good man! Jesu bless him!

I Pet. Here 'a comes, methinks, and the queen with him. I'll be the first, sure. Enter Suffolk and Queen MARGARET.

2 Pet. Come back, fool; this is the Duke of Suffolk, and not my lord protector.

Suf. How now, fellow! wouldst anything with me? I Pet. I pray, my lord, pardon me; I took ye for my lord protector. Q. Mar. [Glancing at the superscriptions.] To my Lord Protector! Are your supplications to his lordship? Let me see them:-what is thine? r Pet. Mine is, an't please your grace, against John Goodman, my lord cardinal's man, for keeping my house, and lands, and wife and all, from me. Suf. Thy wife too! that is some wrong indeed.—What's yours?—What's here! [Reads.] Against the Duke of Suffolk, for enclosing the commons of Melford .- How now, sir knave! 2 Pet. Alas, sir, I am but a poor petitioner of our whole township.

Peter. [Presenting his fetition.] Against my aster, Thomas Horner, for saying that the Duke of York was rightful heir to the crown.

O. Mar. What say'st thou? did the Duke of York say be was rightful heir to the crown?

Peter. That my master was? no, forsooth: my master said that he was; and that the king was an usurper.

Suf. Who is there? [Enter Servants.]-Take this fellow in, and send for his master with a pursuivant presently:--we'll hear more of your matter hefore the king.

Exeunt Servants with PETER. O. Mar. And as for you, that love to be protected

Under the wings of our protector's grace, Begin your suits anew, and sue to him.

Tears the petitions. Away, hase cullions!-Suffolk, let them go.

All. Come, let's he gone. Excunt Petitioners. Q. Mar. My lord of Suffolk, say, is this the guise, Is this the fashion in the court of England? Is this the government of Britain's isle,

What, shall King Henry be a pupil still, Under the surly Gloster's governance? Am I a queen in title and in style, And must be made a subject to a duke? I tell thee, Poole, when in the city Tours Thon rann'st a tilt in honour of my love, And stol'st away the ladies' hearts of France, I thought King Henry had resembled thee In courage, courtship, and proportion: But all his mind is bent on holiness, To number Ave-Maries on his beads: His champions are, the prophets and apostles; His weapons, holy saws of sacred writ; His study is his tilt-yard, and his loves Are brazen images of canoniz'd saints. I would the college of the cardinals Would choose him pope, and carry him to

And this the royalty of Albion's king?

Rome, And set the triple crown upon his head:— That were a state fit for his holiness.

Suf. Madam, be patient: as I was cause Your highness came to England, so will I In England work your grace's full content.

Q. Mar. Beside the haughty protector, have we Beaufort The imperious churchman, Somerset, Bucking-And grumbling York; and not the least of these But can do more in England than the king.

Suf. And he of these that can do most of all Cannot do more in England than the Nevils: Salisbury and Warwick are no simple peers.

Q. Mar. Not all these lords do vex me half so much

As that proud dame, the lord protector's wife. She sweeps it through the court with troops of ladies. (wife:

More like an empress than Duke Humphrey's Strangers in court do take her for the queen: She bears a duke's revenues on her back, And in her heart she scorns our poverty: Shall I not live to be aveng'd on her? Contemptuous base-born callet as she is, She vaunted 'mongst ber minions t' other day The very train of her worst wearing gown Was better worth than all my father's lands, Till Suffolk gave two dukedoms for his daughter.

Suf. Madam, myself have lim'd a bush for. her.

And plac'd a quire of such enticing birds That she will light to listen to the lays, And never mount to trouble you again. So, let her rest: and, madam, list to me; For I am hold to counsel you in this. Although we fancy not the cardinal, Yet must we join with him and with the lords, Till we have brought Duke Humphrey in dis-

As for the Duke of York,—this late complaint Will make but little for his benefit. So, one by one, we'll weed them all at last, And you yourself shall steer the happy helm.

Enter King Henry, York, and Somerset;
Duke and Duchess of Gloster, Cardinal Beaufort, Buckingham, Salis-DINAL BEAUFORT, BUCKINGHAM, BURY, and WARWICK.

K. Hen. For my part, noble lords, I care not which:

Or Somerset or York, all's one to me.

And fought so long till that his thighs with darts Were almost like a sharp-quill'd porpentine; And in the end being rescu'd, I have seen him Caper upright like a wild Morisco, Shaking the bloody darts as he his belis. Full often, like a shag-hair'd crafty kern, Hath he conversed with the enemy, And, undiscovered, come to me again. And given me notice of their villanies. This devil here shall be my substitute; For that John Mortimer, which now is dead, In face, in gait, in speech, he doth resemble: By this I shall perceive the commons' mind, How they affect the house and claim of York. Say he be taken, rack'd, and tortured, I know no pain they can inflict upon him Will make him say I mov'd him to those arms. Say that he thrive,—as 'tis great like he will,-Why, then from Ireland come I with mystrength, And reap the harvest which that rascal sow'd; For Humphrey being dead, as he shall he And Henry put apart, the next for me.

Scene II.—Bury. A Room in the Palace.

Enter certain Murderers, hastily.

r Mur. Run to my Lord of Suffolk; let him

know
We have despatch'd the duke, as he commanded.
2 Mur. O that it were to dol—What have we done?

Didst ever hear a man so penitent?

1 Mur. Here comes my lord.

Enter Suffolk.

Suf. Now, sirs, have you despatch'd this thing?

1 Mur. Ay, my good lord, he's dead-Suf. Why, that's well said. Go, get you to my house;

I will reward you for this venturous deed.
The king and all the peers are here at hand:—
He you laid fair the bed? are all things well,
According as I gave directions?

According as I gave directions?

1 Mur. 'Tis, my good lord.

Suf. Away! be gone. [Exeunt Murderers,

Trumpels sounded. Enter KING HENRY, QUEEN MARGARET, CARDINAL BEAUFORT, SOMEPSET, Lords, and others.

K. Hen. Go, call our uncle to our presence straight;
Say we intend to try his grace to-day,
If he be guilty, as 'tis published.
Suf. I'll call him presently, my noble lord.

K. Hen. Lords, take your places; and, I pray you all,
Proceed no straiter 'gainst our uncle Gloster Than from true evidence, of good esteem,

He he approv'd in practice culpable.

Q. Mar. God forbid any malice should prevail

That fauitless may condemn a nobleman!
Pray God he may acquit him of suspicion!
K. Hen. I thank thee, Margaret; these words content me much.—

Re-enter Suffolk.

How now! why look'st thou pale? why tremhlest thou? [Suffolk? Where is our uncle? what's the matter, Suf. Dead in his hed, my lord; Gloster is dead.

Q. Mar. Marry, God forfend! [to-night Car. God's secret judgment:—I did dream The duke was dumh, and could not speak a word. [The King swoons.

Q. Mar. How fares my lord?—Help, lords!
the king is dead. [nose.

Som. Rear up his body; wring him by the Q. Mar. Run, go, help, help!—O Henry, ope thine eyes! [patient. Suf. He doth revive again:—madam, be

Q. Mar. How fares my gracious lord? Suf. Comfort, my sovereign! gracious Henry, comfort! | fort me?

K. Hen. O heavenly God!

K. Hen. What, doth my Lord of Suffolk com-Came he right now to sing a raven's note, Whose dismal tune bereft my vital powers; And thinks he that the chirping of a wren, By crying comfort from a hollow breast, Can chase away the first conceived sound? Hide not thy poison with such sugar'd words: Lay not thy hands on me; forhear, I say; Their touch affrights me, as a serpent's sting.

Thou baleful messenger, out of my sight!
Upon thy eye-halls murderous tyranny
Sits in grim majesty, to fright the worldLook not upon me, for thine eyes are wounding:—

Yet do not go away:—come, basilisk,
And kill the innocent gazer with thy sight;
For in the shade of death I shall find joy,—
In life but double death, now Gloster's dead.
Q. Mar. Why do you rate my Lord of Suffolk thus?

Although the duke was enemy to him,
Yet he, most Christian-like laments his death:
And for myself,—foe as he was to me,—
Might liquid tears, or heart-offending groans,
Or blood-consuming sighs recall his life,
I would be blind with weeping, sick with groans,
Look pale as primrose with hlood-drinking sighs,
And all to have the noble duke alive.
What know I how the world may deem of me?
For it is known we were but hollow friends:
It may be judg'd I made the duke away;
So shall my name with slander's tongue be wounded,

And princes' courts be fill'd with my reprozen.
This get I hy his death: ah me; unhappy!
To he a queen and crown'd with infamy!

K. Hen. Ah, woe is me for Gloster, wretched man! [he is.

Q. Mar. Be woe for me, more wretched than the deet then turn away, and hide the face?]

What, dost thou turn away, and hide thy face? I am no loathsome leper,—look on me. What, art thou, like the adder, waxen deaf? Be poisonous too, and kill thy forlorn queen. Is all thy comfort shut in Gloster's tomb? Why, then, Dame Margaret was ne'er thy joy: Erect his statua, and worship it, And make my image but an alehouse sign. Was I for this nigh wreck'd upon the sea,

K. Hen. Then be it so .-- My Lord of Somerset,

We make your grace regent over the French. Som. I humbly thank your royal majesty. Hor. And I accept the combat willingly.

Pet. Alas, my lord, I cannot fight; for God's sake, pity my case! the spite of man prevaileth against nie. O Lord, have mercy upon me! I shall never be able to fight a blow: O Lord, my heart! lhang'd.

Glo. Sirrah, or you must fight, or else be K. Hen. Away with them to prison; and the day month.-Of combat shall be the last of the next Come, Somerset, we'll see thee sent away.

Flourish. Exeunt.

Scene IV .- The same. The DUKE OF GLOSTER'S Garden.

Enter MARGERY JOURDAIN, HUME, SOUTH-WELL, and BOLINGBROKE.

Hume. Come, my masters; the duchess. I tell yon, expects performance of your promises. Boling. Master Hume, we are therefore provided: will her ladyship behold and hear our exorcisms?

·Hume. Ay, what else? fear you not her courage.

Boling. I have heard her reported to be a woman of an invincible spirit: but it shall be convenient, Master Hume, that you be by her aloft, while we be busy below; and so, I pray you, go in God's name, and leave us. [Exit HUME.] Mother Jourdain, be you prostrate, and grovel on the earth;—John Southwell, read you:-and let us to our work.

Enter Duchess above, and presently Hume.

Duch. Well said, my masters; and welcome

To this gear, -the sooner the better. Boling. Patience, good lady; wizards know their times: Deep night, dark night, the silent of the might, The time of night when Troy was set on fire; The time when screech-owls cry, and ban-dogs howl, And spirits walk, and ghosts break up their graves

That time best fits the work we have in hand. Madam, sit yon, and fear not: whom we raise We will make fast within a hallow'd verge.

[Here they perform the ceremonies appertaining, and make the circle; BOLINGBROKE or SOUTHWELL reads, "Conjuro te," &c.

It thunders and lightens terribly; then the Spirit riseth.

Spir. Adsum.

M. Jourd. Asmath.

By the eternal God, whose name and power Thou tremblest at, answer that I shall ask; For, till thon speak, thou shalt not pass from hence. and done! Spir. Ask what thou wilt: that I had said Boling. First of the king: what shall of him become? Reading out of a paper. Spir. The duke yet lives that Henry shall depose; But him outlive, and die a violent death. (As the Spirit speaks, Southwell writes the answers.

Boling. What fates await the Duke of Suffolk? Spir. By water shall he die and take his end. Boling. What shall befall the Duke of Somerset?

Spir. Let him shun castles; Safer shall he be upon the sandy plains Than where castles mounted stand.-Have done, for more I hardly can endure.

Boling. Descend to darkness and the burning lakwe!

False fiend, avoid!

[Thunder and lightning, Spirit descends.

Enter YORK and BUCKINGHAM hastily, with their Guards and others.

York. Lay hands upon these traitors and their trash .-

Beldam. I think we watch'd you at an inch .-What, madam, are you there? the king and commonweal

Are deeply indebted for this piece of pains: My lord protedtor will, I doubt it not,

See you well guerdon'd for these good deserts.

Duch. Not half so bad as thine to England's king,

Injurious duke, that threatest where's no canse,

Buck. True, madam, none at all:—what call you this? [Showing her the papers. Away with them! let them be clapp'd up close, And kept asunder .- You, madam, shall with Stafford, take her to thee .-We'll see your trinkets here all forthcoming .-All, away!

(Exeunt, above, Duchess and Hume, guarded, below, South., BOLIN ..

&c., guarded. York. Lord Buckingham, methinks you watch'd her well:

A pretty plot, well chosen to build upon! Now, pray, my lord, let's see the devil's writ. What have we here? The duke yet lives that Henry shall depose. But him outlive, and die a violent death.

Why, this is just, Aio, te, Æacida, Romanos vincere posse-

Well, to the rest: Tell me what fate awaits the Duke of Suffolk? By water shall he die and take his end. What shall betide the Duke of Somerset?

Let him shun castles; Safer shall he be upon the sandy plains Than where castles mounted stand.

Come, come, my lords;

These oracles are hardly attain'd, [Albans. And hardly understood. The king is now in progress toward Saint With him the husband of this lovely lady:

Thither go these news, as fast as horse can carry them,-

A sorry breakfast for my lord protector. Buck Your grace shall give me leave, my Lord of York, To he the post, in hope of his reward.

York. At your pleasure, my good lord .-Who's within there, ho!

Who finds the partridge in the puttock's nest, But may imagine how the bird was dead, Although the kite soar with unbloodied beak? Even so suspicious is this tragedy.

Q. Mar. Are you the butcher, Suffolk? where's your knife?

Is Beaufort termed a kite?—where are his talons?

Suf. I wear no knife to slaughter sleeping men;

But here's avengeful sword, rusted with ease, That shall be scoured in his rancourous heart That slanders me with murder's crimson badge:—

Say, if thou dar'st, proud Lord of Warwickshire, That I am faulty in Duke Humphrey's death.

[Exeunt CAR., SOM., and others. War. What deres not Warwick, if false Suffolk dare him?

Q. Mar. He dares not calm his contumelious spirit,

Nor cease to be an arrogant controller, Though Suffolk dare him twenty thousand times.

War. Madam, be still,—with reverence may I say;

For every word you speak in his behalf Is slander to your royal dignity.

Suf. Blunt-witted lord, ignoble in demeanour!
If ever lady wrong'd her lord so much,
Thy mother took into her blameful hed
Some stern untutor'd churl, and noble stock
Was graft with crab-tree slip; whose fruit thou

And never of the Nevils' noble race. [thee, War. But that the guilt of murder bucklers And I should rob the deathsman of his fee, Quitting thee thereby of ten thousand shames, And that my sovereign's presence makes me mild.

I would, false murderous coward, on thy knee Make thee beg pardon for thy passed speech, And say it was thy mother that thou meant'st, That thou thyself was born in bastardy; And, after all this fearful homage done, Give thee thy hire, and send thy soul to hell, Pernicious blood-sucker of sleeping men!

Suf. Thou shalt be waking while I shed thy blood.

If from this presence thou dar'st go with me.

War. Away even now, or I will drag thee
hence:

Unworthy though thou art, I'll cope with thee, And do some service to Duke Humphrey's ghost.

[Exeunt SUFFOLK and WARWICK. K. Hen. What stronger breastplate than a heart untainted!

Thrice is he armed that hath his quarrel just;
And he but naked, though lock's up in steel,
Whose conscience with injustice is corrupted.
[A noise within.

Q. Mar. What noise is his?

Re-enter Suffolk and WARWICK, with their weapons drawn.

K. Hen. Why, how now, lords! your wrathful weapons drawn
Here in our presence! dare you be so bold?—
Why, what tumultous clamour have we here?

But when I swear, it is irrevocable.—
If after three days' space thou here be'st four
On any ground that I am ruler of,
Why, what tumultous clamour have we here?
The world shall not be ransom for thy life.

Suf. The traitorous Warwick, with the men of Bury,

Set all upon me, mighty sovereign.
Sal. [To the Commons at the door.] Sirs, died:

stand apart; the king shall know your mind.— [He comes forward. Dread lord, the commons send you word by me, Unless false Suffolk straight be done to death, Or banished fair England's territories, They will by violence tear him from your palace, And torture him with grievous lingering death. They say, by him the good Duke Humphrey

They say, in him they fear your highness' death; And mere instinct of love and loyalty,—Free from a stubborn opposite intent,
As being thought to contradict your liking,—Makes them thus forward in his banishment.
They say, in care of your most royal person,
That if your highness should intend to sleep,
And charge that no man should disturb your

In pain of your dislike, or pain of death;
Yet, notwithstanding such a strait edict,
Were there a serpent seen, with forked tongue,
That slily glided towrds your majesty,
It were but necessary you were wak'd;
Lest, being suffered in that harmful slnmber,
The mortal worm might make the sleep eter-

And therefore do they cry, though you forbid, That they will guard you, whe'r you will or no, From such fell serpents as false Suffolk is; With whose envenomed and fatal sting Your loving uncle, twenty times his worth, They say, is shamefully bereft of life.

Commons. [Within.] An answer from the king, my Lord of Salisbury!

Suf 'Tis like the commons rude unrolish'd

Suf. 'Tis like the commons, rude uncolish'd hinds,

Could send such message to their sovereign:
But you, my lord, were glad to be employ'd,
To show how quaint an orator you are:
But all the honour Salisbury hath won
Is, that he was the lord ambassador
Sent from a sort of tinkers to the king.

Commons. [Within.] An answer from the king, or we will all break in!

K. Hen. Go, Salisbury, and tell them all from me,

I thank them for their tender loving care;
And had I not been cited so by them,
Yet did I purpose as they do entreat;
For, sure, my thoughts do hourly prophesy
Mischance unto my state by Suffolk's means:
And therefore,—by His majesty I swear,
Whose far unworthy depnty I am,—
He shall not breathe infection in this air
But three days longer, on the pain of death.
[Exit Salisbury.

Q. Mar. O Henry, let me plead for gentle Suffolk! [Suffolk! K. Hen. Ungentle queen, to call him gentle

K. Hen. Ungentle queen, to call him gentle No more, I say: if thou dost plead for him, Thou wilt but add increase unto my wrath. Had I but said, I would have kept my word; But when I swear, it is irrevocable.—
If after three days' space thou here be'st found On any ground that I am ruler of,

Q. Mar. Tell me, good fellow, cam'st thou here by chance.

Or of devotion, to this holy shrine? call'd Simp. God knows, of pure devotion; being A hundred times and oftener, in my sleep, By good Saint Alban; who said, Simpcox, come,-Came, affer at my shrine, and I will help thee. Wife. Most true, forsooth; and many time and oft Myself have heard a voice to call him so.

Car. What, art thou lame? Ay, God Almighty hein me!

Simp. Ay, God A Suf. How cam'st thou so? Simp. A fall off a tree.

Wife. A plum-tree, master. Gło. How long hast thou been blind?

Simp. O, born so, master. What, and wouldst climb a tree? Gla. Simb. But that in all my life, when I was a youth. very dear. Wife. Too true; and bought his climbing Glo. Mass, thou lov'dst plums well that wouldst venture so. [some damsons, Simp. Alas, good master, my wife desir'd And made me climb, with danger of my life.

Glo. A subtle knave! but yet it shall not [them:serve. Let me see thine eyes: -wink now; -now open

In my opinion yet thou see'st not well. Simp. Yes, master, clear as day, I thank God and Saint Alban.

Glo. Say'st thou me so? What colour is this cloak of?

Simp. Red, master; red as blood. Glo. Why, that's well said. What colour is my gown of?

Simp. Black, forsooth; coal-black as jet. K. Hen. Why then, colour jet is of? thou know'st what

And yet, I think, jet did he never see. Glo. But cleaks and gowns, before this day, a many. Wife. Never, before this day, in all his life. Glo. Tell me, sirrah, what's my name? Simp. Alas, master, I know not. Glo. What's his name?

Simp. I know not. Glo. Nor his?

Simp. No, indeed, master. Glo. What's thine own name? Simp. Saunder Simpcox, an if it please you, Glo. Then, Saunder, sit there, the lyingest knave in Christendom. If thou hadst been born blind, thou mightst as well have known all our names as thus to name the several colours we do wear. Sight may distinguish of colours; but suddenly to nominate them all, it is impossible.—My lords, Saint Alban here hath done a miracle; and would ye not think his cunning to be great that could restore this cripple to his legs again?

Simp. O master, that ye could! Gla. My masters of Saint Albans, have you not beadles in your town, and things called whips?

May. Yes, my lord, if it please your grace. Glo. Then send for one presently.

May. Sirrah, go fetch the beadlo hither straight.

Glo. Now fetch me a stool hither by and by. [A stool brought aut.] Naw, sirrah, if you mean to save yourself from whipping, leap me over this stool and run away. falone: Simp. Alas, master, I am not able to stand You go about to torture me in vain.

Re-enter Attendant, with the Beadle.

Glo. Well, sir, we must have you find your legs.—Sirrah beadle, whip him till he leap over that same stool.

Bead. I will, my lord .- Come on, sirrah; off with your doublet quickly.

Simp. Alas, master, what shall I do? I am not able to stand.

[After the Beadle has hit him ance, he leaps aver the stool and runs away; and the people fallow and cry "A Miracle!"

K. Hen. O God, seest thou this, and bear'st so long? [run. Q. Mar. It made me laugh to see the villain Gla. Follow the knave; and take this drab away.

Wife, Alas, sir, we did it for pure need. Glo. Let them be whipped through every market town, till they come to Berwick, whence they came. [Exeunt Mayor, Beadle, Wife, &c. Car. Duke Humphrey has done a miracle to-day. Suf. True; made the lame to leap and fly away. Glo. But you have done more miracles than I; You made in a day, my lord, whole towns to fly.

Enter Buckingham.

K. Hen. What tidings with our cousin Buckingham? Buck. Such as my heart doth tremble to un-

A sort of nanghty persons, lewdly bent,-Under the countenance and confederacy Of Lady Eleanor, the protector's wife. The ringleader and head of all this rout,-Have practis'd dangerously against your state, Dealing with witches and with conjurers: Whom we have apprehended in the fact; Raising up wicked spirits from under ground, Demanding of King Henry's life and death, And other of your highness' privy ccuncil. As more at large your grace shall understand.

Car. And so, my lord protector, by this means Your lady is forthcoming yet at London. This news, I think, hath turn'd your weapon's edge;

'Tis like, my lord, you will not keep your honr. Aside to GLOSTER.

Glo. Ambitious churchman, leave to afflict my heart:

Sorrow and grief have vanquish'd all my powers; And, vanquish'd as I am, I yield to thee, [wicked ones.

Or to the meanest groom. [wicked ones, K. Hen. O God, what mischiefs work the Heaping confusion on their own heads thereby!

Q. Mar. Gloster, see here the tainture of thy nest;

And look thyself be faultless, thou wert best.

Glo. Madam, for myself to heaven I do appeal,

How I have lov'd my king and commonweal: And for my wife I know not how it stands: Exit on Attendant. Sorry I am to hear what I have heard:

Scene III.—LONDON. CARDINAL BEAU-FORT'S Bedchamber.

Enter King Henry, Salisbury, Warwick, and others. The CARDINAL in bed; Attendants with him.

K. Hen. How fares my lord? speak, Beaufort, to thy sovereign.

Car. If thou be'st death I'll give thee England's treasure,

Enough to purchase such another island, So thou wilt let me live and feel no pain.

K. Hen. Ah, what a sign it is of evil life Where death's approach is seen so terrible! War. Beaufort, it is thy sovereign speaks to thee.

Car. Bring me unto my trial when you will. Died he not in his bed? where should he die? Can I make men live, whe'r they will or no? O, torture me no morel I will confess. Alive again? then show me where he is: I'll give a thousand pound to look upon him.-He hath no eyes, the dust hath blinded them.-Comb down his hair; look, look! it stands upright;

Like lime-twigs set to catch my winged soul!-Give me some drink; and bid the apothecary Bring the strong poison that I bought of him.

K. Hen. O thou eternal Mover of the heavens, Look with a gentle eye upon this wretch! O, beat away the busy meddling fiend That lays strong siege unto this wretch's soul, And from his bosom purge this black despair! War. See how the pangs of death do make him grin! Sal. Disturb him not, let him pass peaceably. K. Hen. Peace to his soul, if God's good pleasure bel

Lord Cardinal, if thou think'st on heaven's

Hold up thy hand, make signal of thy hope.-He dies, and makes no sign:-O God, forgive him!

War. So bad a death argues a monstrous life. K. Hen. Forbear to judge, for we are sinners all.

Close up his eyes, and draw the curtain close; And let us all to meditation. Exeunt.

ACT IV.

SCENE L-KENT. The Sea-shore near Dover Firing heard at sea. Then enter, from a boat, a Captain, a Master, a Master's Mate, WALTER WHITMORE, and others; with them Suffolk, disguised, and other Gentlemen, prisoners.

Cap. The gaudy, blabbing, and remorseful

Is crept into the bosom of the sea; And now loud-howling wolves arouse the jades That drag the tragic melancholy night; Who with their drowsy, slow, and flagging wings Clip dead men's graves, and from their misty

Breathe foul contagious darkness in the air. Therefore bring forth the soldiers of our prize; For, whilst our pinnace anchors in the Downs, I Ay, and allay this thy abortive pride:

Here shall they make their ransom on the sand. Or with their blood stain this discolour'd

Master, this prisoner freely give I thee; And thou that art his mate, make boot of this;-The other [pointing to SUFFOLK], Walter Whitmore is thy share.

know. I Gent. What is my ransom, master? let me Mast. A thousand crowns, or else lay down your head.

Mate. And so much shall you give, or off goes Cap. What, think you much to pay two thousand crowns,

And bear the name and port of gentlemen? Cut both the villains' throats;-for die you shall:-

The lives of those which we have lost in fight Cannot be counterpois'd with such a petty sum. I Gent. I'll give it, sir; and therefore spare my life.

istraight. Gent. And so will I, and write home for it Whit. I lost mine eye in laying the prize aboard.

And therefore, to revenge it, shalt thou die; To SUFFOLK.

And so should these, if I might have my will. Cap. Be not so rash; take ransom, let him live.

Suf. Look on my George, -I am a gentleman: Rate me at what thou wilt, thou shalt be paid. Whit. And so am I; my name is Walter Whitmore. [affright? How now! why start'st thou? what, doth death Suf. Thy name affrights me, in whose sound is death.

A cunning man did calculate my birth, And told me that by Water I should die: Yet let not this make thee be bloody-minded; Thy name is Gaultier, being rightly sounded.

Whit. Gaultier or Walter, which it is I care not:

Never yet did base dishonour blur our name But with our sword we wip'd away the blot; Therefore, when merchant-like I sell revenge, Broke be my sword, my arms torn and defac'd And I proclaim'd a coward through the world! Lays hold on Suffolk.

Suf. Stay Whitmore; for thy prisoner is a prince,

The Duke of Suffolk, William De-la-Poole. Whit. The Duke of Suffolk muffled up in rags! Suf. Ay, but these rags are no part of the duke:

Jove sometime went disguis'd, and why not I? . Cap. But Jove was never slain, as thou shalt (blood,

Suf. Obscure and lowly swain, King Henry's The honourable blood of Lancaster, Must not be shed by such a jaded groom.

Hast thou not kiss'd thy hand and held my stirrup?

Bareheaded plodded by my foot-cloth mule, And thought thee happy when I shook my head?

How often hast thou waited at my cup, Fed from my trencher, kneel'd down at the board.

When I have feasted with Queen Margaret? Remember it, and let it make thee crest-fall'n; Despoiled of your honour in your life, Shall, after three days' open penance done, Live in your country here, in hanishment, With Sir John Stanley, in the Isle of Man.

Duch. Welcome is hanishment; welcome

I cannot justify whom the law condemns.—

[Excunt the Duchess and the other

Prisoners married

Prisoners, guarded.
Mine eyes are full of tears, my heart of grief.
Ah, Humphrey, this dishonour in thine age
Will hring thy head with sorrow to the ground!I beseech your majesty, give me leave to go:
Sorrow would solace, and mine age would ease.

K. Hen. Stay, Humphrey Duke of Gloster:

ere.thou go,

Give up thy staff: Henry will to himself Protector be; and God shall be my hope, My stay, my guide, and lantern to my feet: And go in peace, Humphrey,—no less belov'd Than when thou wert protector to thy king. Q. Mar. I see no reason why a king of years

Should be to be protected like a child.—
God and King Henry govern England's helm!
Give up your staff, sir, and the king his realm.

Glo. My staff! here, noble Henry, is my staff: As willingly do I the same resign As ere thy father Henry made it mine; And even as willingly at thy feet I leave it As others would ambitiously receive it. Farewell, good king; when I am dead and gone, May honourable peace attend thy throne!

Q. Mar. Why, now is Henry king, and Margaret queen;

And Humphrey Duke of Gloster scarce himself, That hears so shrewd a main; two pulls at once,—

His lady hanish'd and a limh lopp'd off:
This staff of honour raught, there let it stand
Where it best fits to he,—in Henry's hand.
Suf. Thus droops this lofty pine, and hangs his sprays;

Thus Eleanor's pride dies in her youngest days.
York. Lords, let him go.—Please it your majesty,

This is the day appointed for the comhat; And ready are the appellant and defendant, The armourer and his man, to enter the lists, So please your highness to hehold the fight.

Q. Mar. Ay, good my lord; for purposely therefore

Left I the court, to see this quarrel tried.

K. Hen. O' God's name, see the lists and all things fit:

Here let them end it; and God defend the right!
York. I never saw a fellow worse hested,
Or more afraid to fight, than is the appellant,

The servant of this armourer, my lords.

Enter, on one side, Horner and his Neighbours, drinking to him so much that he is drunk; and he enters bearing his staff with a sand-beg fastened to it, a drum before him; at the other side, PETER, with a drum and a similar staff; accompanied by Prentices drinking to him.

I Neigh. Here, neighbour Horner, I drink to you in a cup of sack; and fear not, neighbour, you shall do well enough.

2 Neigh. And here, neighbour, here's a cup of charneco.

3 Neigh. And here's a pot of good double heer, neighbour; drink, and fear not your man. Hor. Let it come, i' faith, and I'll pledge you all; and a fig for Peter!

I Pren. Here, Peter, I drink to thee: and be not afraid.

2 Pren. Be merry, Peter, and fear not thy master: fight for credit of the prentices.

Peter. I thank you all: drink, and pray for me, I pray you; for I think I have taken my last draught in this world.—Here, Robin, an if I die, I give thee my apron:—and, Will, thou shall have my hammer:—and here, Tom, take all the money that I have.—O Lord bless me, I pray God! for I am never able to deal with my master, he hath learnt so much fence already.

Sal. Come, leave your drinking, and fall to hlows.-Sirrah, what's thy name?

Peter. Peter, forsooth. Sal. Peter! what more?

Peter. Thump.

Sal. Thump! then see thon thump thy master

Hor. Masters, I am come hither, as it were upon my man's instigation, to prove him a knave and myself an honest man: and touching the Duke of York, I will take my death, I never meant him any ill, nor the king, nor the queen: and therefore, Peter, have at thee with a downright blow!

York. Despatch:—this knave's tongue begins to double.-

Sounds, trumpets, alarum to the combatants!
[Alarum. They fight, and PETER strikes down HORNER.

Hor. Hold, Peter, hold! I confess, I confess treason.

| Dies. | York. Take away his weapon.—Fellow.

York. Take away his weapon.—Fellow, thank

God, and the good wine in thy master's way. Peter. O God, have I overcome mine enemy in this presence? O Peter, thou hast prevailed in right! [sight: K. Hen. Go, take hence that traitor from our For by his death we do nerreive his suilt:

Scene IV .- London. A Street.

Enfer GLOSTER and Servants, in mourning cloaks.

Glo. Thus sometimes bath the hrighest day a cloud;

And after summer evermore succeeds Barren winter, with his wrathful nipping cold; So eares and joys abound, as seasons fleet.— Sirs, what o'clock?

Serv. Ten, my lord.

Glo. Ten in the hour that was appointed me To watch the coming of my punish'd duchess: Uneath may she endure the flinty streets, To tread them with her tender-feeling feet. Sweet Nell, ill can thy noble mind abrook

Geo. There is sin struck down like an or. and iniquity's throat cut like a calf.

John. And Smith the weaver, Geo. Argo, their thread of life is spun. John. Come, come, let's fall in with them. Drum. Enter CADE, DICK the Butcher, SMITH the Weaver, and others in great number

Cade. We John Cade, so termed of our supposed father.

Dick. Or, rather, of stealing a cade of her-Aside.

Cade. For our enemies shall fall before us, inspired with the spirit of putting down kings and princes.—Command silence.

Dick. Silence!

Cade. My father was a Mortimer,-

Dick. He was an honest man and a good bricklayer. [Aside.

Cade. My mother a Plantagenet.— Dick. I knew her well; she was a midwife.

Aside. Cade. My wife descended of the Lacies,-Dick. She was, indeed, a pedlar's daughter, and sold many laces. Aside. Smith. But now of late, not able to travel with her furred pack, she washes bucks here at home. Aside.

Cade. Therefore am I of an honourable house.

Dick. Ay, by my faith, the field is honourable; and there was he born under a hedge.for his father had never a house but the cage. (Aside.

Cade. Valiant I am. Smith. 'A must needs; for beggary is valiant.

Aside. Cade. I am able to endure much.

Dick. No question of that; for I have seen him whipped three market days together. (Aside.

Cade. I fear neither sword nor fire. Smith. He need not fear the sword; for his coat is of proof. Aside.

Dick. But methinks he should stand in fear of fire, being burnt i' the hand for stealing of Aside. Cade. Be brave, then; for your captain is brave, and vows reformation. There shall be in England seven halfpenny loaves sold for a penny: the three-hooped pot shall have ten hoops; and I will make it felony to drink small beer: all the realm shall be in common; and in Cheapside shall my palfrey go to grass: and when I am king,—as king I will be,-

All. God save your majesty!

Cade. I thank you, good people:-there shall be no money; all shall eat and drink on my score; and I will apparel them all in one livery, that they may agree like brothers, and worship me their lord. [lawyers. Dick. The first thing we do, let's kill all the Cade. Nay, that I mean to do. Is not this a lamentable thing, that of the skin of an inno-cent lamb should be made parchment? that parchmen, being scribbled o'er, should undo a man? Some say the bee stings; but I say 'tis | Married the Duke of Clarence's daughter, --did the bee's wax; for I did but seal once to a thing, and I was never mine own man since.—How now! who's there?

Enter some, bringing in the Clerk of Chatham

Smith. The clerk of Chatham: he can write and read and cast accompt.

Cade. O monstrous! Smith. We took him setting of boys' copies. Cade. Here's a villain!

Smith. Has a book in his pocket with red

Cade. Nay, then, he is a conjurer. Dick. Nay, he can make obligations and write court-hand.

Cade. I am sorry for 't: the man is a proper man, on mine honour: unless I find him guilty, he shall not die .-- Come hither, sirrah, I must examine thee: what is thy name?.

Clerk. Emmanuel.

Dick. They use to write it on the top of letters: 'twill go hard with you.

Cade. Let me alone.—Dost thou use to write thy name? or hast thou a mark to thyself, like an honest plain-dealing man?

Clerk. Sir, I thank God, I have been so well brought up that I can write my name. All. He hath confessed: away with him! he's a villain and a traitor. Cade. Away with him, I sayl hang him with his pen and inkhorn about his neck. Exeunt some with the Clerk.

Enter MICHAEL.

Mich. Where's our general? Cade. Here I am, thou particular fellow.

Mich. Fly, fly, fly! Sir Humphrey Stafford and his brother are hard by, with the king's forces.

Cade. Stand, villain, stand, or I'll fell thee down. He shall be encountered with a man as good as himself: he is but a knight, is 'a? Mich. No.

Cade. To equal him, I will make myself a knight presently. [Kneels.] Rise up, Sir John Mortimer. [Rises.] Now have at him!

Enter SIR HUMPHREY STAFFORD WILLIAM his Brother, with drum and Forces.

Staf. Rebellious hinds, the filth and scum of Mark'd for the gallows, lay your weapons down; Home to your cottages, forsake this groom: blood The king is merciful if you revolt.

W. Staf. But angry, wrathful, and inclin'd to If you go forward: therefore yield or die.

Cade. As for these silken-coated slaves, I pass not:

It is to you, good people, that I speak, O'er whom, in time to come, I hope to reign; For I am rightful heir unto the crown.

Staf. Villain, thy father was a plasterer; And thou thyself a shearman,—art thou not?

Cade. And Adam was a gardener.

W. Staf. And what of that?

this:-Edmund Mortimer, Cade. Marry. (he not? Earl of March,

Staf. Ay, sir. Cade. By her he had two children at one birth.

Whate'er occasion keeps him from us now. O. Mar. Can you not see? or will you not observe

The strangeness of his alter'd countenance? With what a majesty he bears himself: How insolent of late be is become, Iself? How proud, how peremptory, and unlike him-We know the time since be was mild and affable: And if we did but glance a far-off look Immediately be was upon his knee, That all the court admir'd him for submission: But meet him now, and he it in the morn, When every one will give the time of day, He knits his brow, and shows an angry eye, And passeth by with stiff unbowed knee, Disdaining duty that to us belongs. Small curs are not regarded when they grin: But great men tremble when the lion roars. And Humphrey is no little man in England. First note that be is near you in descent; And should you fall be as the next will mount. Me seemeth, then, it is no policy, Respecting what a rancorous mind he bears, And his advantage following your decease, That he should come about your royal person, Or be admitted to your highness' council. By flattery hath be won the commons' bearts: And when he please to make commotion, 'Tis to he fear'd they all will follow him. Now 'tis the spring, and weeds are shallow-rooted; Suffer them now, and they'll o'ergrow the And choke the herbs for want of husbandry. The reverent care I beer unto my lord Made me collect these dangers in the duke. If it he fond, call it a woman's fear; Which fear, if hetter reasons can supplant, I will subscribe, and say I wrong'd the duke. My Lord of Suffolk,—Buckingham,—and

York, Reprove my allegation if you can: Or else conclude my words effectual. duke:

Suf. Well hath your highness seen into this And had I first been put to speak my mind, I think I should have told your grace's tale. The duchess, hy his subornation, Upon my life, began her devilish practices: Or, if he were not privy to those faults, Yet, by reputing of his high descent,-As, next the king, he was successive heir, And such high vaunts of his nobility, Did instigate the bedlam brainsick duchess By wicked means to frame our sovereign's fall. Smooth runs the water where the orook is deep; Nor ever bad one penny bribe from France. And in his simple show be harbours treason. The fox harks not when he would steal the lamb . No, no, my sovereign; Gloster is a man Unsounded yet, and full of deep deceit.

Car. Did he not, contrary to form of law, Devise strange deaths for small offences done? Fork. And did he not, in his protectorship, Levy great sums of money through the realm For soldiers' pay in France, and never sent it? By means whereof the towns each day revolted. Buck. Tut, these are petty faults to faults

Humphrey. Which time will bring to light in smooth Duke

K. Hen. My lords, at once:-- the care you have of us.

Is worthy praise: but shall I speak my conscience? Our kinsman Gloster is as innocent

From meaning treason to our royal person. As is the sucking lamb or harmless dove: The dake is virtuous, mild, and too well given To dream on evil or to work my downfall.

O. Mar. Ab, what's more dangerous than this fond affiance? Seems he a dove? his feathers are but borrow'd, For he's disposed as the hateful reven: Is he a lamb? his skin is surely lent him, For he's inclin'd as is the ravenous woll. Who cannot steal a shape that means deceit? Take heed, my lord; the welfare of us all Hangs on the cutting short that fraudful man.

Enter Somerset.

Som. All health unto my gracious sovereign! K. Hen. Welcome, Lord Somerset. What What news from France?

Som. That all your interest in those territories Is utterly bereft you; all is lost.

K. Hen. Cold news, Lord Somerset: but God's will be done! [France York. Cold news for me: for I had hope of As firmly as I hope for fertile England. Thus are my blossoms blasted in the bud. And caterpillars eat my leaves away: But I will remedy this gear ere long, Or sell my title for a glorious grave. Asire.

Enter Gloster.

Glo. All happiness unto my lord the kingl Pardon, my liege, that I have stay'd so long. Suf. Nay, Gloster, know that thou art come.

100 Soon,

Unless thou wert more loyal than thou art: I do arrest thee of high treason here. [blush Glo. Well, Suffolk, thou shalt not see me Nor change my countenance for this arrest: A heart unspotted is not easily dannted. The purest spring is not so free from mud As I am clear from treason to my sovereign:

Who can accuse me? wherein am I guilty? Fork. 'Tis thought, my lord, that you took bribes of France. And, being protector, stay'd the soldiers' pay; By means whereof his highness hath lost France. Glo. Is it but thought so? what are they that think it? I never robb'd the soldiers of their pay, So help me God, as I have watch'd the night, Ay, night by night,-in studying good for England! That doit that e'er I wrested from the king, Or any great I hearded to my use, Be brought against me at my trial-day! No; many a pound of mine own proper store, Because I would not tax the needy commons, Buck. My gracious lord, retire to Killing-Until a power be rais'd to put them dawn. Q. Mar. Ah! were the Duke of Suffalk now alive.

These Kentish rebels would be soon appeas'd. K. Hen. Lord Say, the traitors hate thee; Therefore away with us to Killingworth.

Say. So might your grace's person be in danger;

The sight of me is odiaus in their eyes: And therefore in this city will I stay, And live alone as secret as I may.

2 Mess. Jack Cade hath gatten London Bridge;

The citizens fly and forsake their houses; The rascal people, thirsting after prey Join with the traitor; and they jointly swear To spoil the city and your royal court.

K. Hen. Come, Margaret; God, our hope, will succour us. deceas'd.

Q. Mar. My hope is gone, now Suffolk is K. Hen. Farewell, my lord [ta LORD SAY]: trust not the Kentish rebels.

Buck. Trust nobody, for fear you be betray'd. Say. The trust I have is in mine innocence, And therefore am I bold and resolute.

Exeunt.

/ Scene V.—London. The Tawer.

Enter LORD SCALES and others, on the Walls. Then enter certain Citizens, below.

Scales. How now! is Jack Cade slain? I Cit. No, my lord, not likely to be slain; for they have won the bridge, killing all those that withstand them: the lord mayor craves aid of your honour from the Tower, to defend the city from the rebels.

Scales. Such aid as I can spare, you shall

command;

But I am troubled here with them myself,-The rebels have assay'd to win the Tower. But get you to Smithfield, and gather head, And thither I will send you Matthew Gough; Fight for your king, your country, and your lives;

And so, farewell, for I must hence again.

Exeunt.

Scene VI.—London. Cannon Street. Enter JACK CADE and his followers. He strikes his staff on London stone.

Cade. Now is Mortimer lord of this city. And here, sitting upon London stone, I charge and command that, of the city's cost, the pissingconduit run nothing but claret wine this first year of our reign. And now henceforward it shall be treason for any that calls me other than Lord Mortimer.

Enter a Soldier, running.

Sold. Jack Cade! Jack Cade! Cade. Knock him down there

Smith. If this fellow be wise, he'll never call you Jack Cade more; I think he hath a very fair warning.

Dick. My lord, there's an army gathered together in Smithfield.

Cade. Come, then, let's go fight with them: but first, go and set London Bridge on fire; and; if you can, burn down the Tawer too. Come, let's away. Exeunt.

> Scene VII.—London. Smithfield.

Alarums. Enter, an ane side, CADE and his Company; on the other, Citizens, and the King's Farces, headed by MATTHEW GOUGH. They fight; the Citizens are rauted, and MATTHEW GOUGH is slain.

Cade. So, sirs:-now go some and pull down the Savoy; others to the inns of court; down with them all.

Dick. I have a suit unto your lordship. Cade. Be it a lordship, thou shalt have it for that word.

Dick. Only, that the laws of England may come out of your mouth.

John. Mass, 'twill be sore law then; for he was thrust in the mouth with a spear, and 'tis not whole yet. Smith. Nay, John, it will be stinking law;

for his breath stinks with eating toasted cheese.

Cade. I have thought upon it, it shall be so. Away, burn all the records of the realm: my mouth shall be the Parliament of England.

John. Then we are like to have biting statutes, unless his teeth be pulled out. [Aside. Cade. And henceforward all things shall be in common.

Enter GEORGE BEVIS, with the LORD SAY.

Cade. Well, he shall be beheaded for it ten times.-Ah, thou say, thou serge, nay, thou buckram lord! now art thou within point blank of our jurisdiction regal. What canst thou answer to my majesty for giving up of Nor-mandy unto Monsieur Basimecu, the Dauphin of France? Be it known unto thee by these presence, even the presence of Lord Mortimer, that I am the besom that must sweep the court clean of such filth as thou art. Thou hast most traitorously corrupted the youth of the realm in erecting a grammar school: and whereas, before, our forefathers had no other books but the score and the tally, thou hast caused printing to be used; and, contrary to the king, his crown, and dignity, thou hast built a paper-mill. It will be proved to thy face that thou hast men about thee that usually talk of a noun and a verb, and such abominable words as no Christian ear can endure to hear. Thou hast appointed justices of peace, to call poor men before them about matters they were not able to answer. Moreover, thou hast put them in [They kill him. | prison; and because they could not read, thou

And do not stand on quillets how to slay him: Be it hy gins, hy snares, hy subtlety, Sleeping or waking, 'tis no matter how, So he he dead; for that is good deceit Which mates him first that first intends deceit.

Som. If York, with all his far-fet policy, Had been the regent there instead of me, He never would have stay'd in France so long.

York. No, not to lose it all, as thou hast done: I rather would have lost my life betimes Than bring a burden of dishonour home, By staying there so long till all were lost. Show me one scar character'd on thy skin: Men's flesh preserv'd so whole do seldom win.

And try your hap against the Irishmen?
York. I will, my lord, so please his majesty.
Suf. Why, our authority is his consent; And what we do establish he confirms:

Then, noble York, take thou this task in hand. York. I am content: provide me soldiers, lords,

At Bristol I expect my soldiers; For there I'll ship them all for Ireland.

Suf. I'll see it truly done, my Lord of York. Exeunt all but YORK.

York. Now, York, or never, steel thy fearful thoughts.

And change misdoubt to resolution: Be that thou hop'st to be; or what thou art Resign to death,—it is not worth the enjoying: Let pale-fac'd fear keep with the mean-born man,

And find no harbour in a royal heart. Faster than spring-time showers comes thought on thought;

And not a thought hut thinks on dignity. My brain, more husy than the lahouring spider, Weaves tedious snares to trap mine enemies. Well, nobles, well, 'tis politicly done, To send me packing with an host of men: I fear me you but warm the starved snake, Who, cherish'd in your breasts, will sting your hearts.

'Twas men I lack'd, and you will give them me: I take it kindly; yet be well assur'd You put sharp weapons in a madman's hands. Whiles I in Ireland nourish a mighty band, I will stir up in England some hlack storm Shall hlow ten thousand souls to heaven or hell; And this fell tempest shall not cease to rage Until the golden circuit on my head, Like to the glorious sun's transparent heams, Do calm the fury of this mad-bred flaw. And for a minister of my intent I have seduc'd a headstrong Kentishman, John Cade of Ashford,

To make commotion, as full well he can, Under the title of John Mortimer. In Ireland have I seen this stubborn Cade Oppose himself against a troop of kerns,

All. We'll follow Cade, we'll follow Cadel Clif. Is Cade the son of Henry the Fifth, That thus you do exclaim you'll go with him? Will he conduct you through the heart of France,

And make the meanest of you earls and dukes?

Alas, he hath no home, no place to fly to; Nor knows he how to live, but by the spoil, Unless by robbing of your friends and us. Were't not a shame, that whilst you live at jar, The fearful French, whom you late vanquished, Should make a start o'er seas and vanquish you?

Methinks already in this civil broil I see them lording it in London streets, Crying Viliaco! unto all they meet. Better ten thousand base-born Cades miscarry Than you should stoop unto a Frenchman's mercy To France, to France, and get what you have Spare England, for it is your native coast:

All. A Clifford! a Clifford! we'll follow the king and Clifford.

Cade. Was ever feather so lightly blown to and fro as this multitude? The same of Henry the Fifth hales them to an hundred mischiefs, and makes them leave me desolate. I see them lay their heads together to surprise me: my sword make way for me, for here is no staying. Buck. Health and glad tidings to your majesty! K. Hen. Why, Buckingham, is the traitor Cade surpris'd?

Or is he but retir'd to make him strong? Enter, below, a number of CADE'S Followers, with halters about their necks.

Clif. He is fled, my lord, and all his powers do yield;

And humbly thus, with halters on their necks, Expect your highness' doom of life or death. K. Hen. Then, heaven, set ope thy everlasting gates.

To entertain my vows of thanks and praise! Soldiers, this day have you redeem'd your lives, And show'd how well you love your prince and country:

Continue still in this so good a mind, And Henry, though he be infortunate, Assure yourselves, will never be unkind: And so, with thanks and pardon to you all, I do dismiss you to your several countries.

Cade. Fie on ambition! fie on myself, that have a sword, and yet am ready to famish! These five days have I hid me in these woods, and durst not peep out, for all the country is laid for me; but now am I so hungry that if I might have a lease of my life for a thousand years, I could stay no longer. Wherefore, on And twice by awkward wind from England's Some violent hands were laid on Humphrey's

As far as I could ken thy chalky cliffs, When from the shore the tempest beat us back,

I stood upon the hatches in the storm; And when the dusky sky began to robe My earnest-gaping sight of thy land's view. I took a costly jewel from my neck,— A heart it was, bound in with diamonds,— And threw it towards thy land:-the sea re-ceiv'd it:

And so I wish'd thy body might my heart: And even with this I lost fair England's view, And bid mine eyes be packing with my heart, And call'd them blind and dusky spectacles, For losing ken of Albion's wished coast. How often have I tempted Suffolk's tongue,-The agent of thy foul inconstancy, To sit and witch me, as Ascanius did When he to madding Dido would unfold His father's acts, commeuc'd in burning Troy! Am I not witch'd like her? or thou not false like him? Ah me, I can no morel die, Margaretl For Henry weeps that thou dost live so long.

Noise within. Enter WARWICK and SALIS-BURY. The Commons press to the door.

War. It is reported, mighty sovereign, That good Duke Humphrey traitorously is murder'd

By Suffolk and the Cardinal Beaufort's means. The commons, like an angry hive of bees That went their leader, scatter np and down, And care not who they sting in his reveuge. Myself have calmed their spleenful mutiny Until they hear the order of his death.

K. Hen. That he is dead, good Warwick, 'tis too true; But how he died God knows, not Henry:

Enter his chamber, view his breathless corpse, And comment then upon his sudden death.

War. That I shall do, my liege. - Stay, Salisbury, With the rude multitude till I return.

life!

If my suspect be false, forgive me, God; For judgment only doth belong to thee. Fain would I go to chafe his paly lips With twenty thousand kisses, and to drain Upon his face an ocean of salt tears: To tell my love unto his dumb deaf trunk,. And with my fingers feel his hand unfeeling: But all in vain are these mean obsequies; And to survey his dead and earthly image,

What were it but to make my sorrow greater? The folding doors of an inner Chamber are thrown open, and GLOSTER is discovered dead in his bed; WARWICK and others standing by it.

War. Come hither, gracious sovereign, view this body. K. Hen. That is to see how deep my grave is made:

For with his soul fied all my worldly solace;

For seeing him, I see my life in death.

War. As surely as my soul intends to live
With that dread King that took our state upon him

To free us from his Father's wrathful curse, I do believe that violent hands were laid Upon the life of this thrice-famed duke.

Suf. A dreadful oath, sworn with a solemn tongue!

What instance gives Lord Warwick for his yow? War. See how the blood is settled in his face! Oft have I seen a timely-parted ghost, Of ashy semblance, meagre, pale, and bloodless, Being all descended to the labouring heart; Who, in the conflict that it holds with death, Attracts the same for aidance 'gainst the enemy; Which with the heart there cools, and ne'er returneth

To blush and beautify the cheek again. But see, his face is black and full of blood His eye-balls further out than when he liv'd, Staring full ghastly like a strangled man: His hair nprear'd, his nostrils stretch'd with struggling; His hands abroad display'd, as one that grasp'd And tugg'd for life, and was by strength sub-

Look, on the sheets his hair, you see, is sticking; His well-proportioned beard made rough and rugged,

Like to the summer's corn by tempest lodg'd. It cannot be but he was murder'd here; The least of all these signs were probable.

Suf. Why, Warwick, who should do the duke to death?

Myself and Beaufort had him in protection: And we, I hope, sir, are no murderers. H'cr. But both of you were row'd Duke Humphrey's foes; And you, forsooth, had the good duke to keep: 'Tis like you would not feast him like a friend; And 'tis well seen he found an enemy.

O. Mar. Then you, belike, suspect these noblemen

As guilty of Duke Humphrey's timeless death. War. Who finds the heifer dead and bleeding fresh, And sees fast by a butcher with an axe,

I am far better horn than is the king: More like a king, more kingly in my thoughts: But I must make fair weather yet awhile, Till Henry be more weak and I more strong

Aside. Buckingham, I pr'ythee, pardon me, That I have given no answer all this while: My mind was troubled with deep melancholy. The cause why I have brought this army hither Is to remove proud Somerset from the king, Seditious to his grace and to the state.

I have great matters to impart to thee.

Exeunt K. Hen., WAR., Lords, &c. Q. Mar. Mischance and sorrow go along with youl

Heart's discontent and sour affliction
Be playfellows to keep you company!
There's two of you; the devil make a third!
And threefold vengeance tend upon your steps!
Suf. Cease, gentle queen, these execrations,

And let thy Suffolk take his heavy leave.
Q. Mar. Fie, coward woman and soft-hearted wretch!

Hast thou not spirit to curse thine enemies?

Suf. A plague upon them! wherefore should
I curse them? [groan,

Would curses kill, as doth the mandrake's I would invent as bitter-searching terms, As curst, as harsh, and horrible to hear, Deliver'd strongly through my fixed teeth, With full as many signs of deadly hate As lean-fac'd Envy in her loathsome cave: My tongue should stumble in mine earnest words;

Mine eyes should sparkle like the heaten flint; Mine hair he fix'd on end, as one distract; Ay, every joint should seem to curse and han: And even now my hurden'd heart would hreak, Should I not curse them. Poison he their drink! Gall, worse than gall, the daintiest that they

tastel
Their sweetest shade a grove of cypress trees!
Their chiefest prospect murdering hasilisks!
Their softest touch as smart as lizard's stings!
Their music frightful as the serpent's hiss;
And boding screech-owls make the concert full!

All the foul terrors in dark-seated hell— Q. Mar. Enough, sweet Suffolk; thou torment'st thyself; And these dread curses,—like the sun 'gainst Or like an overcharged gun,—recoil,

And turn the farce of them upon thyself.
Suf. You bade me han, and will you hid me leave?

Now, hy the ground that I am hanish'd from,
Well could I curse away a winter's night,
Though standing naked on a mountain top,
Where hiting cold would never let grass grow,
And think it hut a minute spent in sport.

Q. Mar. O, let me entreat thee, ceasel Give me thy hand,

That I may dew it with my mournful tears;
Nor let the rain of heaven wet this place.
To wash away my woeful monuments.
O, could this kiss he printed in thy hand,

[Kisses his hand. That thou mightst think upon these hy the seal, Through whom a thousand sighs are breath'd for thee!

So, get thee gone, that I may know my grief;
'Tis hut surmis'd whilst thou art standing hy,
As one that surfeits thinking on a want.
I will repeal thee, or, he well assur'd,
Adventure to he hanished myself:
And hanished I am, if hut from thee.
Go; speak not to me; even now he gone.—
O, go not yet!—Even thus two friends condemn'd
Embrace, and n kiss, and take ten thousand

Loather a hundred times to part than die. Yet now, farewell; and farewell life with thee! Suf. Thus is poor Suffolk ten times banished,—

Once hy the king and three times thrice hy thee.
'Tis not the land I care for, wert thou hence;
A wilderness is populous enough,
So Suffolk had thy heavenly company:
For where thou art, there is the world itself,
With every several pleasure in the world;
And where thou art not, desolation.
I can no more:—live thou to joy thy life;
Myself to joy in naught hut that thou liv'st.

Enter VAUX.

Q. Mar. Whither goes Vaux so fast? what news, I pr'ythee?

Vaux. To signify unto his majesty
That Cardinal Beaufort is at point of death;
For suddenly a grievous sickness took him, lair,
That makes him gasp, and stare, and catch the Blaspheming God, and cursing men on earth.
Sometime he talks as if Duke Humphrey's
ghost

Were hy his side; sometime he calls the king, And whispers to his pillow, as to him, The secrets of his overcharged soul: And I am sent to tell his majesty

That even now he cries aloud for him. [king.

Q. Mar. Go tell this heavy message to the [Exit VAUX.

Ah mel what is this world! what news are these!

But wherefore grieve I at an hour's poor loss, Omitting Suffolk's exile, my soul's treasure? Why only, Suffolk, mourn I not for thee, And with the southern clouds contend in tears,—

Theirs for the earth's increase, mine for my sorrows? [coming;— Now get thee hence: the king, thou know'st, is If thou he found hy me, thou art hut dead.

Suf. If I depart from thee I cannot live;
And in thy sight to die, what were it else
But like a pleasant slumher in thy lap?
Here could I hreathe my soul into the air,
As mild and gentle as the cradle-bahe
Dying with mother's dug hetween its lips:
Where, from thy sight, I should he raging mad,
And cry out for thee to close up mine eyes,
To have thee with thy lips to stop my mouth;
So shouldst thou either turn my flying soul,
Or I should hreathe it so into thy hody,
And then it liv'd in sweet Elysium.
To die hy thee were hut to die in jest;
From thee to die were torture more than death:
O, let me stay, hefall what may hefall!

Q. Mar. Away! though parting he a fretful corrosive,

It is applied to a deathful wound. [thee; To France, sweet Suffolk: let me hear from For whereso'er thou art in this world's globe I'll have an Iris that shall find thee out.

Suf. I go.

O. Mar. And take my heart with thee.

Suf. A jewel, lock'd into the woefull'st cask
That ever did contain a thing of worth.

Even as a splitted hark, so sunder we;
This way fall I to death.

Q. Mar. This way for me. [Exeunf severally.

York. So let it help me now against thy sword. As I in justice and true right express it! Clif. My soul and body on the action both! York. A dreadful lay!-address thee instantly. Clif. La fin couronne les œuvres. They fight, and CLIFFORD falls and dies. York. Thus war hath given thee peace, for thou art still.

Peace with his soul, heaven, if it be thy will! Exit.

Enter YOUNG CLIFFORD.

Y. Clif. Shame and confusion! all is on the Fear frames disorder, and disorder wounds Where it should guard. O war, thou son of hell, Whom angry heavens do make their minister, Throw in the frozen bosoms of our part Hot coals of vengeance!—Let no soldier fly: He that is truly dedicate to war Hath no self-love; nor he that loves himself Hath not essentially, but by circumstance, The name of valour .- O, let the vile world end.

Seeing his father's body. And the premised flames of the last day Knit earth and heaven together! Now let the general trumpet blow his blast, Particularities and petty sounds To cease!-Wast thou ordain'd, dear father, To lose thy youth in peace, and to achieve The silver livery of advised age, And in thy reverence and thy chair-days thus To die in ruffian battle?—Even at this sight My heart is turn'd to stone: and while 'tis mine It shall be stony. York not our old men spares: No more will I their babes: tears virginal Shall be to me even as the dew to fire: And beauty, that the tyrant oft reclaims, Shall to my flaming wrath be oil and flax. Henceforth I will not have to do with pity: Meet I an infant of the house of York, Into as many gobbets will I cut it As wild Medea young Absyrtus did: In cruelty will I seek out my fame.— Come, thou new ruin of old Clifford's house: [Taking up the body.

As did Eners old Anchises bear So bear I thee upon my manly shoulders; But then Eneas bare a living load, Nothing so heavy as these woes of mine. [Exit.

Enter RICHARD PLANTAGENET and SOMER-SET, fighting, and SOMERSET is killed.

Rich. So, lie thou there;-For underneath an alchouse' paltry sign, The Castle in Saint Albans, Somerset Hath made the wizard famous in his death. Sword, hold thy temper; heart, be wrathful still: Priests pray for enemies, but princes kill. [Exit.

Enter KING HENRY. Alarums: excursions. QUEEN MARGARET, and others, retreating.

Q. Mar. Away, my lord! you are slow; for shame, away!

K. Hen. Can we outrun the heavens? good Margaret, stay.

Q. Mar. What are you made of? you'll nor fight nor fly:

Now is it manhood, wisdom, and defence. To give the enemy way; and to secure us By what we can, which can no more but fly. Alarum afar off. If you be ta'en, we then should see the bottom Of all our fortunes: but if we haply scape,-As well we may, if not through your neglect. We shall to London get: where you are lov'd; And where this breach, now in our fortunes made. May readily be stopp'd.

Re-enter Young Clifford.

Y. Clif. But that my heart's on future mischief set, I would speak blasphemy ere bid you fly: But fly you must; uncurable discomfit Reigns in the hearts of all our present parts. Away, for your relief! and we will live To see their day, and them our fortune give: Away, my lord, awayl Exeunt.

Scene III.-Fields near Saint Albans.

Alarum: retreat. Flourish; then enter YORK, RICHARD PLANTAGENET, WARWICK, and Soldiers, with drum and colours.

York. Of Salisbury, who can report of him,— That winter lion, who in rage forgets Aged contusions and all brush of time, And, like a gallant in the brow of youth, Repairs him with occasion? This happy day Is not itself, nor have we won one foot, If Salisbury be lost.

My noble father, Three times to-day I holp him to his horse, Three times bestrid him, thrice I led him off, Persuaded him from any further act: But still, where danger was, still there I met And like rich hangings in a homely house, So was his will in his old feeble body. But, noble as he is, look where he comes.

Enter Salisbury.

Sal. Now, by my sword, well hast thou fought to-day; By the mass, so did we all .- I thank you, Richard:

God knows how long it is I have to live; And it hath pleas'd him that three times to-day. You have defended me from imminent death.-Well, lords, we have not got that which we have: 'Tis not enough our foes are this time fled, Being opposites of such repairing nature.

York. I know our safety is to follow them;

For, as I hear, the king is fled to London, To call a present court of Parliament. Let us pursue him ere the writs go forth:-What says Lord Warwick? shall we after them? War. After theml nay, before them, if we

Now, by my hands, lords, 'twas a glorious day: Saint Albans battle, won by famous York, Shall be eterniz'd in all age to come.-Sound drums and trumpets; -and to London And more such days as these to us befall!

Exeunt.

How in our voiding-lobby hast thon stood. And duly waited for my coming forth? This hand of mine hath writ in thy behalf, And therefore shall it charm thy riotous tongue.

Unto the daughter of a worthless king, Having neither subject, wealth, nor diadem. By devilish policy art thou grown great,

And, like ambitions Sylla, overgorg'd With goblets of thy mother's bleeding heart. By thee Anjou and Maine were sold to France; The false revolting Normans thorough thee Disdain to call us lord; and Picardy

Hath slain their governors, surpris'd our forts, And sent the ragged soldiers wounded home. The princely Warwick, and the Nevils all,— Whose dreadful swords were never drawn in vain,-

As hating thee, are rising up in arms: [crown And now the house of York,-thrust from the By shameful murder of a guiltless king And lofty proud encroaching tyranny,— Burns with revenging fire; whose hopeful colours

Advance our half-fac'd sun, striving to shine, Under the which is writ Invitis nubibus. The commons here in Kent are up in arms: And, to conclude, reproach and beggary Is crept into the palace of our king, And all by thee.—Away! convey him hence.

Suf. O that I were a god, to shoot forth thunder

Upon these paitry, servile, abject drudges! Small things make base men proud; this villain here.

Being captain of a pinnace, threatens more Than Bargulus the strong Illyrian picate. Drones suck not eagles' blood, but rob beehives:

It is impossible that I should die By such a lowly vassal as thyself. Thy words move rage and not remorse in me: I go of message from the queen to France; I charge thee, waft me safely cross the Channel.

Cap. Walter,-Whit. Come, Suffolk, I must waft thee to thy death. I feer.

SCENE II .- Blackheath.

Enter George Bevis and John Holland.

Geo. Come, and get thee a sword, though made of a lath; they have been up these two Jays now, then.

John. They have the more need to sleep Geo. I tell thee, Jack Cade the clothier means to dress the commonwealth, and turn it, and set a new nap upon it.

John. So he had need, for his threadbare Well, I say it was never merry world in England since gentlemen came up.

Geo. O miserable age! Virtue is not regarded in handicraftsmen.

John. The nobility think scorn to go in leather aprons.

Geo. Nay, more, the king's council are no good workmen.

John. True; and yet it is said,-Labour in thy vocation; which is as much to say as,-Let the magistrates be labouring men; and therefore should we be magistrates.

Geo. Thou hast hit it; for there's no better sign of a brave mind than a hard hand.

John. I see them! I see them! There's Best's son the tanner of Wingham, Geo. He shall have the skins of our enemies to make dog's leather of.

John. And Dick the butcher,-

Is either slain or wounded dangerous; I cleft his beaver with a downright blow: That this is true, father, behold his blood.

you will.

Kent, in the Commentaries Caesar writ. Is term'd the civill'st place of all this isle: Sweet is the country, hecause full of riches; The people liberal, valiant, active, wealthy; Which makes me hope you are not void of pity. I sold not Maine, I lost not Normandy; Yet, to recover them, would lose my life. Instice with favour have I always done; Prayers and tears have mov'd me, gifts could never.

When have I aught exacted at your hands, But to maintain the king, the realm, and you? Large girts have I bestow'd on learned clerks, Because my book preferr'd me to the king, And seeing ignorance is the curse of God, Knowledge the wing wherewith we fly to heaven.

Alarum. Enter CADE and all his Rabblement.

Cade. Up Fish Street! down Saint Magnus' corner! kill and knock down! throw them into Thames!—[A parley sounded, then a retreat.] What noise is this I hear? Dare any he so bold to sound retreat or parley, when I command them kill?

Enter BUCKINGHAM and LORD CLIFFORD, with Forces.

Buck. Ay, here they be that dare and will disturb thee: Know, Cade, we come ambassadors from the Unto the commons whom thou hast misled; And here pronounce free pardon to them all That will forsake thee and go home in peace.

Clif. What say ye, countrymen? will ye relent, And yield to mercy whilst 'tis offer'd you;

Or let a rebel lead you to your deaths? Who loves the king, and will embrace his pardon, Fling up his cap, and say God save his majesty! Who hateth him, and honours not his father, Henry the Fifth, that made all France to quake, Shake he his weapon at us and pass by.

All. God save the king! God save the king! Cade. What, Buckingham and Clifford, are ye so brave?—And you, base peasants, do ye helieve him? will you needs he hanged with Clif. Plantagenet! I come, Plantagenet!

SCENE IV.—Another part of the Plains near Sandal Castle.

Alarum. Enter YORK.

York. The army of the queen hath got the field:

My uncles hoth are slain in rescuing me;
And all my followers to the eager foe
Turn back, and fly, like ships before the wind,
Or lamhs pursu'd by hunger-starved wolves.
My sons,—God knows what hath bechanced them: [selves

But this I know,—they have demean'd them-Like men born to renown by life or death. Three times did Richard make a lane to me; And thrice cried, Courage, father! fight it out! And full as oft came Edward to my side, With purple falchion, painted to the hilt In hlood of those that had encounter'd him: And when the hardiest warriors did retire, Richard cried, Charge! and give no foot of ground!

And cried, A crown, or else a glorious tomb!
A sceptre, or an earthly sepulchre!
With this we charg'd again: but, out, alas!
We hodg'd again; as I have seen a swan
With bootless lahour swim against the tide,
And spend her strength with over-matching waves. [A short alarum within.

Ah, hark! the fatal followers do pursue; And! am faint, and cannot fly their fury: And were I strong, I would not shun their fury: The sands are number'd that make up my life; Here must I stay, and here my life must end.

Enter Queen Margaret, Clifford, Northumberland, and Soldiers.

Come, hloody Clifford .- rough Northumher-

land,—

I dare your quenchless fury to more rage: I am your butt, and I abide your shot.

North. Yield to our mercy, proud Plantagenet.
Clif. Ay, to such mercy as his ruthless arm,
With downright payment, show'd unto my father.

Now Phaeton hath tumbled from his car, And made an evening at the noontide prick. York. My ashes, as the phoenix, may bring forth

A bird that will revenge upon you all:
And in that hope I throw mine eyes to heaven,
Scorning whate'er you can afflict me with.
Why come you not? what! multitudes, and fear?

Why come you not? what! multitudes, and fear?

Clif. So cowards fight when they can fly no further;

So doves do peck the falcon's piercing talons; So desperate thieves, all hopeless of their lives, Breathe out invectives 'gainst the officers.

York. O Clifford, but hethink thee once again,

And in thy thought o'errun my former time; And this is he was his adopted neir. And, if thou canst. for hlushing, view this face, But how is it that great Plantagenet

And hite thy tongue, that slanders him with cowardice [this]
Whose from hath made thee faint and fly ere

Clif. I will not bandy with thee word for word.

But buckle with thee blows, twice two for one. [Draws.

Q. Mar. Hold, valiant Clifford! for a thousand causes

I would prolong awhile the traitor's life.—

Weath makes him deaft-speek thou War

Wrath makes him deaf:—speak thou, North, Hold, Clifford! do not honour him so

North. Hold, Clifford! do not honour him so To prick thy finger, though to wound his heart: What valour were it, when a cur doth grin, For one to thrust his hand hetween his teeth, When he might spurn him with his foot away? It is war's prize to take all 'vantages; And ten to one is no impeach of valour.

(They lay hands on YORK, who struggles, Clif. Ay, ay, so strives the woodcock with the gin.

North. So doth the cony struggle in the net.
[York is taken prisoner.

York. So triumph thieves upon their conquer'd booty; So true men yield, with robbers so o'ermatch'd.

So true men yield, with robbers so o'ermatch'd.

North. What would your grace have done unto him now? [thumherland,

O. Mar. Brave warriors, Clifford and Nor-Come, make him stand upon this molehill here, That raught at mountains with outstretched arms.

Yet parted hut the shadow with his hand.—What, was it you that would be England's king? Was't you that revell'd in our parliament, And made a preachment of your high descent? Where are your mess of sons to back you now? The wanton Edward and the lusty George? And where's that valiant crook-hack prodigy, Dicky your hoy, that with his grumbling voice Was wont to cheer his dad in mutinies? Or, with the rest, where is your darling Rutland?

Look, York: I stain'd this napkin with the blood
That valiant Clifford, with his rapier's point,
Made issue from the bosom of the boy;
And if thine eyes can water for his death,
I give thee this to dry thy cheeks withal.
Alas, poor York! but that I hate thee deadly,
I should lament thy miserable state.
I pr'ythee, grieve, to make me merry, York.
What, hath thy fiery heart so parch'd thine

entrails

That not a tear can fall for Rutland's death?

Why art thou patient, man? thou shouldst be mad:

And I, to make thee mad, do mock thee thus. Stamp, rave, and fret, that I may sing and dance.

Thou wouldst be fee'd, I see, to make me sport; York cannot speak unless he wear a crown— A crown for Yorkl—and, lords, bow low to

him;—
Hold you his hands whilst I do set it on.
[Putting a paper crown on his head.
Ay, marry, sir, now looks he like a king!
Ay, this is he that took King Henry's chair;
And this is he was his adopted heir.—

a brick wall have I climbed into this garden, to see if I can eat grass or pick a sallet another while, which is not amiss to cool a man's stomach this hot weather. And I think this word sallet was born to do me good: for many a time, but for a sallet, my brain-pan had been cleft with a brown bill; and many a time, when I have been dry, and hravely marching, it hath served me instead of a quart-pot to drink in; and now the word sallet must serve me to feed on.

Enfer IDEN, with Servants behind.

Iden. Lord, who would live turmoiled in the court.

And may enjoy such quiet walks as these? This small inheritance my father left me Contenteth me, and's worth a monarchy. I seek not to wax great by others' waning, Or gather wealth I care not with what envy: Sufficeth that I have maintains my state,

And sends the poor well pleased from my gate. Cade. Here's the lord of the soil come to seize me for a stray, for entering his fee-simple without leave. [Aside.] Ah, villain, thou wilt betray me, and get a thousand crowns of the king by carrying my head to him! but I'll make thee eat iron like an ostrich, and swallow my aword like a great pin, ere thou and I part.

Iden. Why, rude companion, whatso'er thou be, {thee? I know thee not; why, then, should I betray Is't not enough to hreak into my garden, And like a thief to come to rob my grounds, Climbing my walls in spite of me the owner,

But thou wilt brave me with these saucy terms? Cadc. Brave thee! ay, by the best blood that ever was broached, and beard thee too. Look on me well: I have eat no meat these five days; yet, come thou and thy five men, and if I do not leave you all as dead as a door nail, I pray God I may never eat grass more.

Iden. Nay, it shall ne'er be said, while England stands,

That Alexander Iden, an esquire of Kent, Took odds to combat a poor famish'd man. Oppose thy steadfast-gazing eyes to mine. See if thou canst outface me with thy looks: Set limb to limb, and thou art far the lesser;

Thy hand is but a finger to my fist;
Thy leg a stick compared with this truncheon;
My foot shall fight with all the strength thou hast;

And if mine arm be heaved in the air, Thy grave is digg'd already in the earth. As for words, whose greatness answers words,

Let this my sword report what speech forbears. Cade. By my valour, the most complete champion that ever I heard.—Steel, if thou turn the edge, or cut not out the burley-boned clown in chines of heef ere thou sleep in thy sheath, I beseech Jove, on my knees, thou mayest be turned to hobnails. [They fight, CADE falls.] O, I am slain! famine and no other hath slain me: let ten thonsand devils come against me, and give me but the ten meals I have lost, and I'd defy them all. Wither, garden; and be henceforth a burying-place to all that do dwell in this house, because the unconquered soul of Cade is fied.

Iden. Is't Cade that I have slain, that monstrous traitor?

Sword, I will hallow thee for this thy deed, And hang thee o'er my tomb when I am dead: Ne'er shall this blood be wiped from thy point; But thou shalt wear it as a herald's coat,

To emblaze the honour that thy master got. Cade. Iden, farewell; and be proud of thy victory. Tell Kent from me, she hath lost her best man; and exhort all the world to be cowards,—for I, that never feared any, am vanquished by famine, not by valour. [Dies. Iden. ACT V.

Scene L.—Fields between Dartford and Blackheath.

The King's Camp on one side. On the other, enter York attended, with drum and colours: his Forces at some distance.

York. From Ireland thus comes York to claim his right,

And pluck the crown from feeble Henry's head: Ring, bells, aloud; burn, bonfires, clear and bright;

To entertain great England's lawful king.
Ah, sancta majestas! who would not buy thee
dear?

Let them obey that know not how to rule; This hand was made to handle nanght but gold. I cannot give due action to my words Except a sword or sceptre balance it: A sceptre shell it have,—have I a soul,—On which I'll toss the flower-de-luce of France.

Enter BUCKINGHAM.

Whom have we here? Buckingham, to disturb me?

The king hath sent him, sure: I must dissemble.

[Aside.]

Buck. York, if thou meanest well, I greet thee well. [greeting. York. Humphrey of Buckingham, I accept thy Art thou a messenger or come of pleasure?

Art thou a messenger, or come of pleasure?

Buck. A messenger from Henry, our dead liege,

To know the reason of these arms in peace; Or why thou, being a subject as I am, Against the oath and true allegiance sworn, Shouldst raise so great a power without his

leave,
Or dare to bring thy force so near the court.
York. Scarce can I speak, my choler is so great:

O, I could hew up rocks and fight with flint,
I am so angry at these abject terms;
And now, like Ajax Telamonins,
On sheep or oven could I spend my fury!

Not separated with the racking clouds, But sever'd in a pale clear-shining sky. See, see! they join, embrace, and seem to kiss, As if they vow'd some league inviolable: Now are they but one lamp, one light, one sun. In this the heaven figures some event.

Edw. 'Tis wondrous strange, the like yet never heard of.

I think it cites us, brother, to the field,-That we, the sons of brave Plantagenet, Each one already blazing by our meeds, Should, notwithstanding, join our lights together,

And overshine the earth, as this the world. Whate'er it bodes, henceforward will I bear Upon my target three fair shining suns.

Rich. Nay, bear three daughters:—by your leave I speak it,

You love the breeder better than the male.

Enter a Messenger.

But what art thou, whose heavy looks foretell Some dreadful story hanging on thy tongue? Mess. Ah, one that was a woeful looker-on Whenas the noble Duke of York was slain, Your princely father and my loving lord!

Edw. O, speak no more! for I have heard too much.

Rich. Say how he died, for I will hear it all. Mess. Environed he was with many foes; And stood against them as the hope of Troy Against the Greeks that would have enter'd Troy.

But Hercules himself must yield to odds; And many strokes, though with a little axe, Hew down and fell the hardest-timber'd oak. By many hands your father was subdu'd; But only slaughter'd by the ireful arm Of unrelenting Clifford, and the queen,— Who crown'd the gracious duke in high de-

Laugh'd in his face; and when with grief he The ruthless queen gave him to dry his cheeks A napkin steeped in the harmless blood Of sweet young Rutland, by rough Clifford slain:

And after many scorns, many foul taunts, They took his nead, and on the gates of York . They set the same; and there it doth remain, The saddest spectacle that e'er I view'd.

Edw. Sweet Duke of York, our prop to lean upon,-Now thou art gone, we have no staff, no stay!-O Clifford, boisterous Clifford, thou hast slain The flower of Europe for his chivalry; And treacherously hast thou vanquish'd him, For hand to hand he would have vanquish'd thee! Now my soul's palace is become a prison: Ah, would she break from hence, that this my body Might in the ground be closed up in rest! For never henceforth shall I joy again, Never, O never shall I see more joy.

Rich. I cannot weep; for all my body's [heart: moisture Scarce serves to quench my furnace-burning Nor can my tongue unload my heart's great | Our soldiers'—like the night-owl's lazy flight, burden;

For self-same wind that I should speak withel Is kindling coals, that fire all my breast, And burn me up with flames, that tears would quench.

To weep is to make less the depth of grief: Tears, then, for babes; blows and revenge for me!-

Richard, I bear thy name; I'll venge thy death. Or die renowned by attempting it.

Edw. His name that valiant duke hath left with thee;

His dukedom and his chair with me is left. Rich. Nay, if thou be that princely eagle's bird,

Show thy descent by gazing 'gainst the sun: For chair and dukedom, throne and kingdom

Either that is thine, or else thou wert not his.

Enter WARWICK and MONTAGUE March. with Forces.

War. How now, fair lords! What fare? what news abroad? recount Rich. Great Lord of Warwick, if we should Our baleful news, and at each word's deliverance

Stab poniards in our flesh till all were told, The words would add more anguish than the wounds.

O valiant lord, the Duke of York is slain! Edw. O Warwick, Warwick! that Plantagenet

Which held thee dearly as his soul's redemption

Is by the stern Lord Clifford done to death. War. Ten days ago I drown'd these news in

And now, to add more measure to your woes, I come to tell you things since then befall'n. After the bloody fray at Wakefield fought, Where your brave father breath'd his latest

Tidings, as swiftly as the posts could run, Were brought me of your loss and his depart. I, then in London, keeper of the king, Muster'a my soldiers, gather'd flocks of friends. And very well appointed, as I thought, March'd towards Saint Albans to intercept the queen, Bearing the king in my behalf along; For by my scouts I was advertised That she was coming with a full intent To dash our late decree in parliament Touching King Henry's oath and your succession.

Short tale to make,—we at St. Albans met, Our battles join'd, and both sides fiercely fought:

But whether 'twas the coldness of the king, Who look'd full gently on his warlike queen, That robb'd my soldiers of their heated spleen; Or whether 'twas report of her success; Or more than common fear of Clifford's rigour, Who thunders to his captives, Blood and death, I cannot judge: but, to conclude with truth, Their weapons like to lightning came and went;

Or like a lazy thrasher with a flail,-

K. Hen. Ay, Clifford; a bedlam and ambitious humour

Makes him oppose himself against his king.

Clif. He is a traitor; let him to the Tower,

And chop away that factious pate of his.

O. Mar. He is arrested, but will not obey;
His sons, be says, sball give their words for him.

York. Will you not, sons?

York. Will you not, sons?

Edw. Ay, noble father, if our words will serve.

Rich. And if words will not, then our weapons

York. Look in a glass, and call thy image so: I am thy king, and thon a false-beart traitor.—Call hither to the stake my two brave bears, That with the very shaking of their chains They may astonish these fell-larking curs: Bid Salisbury and Warwick come to me.

Drums. Enter WARWICK and SALISBURY, with Forces.

Clif. Are these thy bears? we'll bait thy bears to death,

And manacle the bear-ward in their chains, If thou dar'st bring them to the baiting-place. Rich. Oft have I seen a bot o'erweening cur Rnn back and bite, because he was withheld; Who, being suffer'd with the bear's fell paw, Hath clapp'd his tail between his legs and cried: And such a piece of service will you do, If you oppose yourselves to match Lord Warwick.

Clif. Hence, heap of wrath, foul indigested lump,

As crooked in thy manners as thy shape!

York. Nay, we shall heat you thoroughly fore. May, we shall heat you thoroughly anon.

Clif. Take heed, lest by your heat you burn

Jourselves. [to bow?— K. Hen. Why, Warwick, hath thy knee forgot Old Salisbury,—shame to thy silver hair, Thon mad misleader of thy brainsick son!—

Thon mad misleader of thy brainsick son!—
What, wilt thou on thy death-bed play the ruffian.

And seek for sorrow with thy spectacles?—
O, where is faith? O, where is loyalty?
If it be banish'd from the frosty bead,
Where shall it find a harbour in the earth?
Wilt thou go dig a grave to find out war,
And shame thine honourable age with blood?
Why art thou old, and want'st experience?
Or wherefore dost abuse it, if thou hast it?

For shame! in duty bend thy knee to me, That bows unto the grave with mickle age. Szl. My lord, I have consider'd with myself The title of this most renowned duke; And in my conscience do repute his grace

The rightful heir to England's royal seat.

K. Hen. Hast thou not sworn allegiance unto me?

Sal. I have. [for such an oath? K. Hen. Canst thou dispense with heaven Sal. It is great sin to swear unto a sin:

Sal. It is great sin to swear unto a sin;
But greater sin to keep a sinful oath.
Who can be bound by any solemn vow
To do a murderons deed, to rob a man,
To force a spotless virgin's chastity,
To reave the orphan of his patrimony,
To wring the widow from her custom'd right;
And have no other reason for this wrong
But that he was bound by a solemn oath?

O. Mar. A subtle traitor needs no sophister. K. Hen. Call Buckingham, and bid him arm himself. (thon hast, York. Call Buckingham, and all the friends

I am resolv'd for death or dignity. [true. Clif. The first I warrant thee, if dreams prove War. You were best to go to bed and dream

again,
To keep thee from the tempest of the field.
Clif. I am resolv'd to bear a greater storm
Than any thou canst conjure up to-day;
And that I'll write upon thy bargonet,

Might I but know thee by thy household badge.

War. Now, by my father's badge, old Hevil's crest.

The rampant bear chain'd to the ragged staff, This day I'll wear aloft my burgonet,—As on a mountain-top the cedar shows, That keeps his leaves in spite of any storm,—Even to affright thee with the view thereof.

To quell the rebels and their complices. [spite,
Rich. Fiel charity, for shame! speak not in
For you shall sup with Jesu Christ to-night.

Y. Clif. Foul stigmatic, that's more than thou canst tell.

Rich. If not in heaven, you'll surely sup in hell. (Excunt severally.

Alarums; excursions. Enter WARWICK.

War. Clifford of Cumberland, 'tis Warwick calls!

And if thou dost not hide thee from the bear, Now,—when the angry trumpet sounds alarum, And dead men's cries do fill the empty air,—Clifford, I say, come forth and fight with mel Proud northern lord, Clifford of Cumberland, Warwick is boarse with calling thee to arms.

Enfer YORK.

How now, my noble lord! what, all a-foot?

York. The deadly-handed Clifford slew my steed;

But match to match I have encounter'd him, And made a prey for carrion kites and crows Even of the bonny beast he lov'd so well.

Enter LORD CLIFFORD.

War. Of one or both of us the time is come York. Hold, Warwick, seek thee out some other chase,

For I myself must bunt this deer to death.

War. Then, nobly, York; 'tis for a crown thon fight'st.—

As I intend, Clifford, to thrive to-day,
It grieves my soul to leave thee unassail'd.

[Exit. Clij. What see'st thou in me, York? why dost thou pause? [love, K. Hen. Why, that's my fortune too; therefore I'll stay.

North. Be it with resolution, then, to fight. Prince. My royal father, cheer these noble lords,

And hearten those that fight in your defence: Unsheathe your sword, good father; cry, Saint George!

March. Enter Edward, George, Richard MONTAGUE, and WARWICK, NORFOLK, Soldiers.

Edw. Now, perjur'd Henry! wilt thou kneel for grace, And set thy disdem upon my head; Or bide the mortal fortune of the field?

SCENE, -During part of the Third Act in FRANCE; during the rest of the Play in ENGLAND.

ACT I.

Scene I.—London. The Parliament House.

Drums. Some Soldiers of York's Party break in. Then enter the Duke of York, Edward, Richard, Korfolk, Montague, Warwick, and others, with white roses in their hats.

War. I wonder how the king escap'd our hands.

Fork. While we pursu'd the horsemen of the north,

He slily stole away, and left his men:
Whereat the great Lord of Northumberland,
Whose warlike ears could never brook retreat,
Cheer'd up the drooping army; and himself,
Lord Clifford, and Lord Stafford, all a-breast, Charg'd our main battle's front, and, breaking in,
Were by the swords of common soldiers slain.
Edw. Lord Stafford's father, Duke of Buckingham,

Suppose this arm is for the Duke of York, And this for Rutland; both bound to revenge, Wert thou environ'd with a brazen wall.

Clif. Now, Richard, I am with thee here alone:

This is the hand that stabb'd thy father York; And this the hand that slew thy brother Rutland

And here's the heart that triumphs in their death.

And cheers these hands that slew thy sire and brother

To execute the like upon thyself;

And so, have at thee!

They fight. WAR. enters; CLIF. flies. Rich. Nay, Warwick, single out some other chase:

For I myself will hunt this wolf to death. [Exeunt.]

Scene V .- Another part of the Field. Alarum. Enter King Henry.

K. Hen. This bettle fares like to the morning's war,

When dying clouds contend with growing light. What time the shepherd, blowing of his nails, Can neither call it perfect day nor night. Now sways it this way, like a mighty sea Forc'd by the tide to combat with the wind: Now sways it that way, like the selfsame sea Forc'd to retire by fury of the wind: Sometime the flood prevails, and then the wind; Now one the better, then another best; Both tugging to be victors, breast to breast, Yet neither conqueror nor conquered: So is the equal poise of this fell war. Here on this molehill will I sit me down To whom God will, there be the victory! For Margaret my queen, and Clifford too. Have chid me from the battle; swearing both They prosper best of all when I am thence. Would I were dead! if God's good will were so; For what is in this world but grief and woe? O God! methinks it were a happy life To be no better than a homely swain; To sit upon a hill, as I do now, To carve out dials quaintly, point by point, Thereby to see the minutes how they run, How many make the hour full complete; How many hours bring about the day; How many days will finish up the year; How many years a mortal man may live. When this is known, then to divide the times,-So many hours must I tend my flock; So many hours must I take my rest; So many hours must I contemplate; So many hours must I sport myself; So many days my ewes have been with young; So many weeks ere the poor fools will yean; So many years ere I shall shear the fleece: So minutes, hours, days, months, and years, Pass'd over to the end they were created, Would bring white hairs unto a quiet grave. Ah, what a life were this! how sweet! how lovely! Gives not the hawthorn bush a sweeter shade To shepherds, looking on their silly sheep, Than doth a rich embroider'd canopy To kings that fear subjects' treachery?

O, yes, it doth; a thousand-fold it doth. And to conclude, -the shepherd's homely curds.

His cold thin drink out of his leather bottle, His wonted sleep under a fresh tree's shade, All which secure and sweetly he enjoys, Is far beyond a prince's delicates, His viands sparkling in a golden cup, His body couched in a curious bed, When care, mistrust, and treason weit on him.

Alarum. Enter a Son that has killed his Father, bringing in the dead body.

Son. Ill blows the wind that profits nobody, This man, whom hand to hand I slew in fight. May be possessed with some store of crowns: And I, that haply take them from him now, May yet ere night yield both my life and them To some man else, as this dead man doth me.-Who's this?-O God! it is my father's face, Whom in this conflict I unwares have kill'd. O heavy times, begetting such events! From London by the king was I press'd forth: My father, being the Earl of Warwick's man, Came on the part of York, press'd by his master; And I, who at his hands receiv'd my life, Have by my hands of life bereaved him. Pardon me, God, I knew not what I did!-And pardon, father, for I knew not thee!-My tears shall wipe away these bloody marks; And no more words till they have flow'd their

K. Hen. O piteous spectacle! O bloody times! Whilst lions war, and battle for their dens, Poor harmless lambs abide their enmity.-Weep, wretched man, I'll aid thee tear for tear; And let our hearts and eyes, like civil war, Be blind with tears, and break o'ercharg'd with grief.

Enter a Father that has killed his Son, with the body in his arms.

Fath. Thou that so stoutly hast resisted me, Give me thy gold, if thou hast any gold; For I have bought it with an hundred blows. But let me see: is this our foeman's face? Ah, no, no, no, it is mine only son! Ah, boy, if any life be left in thee, [arise, Throw up thine eye! see, see what showers Blown with the windy tempest of my heart, Upon thy wounds, that kill mine eye and

O pity, God, this miserable age!— What stratagems, how fell, how butcherly, Erroneous, mutinous, and unnatural, This deadly quarrel daily doth beget!-O boy, thy father gave thee life too soon, And hath bereft thee of thy life too late!

K. Hen. Woe above woe! grief more than [deeds!common grief! O that my death would stay these ruthful O pity, pity, gentle heaven, pity!-The red rose and the white are on his face, The fatal colours of our striving houses: The one his purple blood right well resembles; The other his pale cheeks, methinks, presenteth:

And made him to resign his crown perforce. War. Suppose, my lords, he did it unconstrain'd.

But you are more inhuman, more inexorable,— O, ten times more,—than tigers of Hyrcania. See, ruthless queen, a hapless father's tears: This cloth thou dipp'dst in blood of my sweet hov.

And I with tears do wash the blood away.
Keep thou the napkin, and go hoast of this:
[He gives back the handkerchief.
And if thou tell'st the heavy story right,
Upon my soul, the hearers will shed tears;
Yea, even my foes will shed fast-falling tears,
And say, Alos, it was a pitcous deed!—

And in thy need such comfort come to thee
As now I reap at thy too cruel hand!—

Hard-hearted Clifford, take me from the world:

My soul to heaven, my blood upon your heads!

North. Had he been slaughter-man to all my kin,
I should not for my life hut weep with him,

To see how inly sorrow gripes his soul.

Q. Mar. What, weeping-ripe, my Lord Northumberland?

Northumberland? Think but upon the wrong he did us all, And that will quickly dry thy melting tears.

Clif. Here's for my oath, here's for my father's death. [Stabbing him. Q. Mar. And here's to right our gentle-hearted king. [Stabbing him. York. Open thy gate of mercy, gracious God!

My soul flies through these wounds to seek out thee.

Q. Mar. Off with his head, and set it on York gates;

So York may overlook the town of York. [Flourish, Exeunf.

ACT II.

Scene I.—A plain near Mortimer's Cross in Herefordshire.

Drums. Enter EDWARD and RICHARD, with their Forces, morching.

Edw. I wonder how our princely father 'scap'd,

Or whether he be 'scap'd away or no From Cüfford's and Northumberland's pursuit: Had he been ta'en we should have heard the news; [news;

Had he been slain we should have heard the Or had he 'scap'd, methinks we should have heard

The happy tidings of his good escape.—
How fares my brother? why is he so sad?
Rich. I cannot joy, until I be resolv'd
Where our right valuant father is become.
I saw him in the battle range about;
And watch'd him how he singled Clifford forth.
Methought he hore him in the thickest troop
As doth a lion in a herd of neet;
Or as a hear, encompass'd round with dogs,—
Who having pinch'd a few, and made them cry,

Who naving putch a a rew, and made them of the rest stand all aloof and bark at him. So far'd our father with his enemies; So fled his enemies my warlike father: Methinks 'tis prize enough to he his con.—See how the morning ope's her golden gates, And takes her farewell of the glorious sun! How well resembles it the prime of youth,

Trimm'd like a younker prancing to his love!

Edw. Dazzle mine eyes, or do I see three suns?

Rich. Three glorious suns, each one a perfect sun;

I am commanded, with your leave and favour, Humbly to kiss your hand, and with my tongue To tell the passion of my sovereign's heart; Where fame, late entering at his heedful ears, Hath plac'd thy beauty's image and thy virtue.

Q. Mar. King Louis,—and Lady Bona,— hear me speak, Before you answer Warwick. His demand Springs not from Edward's well-meant honest love,

But from deceit hred hy necessity;
For how can tyrants safely govern home
Unless abroad they purchase great alliance?
To prove him tyrant, this reason may suffice,—
That Henry liveth still; but were he dead, Yet here Prince Edward stands, King Henry's son.
Look therefore. Louis, that by this league and Look therefore, Louis, that by this league and Thou draw not on thy danger and dishonour; For though usurpers sway the rule awhile, Yet heavens are just, and time suppresseth wrongs.

War. Injurious Margaret!
Prince. And why not queen?
War. Because thy father Henry did nsurp;
And thou no more art prince than she is queen.
Oxf. Then Warwick disannuls great John of

Gaunt,
Which did suhdue the greatest part of Spain;
And, after John of Gaunt, Henry the Fourth,
Whose wisdom was a mirror to the wisest;
And, after that wise prince, Henry the Fifth,
Who by his prowess conquered all France:
From these our Henry lineally descends.

Wer. Oxford, how haps it, in this smooth

discourse,

You told not how Henry the Sixth hath lost All that which Henry the Fifth had gotten? Methinks these peers of France should smile at that.

But for the rest,—you tell a pedigree Of threescore and two years; a silly time To make prescription for a kingdom's worth.

Ozf. Why, Warwick, canst thou speak against thy liege, Whom thou obey'dst thirty and six years, And not bewray thy treason with a blush?

War. Can Oxford, that did ever fence the right,

Now huckler falsehood with a pedigree? For shame I leave Henry, and call Edward king. Oxf. Call him my king hy whose injurious doom

My elder brother, the Lord Auhrey Vere, Was done to death? and more than so, my father,

Even in the downfall of his mellow'd years,

When nature hrought him to the door of death?

No. Warwick, no; while life upholds this arm,

This arm upholds the house of Lancaster.

War. And I the house of York.

K. Lou. Queen Margaret, Prince Edward,
and Oxford,

Vouchsafe, at our request, to stand aside While I use further conference with Warwick. Q. Mar. Heavens grant that Warwick's words bewitch him not!

[Retiring with the PRINCE and OXF.

K. Lou. Now, Warwick, tell me, even upon thy conscience,

Is Edward your true king? for I were loth
To link with him that were not lawful chosen.
War. Thereon I pawn my credit and mine honour.

K. Lou. But is he gracious in the people's War. The more that Henry was unfortunate. K. Lou. Then further,—all dissembling set aside,—

Tell me for truth the measure of his love

Unto our sister Bona.

War.

Such it seems
As may be seem a monarch like himself.
Myself have often heard him say, and swear,
That this love was an eternal plant,

Whereof the root was fix'd in virtue's ground, The leaves and fruit maintain'd with beauty's snn:

Exempt from envy, but not from disdain, Unless the Lady Bona quit his pain. (s

K. Lou. Now, sister, let us hear your firm re-Bona. Your grant or your denial shall be mine:—

Yet I confess [to WAR.] that often ere this day, When I have heard your king's desert reconnted.

Mine ear hath tempted judgment to desire.

K. Lou. Then, Warrick, thus,—Our sister shall be Edward's:

And now forthwith shall articles be drawn Touching the jointure that your king must make Which with her dowry shall be counterpois'd.—Draw near, Queen Margaret, and he a witness That Bona shall be wife to the English king.

Prince. To Edward, hut not to the English

Q. Mar. Deceitful Warwick! it was thy device

By this alliance to make void my suit: Before thy coming, Louis was Henry's friend.

K. Lou. And still is friend to him and Margaret:
But if your title to the crown be weak,—
As may appear by Edward's good success,—

Then 'tis but reason that I he releas'd
From giving aid which late I promised.
Yet shall you have all kindness at my hand
That your estate requires and mine can yield:
War. Henry now lives in Scotland at his ease,

Where having nothing, nothing can he lose, a And as for you yourself, our quondam queen, You have a father able to maintain you; And better 'twere you tronbled him than

France.

Q. Mar. Peace, impudent and shameless
Warwick,—

Proud setter-up and puller-down of kings!
I will not hence till, with my talk and tears,
Both full of truth, I made King Louis behold
Thy sly conveyance, and thy lord's false love;
For hoth of you are birds of self-same feather.

[A horn sounded within. K. Lou. Warwick, this is some post to us or

thee.

Mess. My lord ambassador, these letters are for you,
Sent from your hrother, Marquis Montague:
These from our king unto your majesty:

Fell gently down, as if they struck their friends. I cheer'd them up with justice of our cause, With promise of high pay and great rewards: But all in vain; they had no heart to fight, And we in them no hope to win the day; So that we fled; the king unto the queen; Lord George, your brother, Norfolk, and myself.

In haste, post-haste, are come to join with you; For in the marches here we heard you were Making another head to fight again.

And when came George from Burgundy to Eng-War. Some six miles off the duke is with the soldiers;

And for your brother, he was lately sent From your kind aunt, Duchess of Burgundy, With aid of soldiers to this needful war. Rich. 'Twas odds, belike, when valiant War-

Were he as famous and as bold in war As he ls fam'd for mildness, peace, and prayer. Rich. I know it well, Lord Warwick; blame me not:

'Tis love I hear thy glories makes me speak.
But ln this troublous time what's to be done?
Shall we go throw away our coats of steel.
And wrap our hodies in black mourning-gowns,
Kumbering our Ave-Maries with our beads?
Or shall we on the helmets of our foes
Tell our devotion with revengeful arms?
If for the last, say Ay, and to it, lords.

War. Why, therefore Warwick came to seek you out:

And therefore comes my brother Montague.
Attend me, lords. The proud insulting queen,
With Clifford and the haught Northumberland,
And of their feather many more proud birds,
Have wrought the easy-melting king like wax.
He swore consent to your succession,
His oath enrolled in the parliament;
And now to London all the erew are gone,
To frustrate both his oath and what beside

Their power, I think, is thirty thousand strong;
Now if the help of Norfolk and myself,
With all the friends that thou, brave Earl of March,

Amongst the loving Weishmen canst procure,
Will hut amount to five-and-twenty thousand,
Why, Kia! to London will we march amain;
And once again bestride our foaming steeds,
And once again ery, Charge npon our foes!
But never once again turn back and fly.

Rich. Ay, now methinks I hear great Warwick speak:

Ne'er may he live to see a sunshine day
That cries Retire, if Warwick hid him stay.

Edw. Lord Warwick, on thy shoulder will I

The next degree is England's royal throne; For King of England shalt thou he proclaim'd In every borough as we pass along; And he that throws not up his cap for joy, Shall for the fault make forfeit of his head. King Edward,—valiant Richard,—Montague,—Stay we no longer, dreaming of renown, But sound the trumpets and about our task. Rich. Then, Clifford, were thy heart as hard

As thou hast shown it flinty by thy deeds,—
I come to pierce it,—or to give thee mine.

Scene II .- Before York.

Flourish. Enter King Henry, Queen Mar-Garet, the Prince of Wales, Clifford, and Northumberland, with Forces.

Q. Mar. Welcome, my lord, to this brave town of York.

Yonder's the head of that arch-enemy That sought to be encompass'd with your crown: Doth not the object cheer your heart, my lord? K. Hen. Ay, as the rocks cheer them that fear their wreck:—

To see this sight, it irks my very soul.—
Withhold revenge, dear God! 'tis not my fault,

Nor wittingly have I infring'd my vow. Clif. My gracious liege, this too much lenity And harmful pity must be laid aside. To whom do lions cast their gentle looks? Not to the beast that would usurp their den Whose hand is that the forest bear doth lick? Not his that spoils her young before her face. Who scapes the lurking serpent's mortal sting? Not he that sets his foot upon her back. The smallest worm will turn, being trodden on, And doves will peck in safeguard of their broad. Ambitious York did level at thy crown, Thou smiling while he knit his angry brows: He, but a duke, would have his son a king, And raise his issue, like a loving sire; Thou, being a king, bless'd with a goodly son, Didst yield consent to disinherit him, Which argu'd thee a most unloving father. How could he stay till Warwick made return? Som. My lords, forbear this talk; here comes the king.

Glo. And his well-chosen bride.

Clar. I mind to tell him plainly what I think.

Flourish. Enter KING EDWARD, attended; LADY GREY, as Queen; PEMEROKE, STAF-FORD, HASTINGS, and others.

K. Edw. Now, brother of Clarence, how like you our choice,

That you stand pensive, as half malcontent? Clar. As well as Louis of France or the Earl of Warwick;

Glo. And Warwick, doing what you gave in charge,

Is now dishonoured by this new marriage. K. Edw. What if both Louis and Warwick be appeas'd

By such invention as I can devise?

Mont. Yet to have join'd with France in such alliance \ wealth Would more have strengthen'd this our common-'Gainst foreign storms than any home-bred marriage.

Hast. Why, knows not Montague that of England is safe, if true within itself?

Mont. But the safer when 'tis back'd with France.

Hast. 'Tis better using France than trusting

France: Let us be back'd with God, and with the seas Which he hath given for fence impregnable, And with their helps only defend ourselves;

In them and in ourselves our safety lies.

Clar. For this one speech Lord Hastings well deserves

To have the heir of the Lord Hungerford. K. Edw. Ay, what of that? it was my will and grant;

And for this once my will shall stand for law. For I have heard that she was there in place.

Glo. And yet methinks your grace hath not done well.

To give the heir and daughter of Lord Scales Unto the brother of your loving bride; She better would have fitted me or Clarence:

But in your bride you bury brotherhood. Clar. Or else you would not have bestow'd the heir

Of the Lord Bonville on your new wife's son, And leave your brothers to go speed elsewhere. K. Edw. Alas, poor Clarencel is it for a wife

That thou art malcontent? I will provide thee. Clar. In choosing for yourself you show'd your judgment.

Which being shallow, you shall give me leave To play the broker in mine own behalf; And to that end I shortly mind to leave you.

K. Edw. Leave me or tarry, Edward will be king,

And not be tied unto his brother's will. Q. Eliz. My lords, before it pleas'd bis majesty

To raise my state to title of a queen, Do me but right, and you must all confess . That I was not ignoble of descent;

And meaner than myself have had like fortune. But as this title honours me and mine, So your dislikes, to whom I would be pleasing,

Do cloud my joys with danger and with sorrow. K. Edw. My love, forbear to fawn upon their frowns:

What danger or what sorrows can befall thee, So long as Edward is thy constant friend ... And their true sovereign, whom they must Go tell false Edward, thy supposed king, That Louis of France is sending over masquers To revel it with him and his new bride. K. Edw. Is Louis so brave? belike he thinks

But what said Lady Bona to my marriage? Mess. These were her words, utter'd with mild disdain:

Enter RICHARD.

Rich. Ah, Werwick, why hest thou with-drawn thyself? Thy brother's blood the thirsty earth hath drunk, Broach'd with the steely point of Clifford's lance: And in the very pangs of death he cried, Like to a dismal clangor heard from far,

Warwick, revenge! brother, revenge my death! So, underneath the belly of their steeds. That stain'd their fetlocks in his smoking blood, The noble gentleman gave up the ghost.

Wer. Then let the earth be drunken with our blood:

I'll kill my horse, because I will not fly. Why stand we like soft-hearted women here, Wailing our losses, whiles the foe doth rage; And look upon, as if the tragedy Were play'd in jest by counterfeiting actors? Here on my knee I vow to God above I'll never pause again, never stand still, Till either death hath clos'd these eyes of mine

Or fortune given me measure of revenge.

Rich. Brother, give me thy hand; and, gentle Warwick,

Let me embrace thee in my weary arms: I, that did never weep, now melt with woe That winter should cut off our spring-time so.

Wer. Away, away! Once more, sweet lords, farewell. Geo. Yet let us all together to our troops, And give them leave to fly that will not stay; And call them pillers that will stand to us; And if we thrive, promise them such rewards As victors wear at the Olympian games: This may plant courage in their quailing breasts; For yet is hope of life and victory .-Forslow no longer, make we hence amain. Edw. Now hreathe we, lords: good fortune bids us pause, [looks.— And smooth the frowns of war with peaceful Some troops pursue the bloody-minded queen, That led calm Henry, though he were a king, As doth a sail, fill'd with a fretting gust, Command an argosy to stem the waves.

But think you, lords, that Clifford fied with them?

War. No, 'tis impossible he should escape; For, though hefore his face I speak the words, Your brother Richard mark'd him for the gravo: And, whereso'er he is, he's surely dead.

Oxf. Ay, for if Edward repossess the crown 'Tis like that Richmond with the rest shall down.

Som. It shall be so; he shall to Brittany. Come, therefore, let's about it speedily.

Scene VII. - Before York.

Enter KING EDWARD, GLOSTER, HASTINGS and Forces.

K. Edw. Now, brother Richard, Lord Hastings, and the rest.

Yet thus far fortune maketh us amends, And says that once more I shall interchange My waned state for Henry's regal crown. Well have we pass'd, and now repass'd the seas And brought desired help from Burgundy. What, then, remains, we being thus arriv'd From Ravenspurg haven before the gates of York,

But that we enter, as into our dukedom? Glo. The gates made fast!—Brother, I like not this;

For many men that stumble at the threshold Are well foretold that danger lurks within.

K. Edw. Tush, man, abodements must not now affright us:

By fair or foul means we must enter in, For hither will our friends repair to us. 'Hast. My liege, I'll knock once more to summon them.

Enter, on the Walls, the Mayor of York and Aldermen.

May. My lords, we were forewarned of your coming,

And shut the gates for safety of ourselves; For now we owe allegiance unto Henry

K. Edw. But, master mayor, if Henry be your king,

Yet Edward at the least is Duke of York. May. True, my good lord; I know you for no less.

K. Edw. Why, and I challenge nothing but my dukedom;

As being well content with that alone. [nose, Glo. But when the fox hath once got in his He'll soon find means to make the body follow. Aside. Hast. Why, master mayor, why stand you in a doubt?

Open the gates, we are King Henry's friends. May. Ay, say you so? the gates shall then be open'd. [Exeunt from above. Glo. A wise stout captain, and soon per-

K. Edw. So, master mayor: these gates must not be shut But in the night or in the time of war.

Whatl fear not, man, but yield me up the keys; Takes his keys. For Edward will defend the town and thee, And all those friends that deign to follow me.

K. Edw. Thanks, good Montgomery; but we now forget

Our title to the crown, and only claim Our dukedom till God please to send the rest. Mont. Then fare you well, for I will hence again:

I came to serve a king, and not a duke.-Drummer, strike up, and let us march away. A march begun.

K. Edw. Nay, stay, Sir John, awhile; and we'll debate

By what safe means the crown may be recovid. Mont. What talk you of debating? in few words,

If you'll not here proclaim yourself our king, I'll leave you to your fortune, and be gone To keep them back that come to succour you: Why should we fight, if you pretend no title? Glo. Why, brother, wherefore stand you on nice points? K. Edw. When we grow stronger, then we'll make our claim: Till then, 'tis wisdom to conceal our meaning. Hast. Away with scrupulous witl now arms must rule. Glo. And fearless minds_climb soonest unto crowns.

Brother, we will proclaim you out of hand; The bruit thereof will bring you many friends. K. Edw. Then be it as you will; for 'tis my right,

And Henry but usurps the diadem.

Mont. Ay, now my sovereign speaketh like himself;

And now will I be Edward's champion. Hast. Sound trumpet; Edward shall be here proclaim'd:-

Come, fellow-soldier, make thou proclamation. [Gives him a paper. Flourish. K. Hen. More than I seem, and less than I was horn to:

Confess who set thee up and pluck'd thee down, Call Warwick patron, and be penitent?

And thou shalt still remain the Duke of York. Glo. I thought, at least, he would have said the king;

Or did he make the jest against his will? War. Is not a dukedom, sir, a goodly gift? Glo. Ay, by my faith, for a poor earl to give: I'll do thee service for so good a gift.

War. 'Twas I that gave the kingdom to thy brother. K. Edw. Why, then, 'tis mine, if but by Warwick's gift.

War. Thou art no Atlas for so great a weight: And, weakling, Warwick takes his gift again;

And Henry is my king, Warwick his subject.

War. And lo, where George of Clarence sweeps along,

Of force enough to bid his brother battle; With whom an upright zeal to right prevails. More than the nature of a brother's love!-Come, Clarence, come; thou wilt, if Warwick call.

Clar. Father of Warwick, know you what this means?

[Taking the red rose out of his hat. Look here, I throw my infamy at thee: I will not ruinate my father's house, Who gave his blood to lime the stones together, And set up Lancaster. Why, trowst thou, Warwick,

That Clarence is so harsh, so blunt, unnatural, To bend the fatal instruments of war Against his brother and his lawful king? Perhaps thou wilt object my holy oath: To keep that oath were more implety Than Jephtha's, when he sacrific'd his daughter. I am so sorry for my trespass made, That, to deserve well at my brother's hands, I here proclaim myself thy mortal foe; With resolution where soe'er I meet thee,-As I will meet thee, if thou stir abroad,-To plague thee for thy foul misleading me. And so, proud-hearted Warwick, I defy thee, And to my brother turn my blushing cheeks. Pardon me, Edward, I will make amends;

What other pleasure can the world afford? I'll make my heaven in a lady's lap, And deck my body in gay ornaments, And witch sweet ladies with my words and looks. O miserable thoughtl and more unlikely Than to accomplish twenty golden crownsl Why, love forswore me in my mother's womb: And, for I should not deal in her soft laws, She did corrupt frail nature with some bribe, To shrink mine arm up like a wither'd shrub; To make an envious mountain on my back, Where sits deformity to mock my body; To shape my legs of an unequal size: To disproportion me in every part, Like to a chaos, or an unlick'd bear-whelp That carries no impression like the dam. And am I, then, a man to be belov'd? O monstrous fault, to harbour such a thought! Then, since this earth affords no joy to me But to command, to check, to o'erbear such As are of better person than myself, I'll make my heaven to dream upon the crown, And whiles I live to account this world but bell, Until my misshap'd trunk that bears this head Be round empaled with a glorious crown. And yet I know not how to get the crown, For many lives stand between me and home: And I .- like one lost in a thorny wood, That rents the thorns, and is rent with the thorns, Seeking a way, and straying from the way; Not knowing how to find the open air, But toiling desperately to find it out,-Torment myself to catch the English crown: And from that torment I will free myself, Or hew my way out with a bloody axe. Why, I can smile, and murder whiles I smile; And cry content to that which grieves my heart; While we bethink a means to break it off. And wet my cheeks with artificial tears, And frame my face to all occasions. I'll drown more sailors than the mermaid shell; I'll slay more gazers than the basilisk; I'll play the orator as well as Nestor; Deceive more slily than Ulysses could; And, like a Sinon, take another Troy: I can add colours to the cameleon; Change shapes with Proteus for advantages; And set the murderous Machiavel to school. Can'I do this, and cannot get a crown? Tut, were it further off, I'll pluck it down! (Exit. , .

Scene III.-France. A Room in the Palace.

Flourish. Enter Louis, the French King, and LADY BONA, attended; the King takes his state. Then enter QUEEN MARGARET, PRINCE EDWARD her Son, and the EARL OF OXFORD.

K. Lou. Fair Queen of England, worthy Margaret, Rising. Sit down with us: it ill befits thy state

And therefore I'll uncrown him ere't be long. There's thy reward: be gone. Exit Mess.

But, Warwick, K. Lou. Thou and Oxford, with five thousand men, Shall cross the seas, and bid false Edward battle: And, as occasion serves, this noble queen And prince shall follow with a fresh supply. Yet, ere thou go, but answer me one doubt,-What pledge have we of thy firm loyalty?

War. This shall assure my constant loyalty,-

That if our queen and this young prince agree I'll join mine eldest daughter, and my joy, To him forthwith in holy wedlock-bands.

Q. Mar. Yes, I agree, and thank you for your motion.

Son Edward, she is fair and virtuous, Therefore delay not,-give thy hand to Warwick;

And, with thy band, thy faith irrevocable, That only Warwick's daughter shall be thine. Prince. Yes, I accept her, for she well deserves it; And here to pledge my vow, I give my hand.

[He gives his hand to WARWICK. K. Lou. Why stay we now? These soldiers shall be levied,

And thou, Lord Bourbon, our high-admiral, Shall waft them over with our royal fleet .-I long till Edward fall by war's mischance, For mocking marriage with a dame of France.

Exeunt all but WARWICK. War. I come from Edward as ambassador, But I return his sworn and mortal foe: Matter of marriage was the charge he gave me, But dreadful war shall answer his demand. Had he none else to make a stale but me? Then none but I shall turn his jest to sorrow. I was the chief that rais'd him to the crown, And I'll be chief to bring him down again: Not that I pity Henry's misery, But seek revenge on Edward's mockery.

Enter GLOSTER, CLARENCE SOMERSET. MONTAGUE, and others.

Glo. Now tell me, brother Clarence, what think you

Of this new marriage with the Lady Grey? Hath not our brother made a worthy choice?

K. Hen. Hadst thou been kill'd when first thou didst presume, Thou hadst not liv'd to kill a son of mine. And thus I prophesy,—that many a thousand, Which now mistrust no parcel of my fear, And many an old man's sigh, and many a widow's, And many an orphan's water-standing eye,-Men for their sons, wives for their hushands, And orphans for their parents' timeless death,-Shall rue the hour that ever thou wast born. The owl shriek'd at thy birth,—an evil sign; The night-crow cried, aboding luckless time; Dogs howl'd, and hideous tempest shook down

But say, is Warwick friends with Margaret? Mess. Ay, gracious sovereign; they are so link'd in friendship

 That young Prince Edward marries Warwick's daughter.

Clar. Belike the elder; Clarence will have the younger.

Now, brother king, farewell, and sit you fast, For I will hence to Warwick's other daughter; That, though I want a kingdom, yet in marriage I may not prove inferior to yourself .-You that love me and Warwick, follow me.

Plots have I laid, inductions dangerous, By drunken prophecies, libels, and dreams, To set my brother Clarence and the king In deadly hate the one against the other: And, if King Edward be as true and just As I am subtle, false, and treacherous, This day should Clarence closely be mew'd up, About a prophecy, which says that G Of Edward's heirs the murderer shall be. Dive, thoughts, down to my soul:-here Clarence comes.

Brother, good-day: what means this armed guard,

That waits upon your grace?

His majesty, Tendering my person's safety, hath appointed This conduct to convey me to the Tower.

Glo. Upon what canse?

Because my name is George. Clar. Glo. Alack, my lord, that fault is none of yours;

He should, for that, commit your godfathers:-O, belike his majesty hath some intent That you shall be new-christen'd in the Tower. But what's the matter, Clarence? may I know? Clar. Yea, Richard, when I know; for I protest As yet I do not: but, as I can learn, He hearkens after prophecies and dreams;

And from the cross-row plucks the letter G, And says a wizard told him that by G His issue disinherited should be; And, for my name of George begins with G, It follows in his thought that I am he. These, as I learn, and such like toys as these, Have mov'd his highness to commit me now.

Glo. Humbly complaining to her deity Got my lord chamberlain his liberty. I'll tell you what,—I think it is our way, If we will keep in favour with the king, To be her men, and wear her livery: The jealous o'er-worn widow and herself. Since that our brother dubb'd them gentlewomen,

Are mighty gossips in this monarchy. Brak. I beseech your graces both to pardon His majesty hath straitly given in charge That no man shall have private conference, Of what degree soever, with his brother.

Glo. Even so; an please your worship, Brakenbary,

You may partake of anything we say: We speak no treason, man;—we say the king Is wise and virtuous; and his noble queen Well struck in years, fair, and not jealous;-We say that Shore's wife bath a pretty foot, A cherry lip, a bonny eye, a passing pleasing tongue;

And the queen's kindred are made gentlefolks: How say you, sir? can you deny all this?

Brak. With this, my lord, myself have naught to do.

Glo. Naught to do with Mistress Shore! I tell thee, fellow,

Now stops thy spring; my sea shall suck them

And swell so much the higher by their ebb.—
Hence with him to the Tower; let him not speak.

And, lords, towards Coventry bend we our course,

Where peremptory Watwick now remains:
The sun shines bot; and, if we use delay,
Cold biting winter mars our bop'd-for bay.
Glo. Away betimes, before his forces join,
And take the great-grown traitor unawares:
Brave warriors, march amain towards Coventry.

ACT V.

Exeunt.

Scene I .- Coventry.

Enter upon the Walls, WARWICK, the Mayor of Coventry, two Messengers, and others.

War. Where is the post that came from valiant Oxford?

How far hence is thy lord, mine bonest fellow?

I Mess. By this at Dunsmore, marching hitberward.

War. How far off is our brother Montague?— Where is the post that came from Montague? 2 Mess. By this at Daintry, with a puissant troop.

Enter SIR JOHN SOMERVILLE.

War. Say, Somerville, what says my loving son?

And, by thy guess, how nigh is Clarence now?

Q. Eliz: It is determin'd, not concluded yet: But so it must be, if the king miscarry.

Enter Buckingham and Stanley.

Grey. Here come the Lords of Buckingham and Stanley. [grace] Buck Good time of day unto your royal Stan. God make your majesty joyful as you have been!

Q. Eliz. The Countess Richmond, good my Lord of Stanley, To your good prayer will scarcely say amen.

Yet, Stanley, notwithstanding she's your wife, And loves not me, be you, good lord, assur'd I hate not you for her proud arrogance.

Stan. I do beseech you, either not believe The envious slanders of her false accusers; Or, if she be accus'd on true report, Bear with her weakness, which I think proceeds

From wayward sickness, and no grounded lof Stanley? malice.

Q. Eliz. Saw you the king to-day, my Lord Stan. But now the Duke of Buckingham and I Are come from visiting his majesty. [lords? Q. Eliz. What likelihood of his amendment,

Buck. Madam, good hope; his grace speaks cheerfully.

Q. Eliz. God grant him health! Did you confer with him?

Buck. Ay, madam: he desires to make atone-Between the Duke of Gloster and your brothers, And between them and my lord chamberlain; And sent to warn them to his royal presence.

Q. Eliz. Would all were welll-but that will never be: '

I fear our happiness is at the height.

Enter GLOSTER, HASTINGS, and DORSET.

Glo. They do me wrong, and I will not endure it:-Who are they that complain unto the king That I, forsooth, am stern, and love them not? By holy Paul, they love his grace but lightly That fill his ears with such dessentious rumours. Because I cannot flatter and speak fair, Smile in men's faces, smooth, deceive, and cog, Duck with French nods and apish courtesy, I must be held a rancorous enemy. Cannot a plain man live, and think no harm, But thus his simple truth must be abus'd By silken, sly insinuating Jacks? [your grace?

Grey. To whom in all this presence speaks - Glo. To thee, that hast nor honesty nor grace. When have I injur'd thee? when done thee wrong?-

Or thee?—or thee?—or any of your faction? A plague upon you all! His royal grace,— Whom God preserve better than you would

Cannot be quiet scarce a breathing while, But you must trouble him with lewd com-

[matter. plaints. Q. Eliz. Brother of Gloster, you mistake the The king, on his own royal disposition, And not provok'd by any suitor else-Aiming, belike, at your interior hatred, That in your outward action shows itself Against my children, brothers, and myselfMakes him to send; that thereby he may gather The ground of your ill-will, and so remove it. Glo. I cannot tell: the world is grown so bad, That wrens may prey where eagles dare not perch: Since every Jack became a gentleman, There's many a gentle person made a Jack.

Q. Eliz. Come, come, we know your meaning, brother Gloster;

You envy my advancement, and my friends'; God grant we never may have need of you! Glo. Meantime, God grants that we have need of you: Our brother is imprison'd by your means, Myself disgrac'd, and the nobility Held in contempt; while great promotions Are daily given to ennoble those That scarce, some two days since, were worth a noble.

Q. Eliz. By Him that rais'd me to this careful From that contented hap which I enjoy'd, I never did incense his majesty Against the Duke of Clarence, but have been An earnest advocate to plead for him. My lord, you do me shameful injury,

Falsely to draw me in these vile suspects.

Glo. You may deny that you were not the

Of my Lord Hastings' late imprisonment.

Riv. She may, my lord; for,— [not so? Glo. Shemay, Lord Rivers?—why, who knows She may do more, sir, than denying that: She may help you to many fair preferments; And then deny her aiding hand therein, And lay those honours on your high desert. What may she not? She may,—ay, marry, may she,-Riv. What, marry, may she? king, Glo. What, marry, may shel marry with a A bachelor, a handsome stripling too:

I wis your grandam had a worser match. Q. Eliz. My Lord of Gloster, I have too long borne

Your blunt upbraidings and your bitter scoffs: By heaven, I will acquaint his majesty Of those gross taunts that oft I have endur'd. I had rather be a country servant-maid Than a great queen, with this condition,-To be so baited, scorn'd, and stormed at.

Enter Queen Margaret, behind.

Small joy have I in being England's queen. Q. Mar. And lessen'd be that small, God, I beseech Himi Thy honour, state, and seat is due to me. Glo. What I threat you me with telling of the king?

Tell him, and spare not: look, what I have said I will avouch in presence of the king: I dare adventure to be sent to the Tower.

'Tis time to speak,—my pains are quite forgot.
Q. Mar. Out, devil! I remember them too well:

Thou kill dst my husband Henry in the Tower, And Edward, my poor son, at Tewksbury. Glo. Ere you were queen, ay, or your husband king,

I was a pack-horse in his great affairs; A weeder-out of his proud adversaries,

And, Richard, do not frown npon my faults, For I will benceforth be no more unconstant. K. Edw. Now welcome more, and ten times more belov'd.

Than if thon never badst deserv'd our hate. Glo. Welcome, good Clarence; this is broth-erlike.

War. O passing traitor, perjur'd and unjust!
K. Edw. What, Warwick, wilt thon leave the town and fight?

Or shall we beat the stones about thine ears? War. Alas, I am not coop'd bere for defence! I will away towards Barnet presently,

And bid thee battle, Edward, if thou dar'st. K. Edw. Yes, Warwick, Edward dares, and leads the way.

Lords, to the field: Saint George and victory. [March. Exeunt.

Scene II.—A field of Battle near Barnet.

Alarums and excursions. Enter KING ED-WARD, bringing in WARWICK trounded.

K. Edw. So, lie thon there: die thon, and die our fear;

For Warwick was a bug that fear'd us all .-Now, Montague, sit fast; I seek for thee, That Warwick's bones may keep thine company. Exit. War. Ah, who is nigh? come to me, friend or foe,

And tell me who is victor, York or Warwick? Why ask I that? my mangled body shows, My blood, my want of strength, my sick heart shows,

That I must yield my body to the earth, And, by my fall, the conquest to my foe. Thus yields the cedar to the axe's edge, Whose arms gave shelter to the princely eagle, Under whose shade the ramping lion slept, Whose top-branch overpeer'd Jove's spreading tree,

And kept low shrubs from winter's powerful wind

These eyes, that now are dimm'd with death's black vail.

Have been as piercing as the mid-day sun, To search the secret treasons of the world: The wrinkles in my brows, now fill'd with blood, Were liken'd oft to kingly sepulchres For who liv'd king, but I could dig his grave? And who durst smile when Warwick bent his brow?

Lo, now my glory smear'd in dust and blood! My parks, my walks, my manors that I had, Even now forsake me; and of all my lands Is nothing left me but my body's length! Why, what is pomp, rule, reign, but earth and . dnst!

And, live we bow we can, yet die we must.

Enter Oxford and Somerset.

Som. Ah, Warwick, Warwick! wert thou as We are,

We might recover all our loss again: The queen from France bath brought a puissant power; [fiyl Even now we heard the news: ah, couldst thou War. Why, then, I would not fly.—Ah, Montague,

If thou be there, sweet brother, take my band, And with thy lips keep in my soul awhile! Thou lov'st me not; for, brother, if thon didst, Tby tears would wash this cold congealed blood That gines my lips and will not let me speak.

Come quickly, Montague, or I am dead.

Som. Ah, Warwick! Montague hath breath'd his last;

And to the latest gasp cried out for Warwick, And said, Commend me to my velient brother. And more he would have said; and more be spoke,

Which sounded like a cannon in a vault, That might not be distinguish'd; but at last, I well might hear, deliver'd with a groan, O, farewell, Warwick!

War. Sweet rest his soul!-fly, lords, and save yourselves; For Warwick bids you all farewell, to meet in Dies. bear'n. Oxf. Away, away, to meet the queen's great power! [Exeunt, bearing off WAR.'S body.

SCENE III.—Another part of the Field.

Flourish. Enter KING EDWARD in triumph; with Clarence, Gloster, and the rest.

K. Edw. Thus far our fortune keeps an upward course,

And we are grac'd with wreaths of victory. But in the midst of this bright-shining day I spy a black, suspicious, threatening cloud, That will encounter with our glorious sun Ere he attain his easeful western bed: I mean, my lords, those powers that the queen Hath rais'd in Gallia have arriv'd our coast, And, as we bear, march on to fight with us.

Clar. A little gale will soon disperse that cloud

And blow it to the source from whence it came: Tby very beams will dry those vapours up;

For every cloud engenders not a storm. [strong. Glo. The queen is valu'd thirty thousand And Somerset, with Oxford, fled to her: If she bave time to breathe, be well assur'd, Her faction will be full as strong as ours.

K. Edw. We are advertis'd by our loving friends [bury; That they do bold their course toward Tewks-We, having now the best at Barnet field, Will thither straight, for willingness rids way; And as we march, our strength will be eugmented

In every county as we go along .-Strike up the drum; cry, Courage! and away. Excunt.

Scene IV.—Plains near Tewksbury.

March. Enter QUEEN MARGARET, PRINCE EDWARD, SOMERSET, OXFORD, and Soldiers.

O. Mar. Great lords, wise men ne'er sit and wail their loss, But cheerly seek how to redress their harms. What though the mast be now blown overboard, The cable broke, the holding-anchor lost

And half our sailors swallow'd in the flood; Yet lives our pilot still: is't meet that he Should leave the helm, and, like a fearful lad, Q. Eliz. Thus have you breath'd your curse against yourself.

Q. Mar. Poor painted queen, vain flourish of my fortune!

Why strew'st thou sugar on that bottled spider, Whose deadly web ensnareth thee about? Fool, fooll thou whett'st a knife to kill thyself. The day will come that thou shalt wish for me To help thee curse this poisonous bunch-back'd toad.

Hast. False-boding woman, end thy frantic curse,

Lest to thy harm thou move our patience.

Q. Mar. Foul shame upon you! you have all mov'd mine.

Riv. Were you well serv'd, you would be taught your duty. [me duty. Q. Mar. To serve me well, you all should do Teach me to be your queen, and you my sub-

O, that your young nobility could judge What 'twere to lose it, and be miserable! They that stand high have many blasts to shake them:

And if they fall they dash themselves to pieces.

Glo. Good counsel, marry:—learn it, learn it, marquis.

Dor. It touches you, my lord, as much as me. Glo. Ay, and much more: but I was born so high

Our aery buildeth in the cedar's top,

And dallies with the wind, and scorns the sun.

Q. Mar. And turns the sun to shade;—alasl

Witness my son, now in the shade of death; Whose bright out-shining beams thy cloudy [hand. O princely Buckingham, I'll kiss thy In sign of league and amity with thee: Now fair befell thee and thy noble house! Thy garments are not spotted with our blood, Nor thou within the compass of my curse.

Buck. Nor no one here; for curses never pass The lips of those that breathe them in the air.

Q. Mar. I will not think but they ascend the sky,
And there awake God's gentle sleeping peace.
O Buckingham, take heed of yonder dog!
Look, when he fawns he bites; and when he bites.

His venom tooth will rankle to the death; Have not to do with him, beware of him; Sin, death, and hell have set their marks on him,

And all their ministers attend on him.

Glo. What doth she say, my Lord of Buckingham? [lord. Buck. Nothing that I respect, my gracious O. Mar. What, dost thou score my feet

Q. Mar. What, dost thou scorn me for my gentle counsel?

And soothe the devil that I warn thee from? O, but remember this another day, When he shall split thy very heart with sorrow, And say, poor Margaret was a prophetess!—Live each of you the subjects to his hate, And he to yours, and all of you to God's!

Hast. My hair doth stand on end to hear her curses.

Riv. And so doth mine: I muse why she's at Glo. I cannot blame her: by God's holy mother,

She hath had too much wrong; and I repent My part thereof that I have done her.

Q. Eliz. I never did her any, to my knowledge.
Glo. Yet you have all the vantage to her wrong.

I was too hot to do somebody good,
That is too cold in thinking of it now.
Marry, as for Clarence, he is well repaid;
He is frank'd up to fatting for his pains;
God pardon them that are the cause thereof!

Riv. A virtuous and a Christian-like conclusion,

To pray for them that have done scathe to us. Glo. So do I ever, being well advis'd; For had I curs'd now, I had curs'd myself.

[Aside.]

Enter CATESBY.

Cates. Madam, his majesty doth call for you,—

And for your grace,—and you, my noble lords.

Q. Eliz. Catesby, I come.—Lords, will you go with me?

Riv. We wait upon your grace.

Exeunt all but GLOSTER. Glo. I do the wrong, and first begin to brawl. The secret mischiefs that I set abroach I lay unto the grievous charge of others. [ness, Clarence,—whom I, indeed, have cast in dark-I do beweep to many simple gulls; Namely, to Stanley, Hastings, Buckingham; And tell them 'tis the queen and her allies That stir the king against the duke my brother. Now, they believe it; and withal whet me To be reveng'd on Rivers, Vaughan, Grey: But then I sigh; and, with a piece of Scripture, Tell them that God bids us do good for evil: And thus I clothe my naked villainy With odd old ends stol'n forth of holy writ; And seem a saint when most I play the devil. But, soft! here come my executioners.

Enter two Murderers.

How now, my hardy, stout-resolved mates!
Are you now going to despatch this thing?

I Murd. We are, my lord, and come to have the warrant,

That we may be admitted where he is-

Glo. That you might still have worn the petticoat. And ne'er have stol'n the hreech from Lan-

Glo. Sprawl'st thou? take that, to end thy Stabs him. agony.

Clar. And there's for twitting me with perjury. Stabs him. Q. Mar. O, kill me too!

Glo. Marry, and shall. [Offers to kill her. K. Edw. Hold, Richard, hold; for we have done too much.

. Glo. Why should she live, to fill the world with words?

K. Edw. What, doth she swoon? use means for her recovery. Glo. Clarence, excuse me to the king my brother I'll hence to London on a serious matter:

Ere ye come there, be sure to hear some news.

Clar. What? what?

Glo. The Towerl the Towerl

K. Edw. Away, I say; I charge ye, hear her hence.

Q. Mar. So come to you and yours as to this princel [Exit, led out forcibly. K. Edw. Where's Richard gone?

Clar. To London, all in post; and, as I guess,

To make a bloody supper in the Tower.

K. Edw. He's sudden, if a thing comes in his head. Sort Now march we hence: discharge the common With pay and thanks, and let's away to London, And see our gentle queen how well she fares.— By thia, I hope, she hath a son for me.

Exeunt. Scene VI .- London. A Room in the Tower. King Henry is discovered sitting with a book in his hand, the Lieutenant attending. Enter GLOSTER. Glo. Good-day, my lord. What, at your book so hard?

K. Hen. Ay, my good lord:-my lord, I should say rather;

'Tis sin to flatter, good was little better: Good Gloster and good devil were alike, [lord. And hoth preposterous: therefore, not good Glo. Sirrah, leave us to ourselves: we must confer. Exit Lieutenant.

K. Hen. So flies the reckless shepherd from the wolf;

So first the harmless sheep doth yield his fleece. And next his throat unto the hatcher's knife.-What scene of death hath Roscius now to act? Glo. Suspicion always haunts the guilty mind; The thief doth fear each hush an officer.

K. Hen. The hird that hath heen limed in a hush.

With tremhling wings misdouhteth every hush; And I, the hapless male to one sweet hird, Have now the fatal object in my eye.

Where my poor young was lim'd, was caught, and kill'd. | Crete

Glo. Why, what a peevish fool was that of That taught his son the office of a fow!!

And yet, for all his wines the foo! K. Hen. I, Daedalus; my poor hoy, Icarus;

Thy father, Minos, that denied our course; The sun, that sear'd the wings of my sweet hoy, Thy hrother Edward; and thyself, the sea, Whose envious gulf did swallow up his life Ah, kill me with thy weapon, not with words!

My hreast can hetter brook thy dagger's point Than can my ears that tragic history. But wherefore dost thon come? is't for my life?

Glo. Think'st thou I am an executioner? K. Hen. A persecutor, I am sure, thou art: If murdering innocents he executing,

Why, then thou art an executioner. Glo. Thy son I kill'd for his presumption.

2 Murd. No; he'll say 'twas done cowardly, when he wakes.

2 Murd. When he wakes! why, fool, he shall never wake until the great indgment-day.

I Muid. Why, then he'll say we stabb'd him aleeping.

2 Murd. The urging of that word judgment hath hred a kind of remorse in me.

1 Muid. What, art thou afraid? 2 Muid. Not to kill him, having a warrent for it; but to be damned fo killing him, from the which no warrant can defend me.

1 Murd. I thought thou hadst been resolute.
2 Murd. So I am, to let him live.

I Murd. I'll back to the Duke of Gloster, and tell him so.

2 Murd. Nay, I pr'ythee, stay a little: I hope my holy humour will change; it was wont to hold me but while one tells twenty.

I Muid. How dost thou feel thyself now? 2 Murd. Faith, some certain dregs of conscience are yet within me.

1 Murd. Remember our reward, when the deed's done. [reward.

2 Murd. Zounds, he dies: I had forgot the 1 Murd. Where's thy conscience now?

2 Murd. In the Duke of Gloster's purse. r Murd. So, when he opens his purse to give us our reward, thy conscience flies out. 2 Murd. 'Tis no matter; let it go; there's few or none will entertain it. 1 Murd. What if it come to thee again?

2 Murd. I'll not meddle with it,—it makes a man a coward; a man cannot steal, but it accuseth him; a man cannot swear, but it checks him; a man cannot lie with his neighbour's wife, hut it detects him: 'tis a hlushing shame-faced spirit that mutinies in a man's bosom; it fills one full of obstacles: it made me once restore a purse of gold that by chance I found; it beggars any man that keeps it: it is turned out of all towns and cities for a dangerous thing; and every man that means to live well endeavours to trust to himself and live without it.

1 Murd. Zounds, it is even now at my elbow, persuading me not to kill the duke.

2 Murd. Take the devil in thy mind, and believe him not: he would insinuate with thee but to make thee sigh.

r Murd. I am strong-framed, he cannot prevail with me.

Murd. Spoke like a tall fellow that respects his reputation. Come, shall we fall to work!

r Murd. Take him on the costard with the hilts of thy sword, and then throw him into the malmsey-hatt in the next room.

2 Murd. O excellent devicel and make a sop of him.

I Muid. Soft! he wakes.

2 Murd. Strike!

r Murd. No, we'll reason with him.

Clar. Where art thou, keeper? give me a cup

[lord, anon. of wine. I Murd. You shall have wine enough, my Clar. In God's name, what art thou?

I Muid. A man, as you are.

Clar. But not, as I am, royal.

I Murd. Nor you, as we are, loyal. Clar. Thy voice is thunder, but thy looks are humble.

1 Murd. My voice is now the king's, my looks mine own. speak!

Clar. How darkly and how deadly don't thou Your eyes do menace me: why look you pale? Who sent you hither? Wherefore do you come?

Both Murd. To, to, to Clar. To murder me?

Both Murd. Ay, ay. Clar. You scarcely have the hearts to tell me

And therefore cannot have the hearts to do it. Wherein, my friends, have I offended you?

r Murd. Offended us you have not, but the king.

Clar. I shall be reconcil'd to him again. 2 Muid. Never, my lord; therefore prepare to die, Clar. Are you drawn forth among a world of To slay the innocent? What is my offence? What is the evidence that doth accuse me? Where lawful quest have given their verdict up Unto the frowning judge? or who pronounc'd The bitter sentence of poor Clarence's death? Before I be convict by course of law, To threaten me with death is most unlawful.

I charge you, as you hope to have redemption By Christ's dear blood shed for our grievous

That you depart, and lay no hands on me: The deed you undertake is damnable.

3 Murd. What we will do, we do upon command. 2 Murd. And he that hath commanded is our king. kings Clar. Erroneous vassals! the great King of Hath in the table of his law commanded That thou shalt do no murder: will you then Spurn at his edict, and fulfil a man's?

Take heed; for he holds vengeance in his hand, To hurl upon their heads that break his law. 2 Murd. And that same vengeance doth he hurl on thee For false forswearing, and for murder too: Thou didst receive the sacrament to fight. In quarrel of the house of Lancaster.

z Murd. And, like a traitor to the name of God ions hizde Didst break that yow: and with thy treacher-Unripp'dst the howels of thy sovereign's son. 2 Murd. Whom thou wast sworn to cherish and defend.

r Murd. How canst thou urge God's dreadful law to us,

When thou hast broke it in such dear degree? Clar. Alas! for whose sake did I that ill deed? For Edward, for my brother, for his sake: He sends you not to murder me for this; For in that sin he is as deep as L If God will be avenged for the deed, O, know you yet, he doth it publicly:

Take not the quarrel from his powerful arm; He needs no indirect nor lawless course

To cut off those that have offended him.

I Murd. Who made thee, then, a bloody minister When gallant-springing brave Plantagenet,

That princely novice, was struck dead by thee? Clar. My brother's love, the devil, and my thy feults,

I Mund. Thy brother's love, our duty, and Provoke us hither now to slanghter thee.

SCENE, - ENGLAND.

ACT: I.

Scene I .- London. A Street.

Enter GLOSTER.

Glo. Now is the winter of our discontent Made glorious summer by this sun of York; And all the clouds that lower'd upon our house In the deep bosom of the ocean buried.

Now are our brows bound with victorious wreaths;

Our bruised arms hung up for monuments: Our stern alarums chang'd to merry meetings, Our dreadful marches to delightful measures.

Grim-visag'd war hath smooth'd his wrinkled front; And now,—instead of mounting barbed steeds To fright the souls of fearful adversaries,-

Is this thy vow unto my sickly heart. There wanteth now our brother Gloster here, To make the blessed period of this peace.

Buck. And, in good time, here comes the noble duke.

Enter GLOSTER.

Glo. Good-morrow to my sovereign king and queen;

And, princely peers, a happy time of dayl
K. Edw. Happy, indeed, as we have spent the day.

Gloster, we have done deeds of charity;
Made peace of enmity, fair love of hate,
Between these swelling wrong-incensed peers.
Glo. A blessed labour, my most sovereign
lord.—

Among this princely heap, if any here, By false intelligence or wrong surmise, Hold me a foe:

If I unwittingly, or in my rage, Have aught committed that is hardly borne By any in this presence, I desire To reconcile me to his friendly peace: 'Tis death to me to be at enmity;

I hate it, and desire all good men's love.-

First, madam, I entreat true peace of you, Which I will purchase with my duteous service;—Of you, my noble cousin Buckingham, If ever any grudge were lodg'd between us;—Of you, and you, Lord Rivers, and of Dorset,

That all without desert have frown'd on me;
Of you, Lord Woodville, and, Lord Scales, of
you;—
[all.
Division seeds loads, continuous indeed of

My sovereign lord, I do beseech your highness

this,
To be so flouted in this royal presence?

Who knows not that the gentle duke is dead?
[They all start.

You do him injury to scorn his corse.

K. Edw. Who knows not he is dead! who knows he is?

O. Eliz. All-seeing heaven, what a world is Buck. Look I so pale, Lord Dorset, as the rest?

thought,

And yet his punishment was bitter death. Who su'd to me for him? who, in my wrath, Kneel'd at my feet, and bid me be advis'd? Who spoke of brotherhood? who spoke of love?

Who told me how the poor soul did forsake The mighty Warwick, and did fight for me? Who told me, in the field of Tewksbury, When Oxford had me down, he rescu'd me, And said, Dear brother, live, and be a king? Who told me, when we both lay in the field Frozen almost to death, how he did lap me Even in his garments, and did give himself, All thin and naked, to the numb-cold night? All this from my remembrance brutish wrath Sinfully pluck'd, and not a man of you Had so much grace to put it in my mind. But I shall live, my lord, to give them thanks That were the cause of my imprisonment. Glo. No doubt, no doubt; and so shall Clarence too;

For they that were your enemies are his,
And have prevail'd as much on him as you.

Hast. More pity that the eagle should be

While kites and buzzards prey at liberty.

Glo. What news abroad?

Hast. No news so had abroad as this at home,—

The king is sickly, weak, and melancholy, And his physicians fear him mightily. Glo. Now, by Saint Paul, this news is bad indeed.

O, he hath kept an evil diet long,
And overmuch consum'd his royal person:
'Tis very grievous to he thought upon.
What, is he in his bed?

Hast.

Glo. Go you before, and I will follow you.

[Exit HASTINGS.

He cannot live, I hope; and must not die Till George be pack'd with posthorse up to heaven.

I'll in, to urge his hatred more to Clarence, With lies well steel'd with weighty arguments; And, if I fail not in my deep intent, Clarence hath not another day to live: Which done, God take King Edward to his mercy,

And leave the world for me to bustle in!
For then I'll marry Warwick's youngest

But yet I run before my horse to market:
Clarence still breathes; Edward still lives and reigns:

When they are gone, then must I count my gains. [Exit.

Scene II .- London. Another Street.

Enter the Corpse of King Henry The Sixth borne in an open coffin, Gentlemen bearing halberds to guard it; and LADY ANNE as mourner.

Anne. Set down, set down your honourable load,-

If honour may be shrouded in a hearse,—
Whilst I awhile obsequiously lament
The untimely fall of virtuous Lancaster.—
Poor key-cold figure of a holy king!
Pale ashes of the house of Lancaster!
Thon bloodless remnant of that royal bloodl
Be it lawful that I invocate thy ghost,
To hear the lamentations of poor Anne,
Wife to thy Edward, to thy slaughter'd son,

Stabh'd hy the self-same hand that made these wounds!

Lo, in these windows that let forth thy life, I pour the helpless balm of my poor eyes: O, cursed he the hand that made these holes! Cursed the heart that had the heart to do it!; Cursed the blood that let this blood from hence! More direful hap hetide that hated wretch That makes us wretched by the death of thee, Than I can wish to adders, spiders, toads, Or any creeping venom'd thing that lives! If ever he have child, ahortive be it, Prodigious, and untimely brought to light. Whose ugly and unnatural aspect May fright the hopeful mother at the view; And that be heir to his unhappiness! If ever he have wife, let her be made More miserable hy the death of him Than I am made by my young lord and thee! Come, now towards Chertsey with your holy load.

[The Bearers take up the Corpse and advance. Enter GLOSTER.

And still, as you are weary of the weight, Rest you, whiles I lament King Henry's corse.

Taken from Paul's to be interred there:

Glo. Unmanner'd dog! stand thou, when I Advance thy halberd higher than my breast, Or, by Saint Paul, I'll strike thee to my foot, And spurn upon thee, beggar, for thy boldness.

[The Bearers set down the coffin. Anne. What, do you tremble? are you all afraid?

Alas, I blame you not; for you are mortal, And mortal eyes cannot endure the devil.— Avaunt, thou dreadful minister of hell! Thou hadst but power over his mortal body, His soul thou canst not have; therefore, be gone.

Glo. Sweet saint, for charity, be not so curst.

Anne. Foul devil, for God's sake, hence, and trouble us not;

For thou hast made the happy earth thy hell, Fill'd it with cursing cries and deep exclaims. If thou delight to view thy heinous deeds, Behold this pattern of thy butcheries.—
O, gentlemen, see, seel dead Henry's wounds Open their congeal'd mouths and bleed afresh! Blush, blush, thou lump of foul deformity; For 'fis thy presence that exhales this blood From cold and empty veins, where no blood

Cate. God keep your lordship in that gracious mind!

Hast. But I shall laugh at this a twelve month hence,

That they who hrought me in my master's hate. I live to look upon their tragedy.

Well, Catesby, ere a fortnight make me older, I'll send some packing that yet think not on't. Cale. 'Tis a vile thing to die, my gracions lord, When men are unprepar'd, and look not for it. Hast. O monstrons, monstrous! and so falls

With Rivers, Vaughan, Grey: and so 'twill do With some men else that think themselves as safe As thou and I; who, as thou know'st, are dear To princely Richard and to Buckingham.

Cate. The princes both make high account of

For they account his, head upon the bridge. l Aside.

Hast. I know they do; and I have well deserv'd it.

Enter STANLEY.

Come on, come on; where is your boar-spear, man?

Fear you the hoar, and go so unprovided? Stan. My lord, good-morrow; and good-morrow, Catesby:—

You may jest on, hut, hy the holy rood, I do not like these several councils, I. Hast. My lord, I hold my life as dear as you do yours;

And never in my days, I do protest Was it more precious to me than 'tis now: Think you, but that I know our state secure, I would be so triumphant as I am?

Stan. The lords at Pomfret, when they rode from London. (sure,-

Were jocund, and suppos'd their states were And they, indeed, had no cause to mistrust; But yet, you see, how soon the day o'ercast! This sudden stah of rancour I misdouht; Pray God, I say, I prove a needless coward! What, shall we toward the Tower? the day is spent.

Hast. Come, come, have with you.-Wot you what, my lord?

To-day the lords you talk of are heheaded. Stan. They, for their truth, might better hats.wear their heads Than some that have accus'd them wear their

But come, my lord, let's away.

Enter a Pursuivant.

Hast. Go on before; I'll talk with this good Exeunt STAN. and CATE. fellow. How now, sirrahl how goes the world with ask. thee?

Purs. The hetter that your lordship please to Hast. I tell thee, man, 'tis hetter with me - meet:

Than when thou mett'st me last where now we Then was I going prisoner to the Tower, By the suggestion of the queen's allies;

But now, I tell thee, -keep it to thyself. This day those enemies are put to death, And I in better state than e'er I was.

Purs. God hold it, to your honour's good contenti lme.

Hast. Gramercy, fellow: there, drink that for Throwing him his purse. Purs. I thank your honour.

Enter a Priest.

Pr. Well met, my lord; I am glad to see your honour.

Hast. I thank thee, good Sir John, with all my heart. I am in your debt for your last exercise:

Come the next Sabhath, and I will content you.

Enter Buckingham.

Buck. What, talking with a priest, lord chamherlain!

Your friends at Pomfret, they do need the priest;

Your honour hath no shriving-work in hand. Hast. Good faith, and when I met this holy man,

The men you talk of came into my mind.-What, go you toward the Tower?

Buck. I do, my lord; but long I cannot stay there:

I shall return before your lordship thence. Hast. Nay, like enough, for I stay dinner there. Buck. And supper too, although thou know'st it not. Aside. Come, will you go?

I'll wait upon your lordship. Hast. Exeunt.

Scene III .- Pomfret. Before the Castle. Enter RATCLIFF, with a Guard, conducting RIVERS, GREY, and VAUGHAN to execution.

Riv. Sir Richard Ratcliff, let me tell thee this.-

To-day shalt thou hehold a subject die For truth, for duty, and for loyalty. lof you! Grey. God hless the prince from all the pack A knot you are of damned hlood-suckers.

Vaugh. You live that shall cry woe for this hereafter.

Rat. Despatch; the limit of your lives is out. Riv. O Pomfret! Pomfret! O thou bloody prison. Fatal and ominous to noble peers! Within the guilty closure of thy walls Richard the Second here was hack'd to death: And, for more slander to thy dismal seat, We give thee up our guiltless blood to drink. Grey. Now Margaret's curse is fallen npon our heads, When she exclaim'd on Hastings, you, and L.

For standing hy when Richard stahh'd her son. Riv. Then curs'd she Richard, then curs'd she Buckingham, Then curs'd she Hastings:-O, rememher, God,

To hear her prayer for them, as now for us! And for my sister and her princely sons, Be satisfied, dear God, with our true blood, Which, as thou know'st, unjustly must he spiit! Rat. Make haste; the hour of death is expiate.

Glo. Well thought upon;-I have it here Gives the warrant. nhout mo: When you have done, repair to Crosby Place. But, sirs, he sudden in the execution, Withal obdurnte, do not hear him plead; For Clarence is well-spoken, and perhaps May move your hearts to pity, if you mark him. I Mird. Tut, tut, my lord, we will not stand to prate;

Talkers are no good doers: be assur'd We go to use our hands, and not our tongues. Glo. Your eyes drop millstones when fools' eyes fall tears:

I like you, lads; -- about your husiness straight; Go, go, despatch.

We will, my noble lord. Exeunt.

Scene IV .- LONDON. A Room in the Tower. Enter CLARENCE and BRAKENBURY.

Brak. Why looks your grace so heavily todsy?

Clar. O, I have pass'd n miserable night,

So full of fearful dreams, of ugly sights, That, as I am a Christian faithful man. I would not spend another such a night Though 'twere to huy n world of happy days, So full of dismal terror was the time! Brak. What was your dream, my lord? I pray you, tell mc. Clar. Methought that I had broken from the And was embark'd to cross to Burgundy; And, in my company, my brother Gloster;

Who from my cabin tempted me to walk Upon the hatches: thence we look'd toward England,

And cited up a thousand heavy times, During the wars of York and Lancaster, That had befall'n us. As we pac'd along Upon the giddy footing of the hatches, Methought that Gloster stumbled; and, in falling, [hoard Struck me, that thought to stay him, ovor-Into the tumbling billows of the main. O Lord! methought what pain it was to drown! What dreadful noise of water in mine ears! What sights of ugly death within mine eyes! Methought I saw a thousand fearful wrecks; A thousand men that fishes gnaw'd upon; Wodges of gold, great anchors, heaps of pearl, Inestimable stones, unvalu'd jewels, All scatter'd in the hottom of the soa: Some lay in dead men's skulls; and in those Where eyes did once inhabit there were crept. As 'twere in scorn of eyes,-reflecting gems, That woo'd the slimy bottom of the deep, And mock'd the dead bones that lay scatter'd by. Brak. Had you such lelsure in the time of death To gaze upon the secrets of the deep? [strive Clar. Methought I had; and often did I To yield the ghost: but still the envious flod Stopp'd in my soul, and would not let It forth To find the empty, vast, and wandering air; But smother'd it within my panting hulk, Which almost burst to bolch it in the sea.

Brak. Awak'd you not with this sore ngony? Clar. No, no, my dream was lengthen'd after life;

O, then began the tempest of my soull I pass'd, methought, the melancholy flood With that grim ferryman which poets write of, Unto the kingdom of perpetual night. The first that there did groet my stranger soul Was my great father-in-law, renowned Warwick:

Who cried aloud, What scourge for perjury Can this dark monarchy afford false Clarence? And so he vanish'd: then came wandering by A shadow like an Angel, with hright hair Dabhled in hlood; and he shrick'd out aloud,

Clarence is come, -false, fleeting, perjur'd Clarence.-That stabb'd me in the field by Tewksbury;

Seize on him, Furies, take him to your torments! With that, methought, n legion of foul fiends Environ'd me, and howled in mine ears Such hideous cries that, with the vory noise, I trembling wak'd, and for a season after Could not believe hut that I was in holl,-Such terrible impression made my dream.

Brak. No marvel, lord, though it affrighted

I am afraid, methinks, to hear you tell it. Clar. O Brakenbury, I have dono those things That now give evidence against my soul, For Edward's sake; and see how he requites melthee,

O God! If my deep prayers cannot appears But thou wilt he aveng'd on my misdeeds, Yet execute thy wrath in me alone,-O, spare my guiltless wife and my poor children!

Keeper, I pr'ythee, sit by me awhile; My soul is heavy, and I fain would sleep. Brak. I will, my lord; God give your grace good rest!-CLARENCE reposes himself on a chair. Sorrow breaks seasons and reposing hours. Makes the night morning, and the noontide night. Princes have but their titles for their glories. An outward honour for an inward toil: And, for unfelt imaginations They often feel a world of restless cares:

So that, hetween their titles and low name, There's nothing differs but the outward famo.

Enter the two Murdorers.

1 Murd. Hol who's here? Brak. What wouldst thou, follow? and how cam'st thou hithor?

z Murd. I would speak with Clarenco, and I came hither on my logs.

Brak. What, so brief?

2 Murd. 'Tis better, sir, than to bo tedious .-Let him see our commission; talk no more.

[A paper is delivered to BRAK. who reads it. Brak. I am, in this, commanded to deliver The noble Duke of Clarence to your hands:-I will not reason what is moant hereby, Because I will he guiltless of the meaning There lies the duke asloop,—and there the keys; I'll to the king, and signify to him

That thus I have resign'd to you my charge.

I Murd. You may, sir; 'tis n point of r Murd. You may, sir; 'tis n point of wisdom: fare you woll. [Exit BRAKENBURY. 2 Murd. What, shall we stab him as he sleepa?

Lives like a drunken sailor on a mast, Ready, with every nod, to tumble down Into the fatal bowels of the deep.

Lov. Come, come, despatch: 'tis bootless to exclaim.

Scene V.—London. The Tower Walls.

Enter GLOSTER and BUCKINGHAM in rustu armour, marvellous ill-favoured.

Glo. Come, cousin, canst thou quake and change thy colour, Murder thy breath in middle of a word. And then again begin, and stop again. As if thou wert distraught and mad with terror? Buck. Tut, I can counterfeit the deep tragedian; Speak and look back, and pry on every side, Tremble and start at wagging of a straw. Intending deep suspicion: ghastly looks Are at my service, like enforced smiles; And both are ready in their offices, At any time, to grace my stratagems. But what, is Catesby gone? falone. Glo. He is; and, see, he hrings the mayor

Enter the Lord Mayor and CATESBY.

Buck. Lord mayor .-Glo. Look to the drawbridge there! Buck. Harkl a drum. Glo. Cateshy, o'erlook the walls. Buck. Lord Mayor, the reason we have sent, Glo. Look back, defend thee,-here are enemies

Buck. God and our innocency defend and [and Lovel. guard us! Glo. Be patient, they are friends,—Ratcliff

Enter LOVELL and RATCLIFF, with HASTINGS head.

Lov. Here is the head of that ignohle traitor, The dangerous and unsuspected Hastings. Glo. So dear I lov'd the man that I must

I took him for the plainest harmless creature That breath'd upon the earth a Christian; Made him my hook, wherein my soul recorded The history of all her secret thoughts: So smooth he daub'd his vice with show of That, his apparent open guilt omitted, I mean, his conversation with Shore's wife.

He liv d from all attainder of suspect. Buck. Well, well, he was the covert'st shelter'd traitor That ever liv'd. Would you imagine, or almost believe, Were't not that by great preservation We live to tell it you,—the subtle traitor This day had plotted, in the council-house, To murder me and my good Lord of Glosterl

May. Had he done so? [fidels? Glo. What! think you we are Turks or In-Or that we would, against the form of law, Proceed thus rashly in the villain's death. But that the extreme peril of the case, The peace of England and our persons' safety, Enforc'd us to this execution?

May. Now, fair befall you! he deserv'd his death: [ceeded. And your good graces both have well pro-To warn false traitors from the like attempts.

I never look'd for better at his hands After he once fell in with Mistress Shore. Idie Buck. Yet had we not determin'd he should Until your lordship came to see his end; Which now the loving haste of these our friends, Something against our meaning, hath prevented:

Because, my lord, we would have had you heard The traitor speak, and timorously confess The manner and the purpose of his tressons: That you might well have signified the same Unto the citizens, who haply may Misconstrue us in him, and wail his death.

May. But, my good lord, your grace's word shall serve As well as I had seen, and heard him speak: And do not doubt, right noble princes both, But I'll acquaint our duteous citizens

With all your just proceedings in this case. Glo. And to that end we wish'd your lordship here.

To avoid the censures of the carping world. Buck. But since you come too late of our intent, Yet witness what you hear we did intend: And so, my good lord mayor, we hid farewell. Exit Lord Mayor.

Glo. Go, after, after, cousin Buckingham. The mayor, towards Guildhall hies him in all post:

There, at your meetest vantage of the time. Infer the hastardy of Edward's children: Tell them how Edward put to death a citizen, Only for saying he would make his son Heir to the crown; meaning, indeed, his house, Which, hy the sign thereof, was termed so. Moreover, urge his hateful luxury, And hestial appetite in change of lust; [wives, Which stretch'd unto their servants, daughters, Even where his raging eye or savage heart, Without control, listed to make a prey. Nay, for a need, thus far come near my per-[child

Tell them, when that my mother went with Of that insatiate Edward, noble York, My princely father, then had wars in France And, by true computation of the time, Found that the issue was not his begot; Which well appeared in his lineaments, Being nothing like the noble duke my father: Yet touch this sparingly; as 'twere far off; Because, my lord, you know my mother lives. Buck. Doubt not, my lord, I'll play the orator

As if the golden plea for which I plead Were for myself: and so, my lord, adieu. Glo. If you thrive well, bring them to Bay-nard's Castle; Where yon shall find me well accompanied With reverend fathers and well learned hishops. Buck. I go; and towards three or four o'clock Look for the news that the Guildhall affords.

Clar. If you do love my brother, hate not me; I am his brother, and I love him well. If you are hir'd for meed, go back again And I will send you to my brother Gloster, Who shall reward you better for my life Than Edward will for tidings on my death.

2 Murd. You are deceiv'd, your brother Gloster hates yon. [dear:

Clar. O, no, he loves me, and he holds me Go you to him from me.

Both Murd. Ay, so we will.

Clar. Tell him, when that our princely father York Bless'd his three sons with his victorious arm. And charg'd us from his soul to love each other, He little thought of this divided friendship:

Bid Gloster think on this, and he will weep. I Murd. Ay, millstones: as he lesson'd us to weep.

Clar. O, do not slander him, for he is kind. r Murd. Right as snow in harvest.—Come, you deceive yourself:

'Tis he that sends us to destroy you here. Clar. It cannot he; for he bewept my fortune,

And hugg'd me in his arms, and swore, with sobs,

That he would labour my delivery.

1 Murd. Why, so he doth, when he delivers you

From this earth's thraldom to the joys of beaven. 2 Murd. Make peace with God, for you must die, my lord.

Clar. Have you that holy feeling in your souls, To counsel me to make my peace with God, And are you yet to your own souls so blind That you will war with God by murdering me?-O, sirs, consider, they that set you on To do this deed will hate you for the deed.

2 Murd. What shall we do?

Relent, and save your souls. Clar. 1 Murd. Relent! 'tis cowardly and womanisb. lisb. Clar. Not to relent is beastly, savage, devil-Which of you, if you were a prince's son, Being pent from liberty, as I am now,—

If two such murderers as yourselves came to

you,-

Would not entreat for life?--My friend, I spy some pity in thy looks; O, if thine eye be not a flatterer, Come thou on my side, and entreat for me, As you would beg, were you in my distress: A begging prince what beggar pities not?

2 Murd. Look behind you, my lord.

1 Murd. Take that, and that: if all this will not do. Stabs him. I'll drown you in the maimsey-butt within. [Exit with the body.

2 Murd. A bloody deed, and desperately despatch'd!

How fain, like Pilate, would I wash my hands Of this most grievous guilty murder done!

Well, I'll go hide the body in some hole, Till that the duke give order for his burial: And when I have my meed, I will away; For this will out, and then I must not stay Exit.

ACT II.

SCENE I .- LONDON. A Room in the Palace.

Enter King Edward, led in sick: Queen Elizabeth, Dorset, Rivers, Hastings. BUCKINGHAM, GREY, and others.

K. Edw. Why, so:-now have I done a good day's work:-

You peers, continue this united league: I every day expect an embassage From my Redeemer, to redeem me bence; And now in peace my soul shall part to heaven, Since I have made my friends at peace on earth. Rivers and Hastings, take each other's hand; Dissemble not your batred, swear your love.

Riv. By heaven, my soul is purg'd from grudging hate:

And with my band I seal my true heart's love. Hast. So thrive I, as I truly swear the likel K. Edw. Take heed you dally not before your king;

Lest he that is the supreme King of kings Confound your hidden falsehood, and award

Either of you to be the other's end.

Hast. So prosper I, as I swear perfect lovel

Riv. And I, as I love Hastings with my beart!

K. Edw. Madam, yourself are not exempt from this .-

Nor you, son Dorset,-Buckingham, nor you;-You have been factious one against the other. Wife, love Lord Hastings, let him kiss your hand;

And what you do, do it unfeignedly. -

Q. Eliz. There, Hastings; I will never more remember

Our former batred, so thrive I and mine! K. Edw. Dorset, embrace him;—Hastings, love lord marquis.

Dor. This interchange of love I here protest, Upon my part shall be inviolable.

Hast. And so swear I. [Embraces DORSET. K. Edw. Now, princely Buckingham, seal thou this league

With thy embracements to my wife's allies And make me happy in your unity. [hate Buck. Whenever Buckingham doth turn his

Upon your grace [to the QUEEN], but with allduteous love

Doth cherish you and yours, God punish me With bate in those where I expect most love! When I have most need to employ a friend, And most assured that be is a friend, Deep, hollow, treacherous, and full of guile, murd. How now, what mean'st thou, that Be he unto me!—this do I heg of heaven When I am cold in love to you or yours.

Embracing RIVERS. &c. K. Edw. A pleasing cordial, princely Buckingham.

Such troops of citizens to come to him: His grace not being warn'd thereof before, He fears, my lord, you mean no good to him. Buck. Sorry I am my noble cousin should Suspect me, that I mean no good to him:

Suspect me, that I mean no good to him:
By heaven, we come to him in perfect love;
And so once more return and tell his grace.
[Exil CATESBY.

When holy and devout religious men
Are at their beads, 'tis much to draw them thence,—

So sweet is zealous contemplation.

Enter GLOSTER, in a Gallery above, between two Bishops. CATESBY returns.

May. See, where his grace stands 'tween two clergymen! Iprince, Buck. Two props of virtue for a Christian
To stay him from the fall of vanity:
And, see, a book of prayer in his hand,—
True ornament to know a holy man.—
Famous Plantagenet, most gracious prince,
Lend favourable ear to our requests;
And pardon us the interruption

Of thy devotion and right Christian zeal.

Glo. My lord, there needs no such apology:
I rather do beseech you pardon me,
Who, earnest in the service of my God,
Deferr'd the visitation of my friends. [sure?
But, leaving this, what is your grace's pleaBuck. Even that, I hope, which pleaseth God above,

And all good men of this ungovern'd isle.

Glo. I do suspect I have done some offence
That seems disgracious in the city's eye;
And that you come to reprehend my ignorance.

Buck. You have, my lord: would it might please your grace,

On our entreaties, to amend your fault!

Glo. Else wherefore breathe I in a Christian land?

[resign]

Buck. Know, then, it is your fault that you The supreme seat, the throne majestical, The scepter'd office of your ancestors, Your state of fortune and your due of birth, The lineal glory of your royal house, To the corruption of a blemish'd stock: Whilst, in the mildness of your sleepy thoughts,—

Which here we waken to our country's good,-This noble isle doth want her proper limbs; Her face defac'd with scars of infamy, Her royal stock graft with ignoble plants, And almost shoulder'd in the swallowing gulf Of dark forgetfulness and deep oblivion. Which to recure, we heartily solicit Your gracious self to take on you the charge And kingly government of this your land;-Not as protector, steward, substitute, Or lowly factor for another's gain; But as successively, from blood to blood, Your right of birth, your empery, your own. For this, consorted with the citizens Your very worshipful and loving friends, And, by their vehement instigation, In this just suit come I to move your grace.

Glo. I cannot tell if to depart in silence Or bitterly to speak in your reproof Best fitteth my degree or your condition: If not to answer, you might haply think

Tongue-tied ambition, not replying, yielded To bear the golden yoke of sovereignty, Which fondly you would here impose on me; If to reprove you for this suit of yours, So season'd with your faithful love to me Then, on the other side, I check'd my friends. Therefore,—to speak, and to avoid the first, And then, in speaking, not to incur the last,-Definitely thus I answer you. Your love deserves my thanks; but my desert Unmeritable shuns your high request. First, if all obstacles were cut away, And that my path were even to the crown, As the ripe revenue and due of birth, Yet so much is my poverty of spirit, So mighty and so many my defects, That I would rather hide me from my great-Being a bark to brook no mighty sea, Than in my greatness covet to be hid And in the vapour of my glory smother'd. But, God be thank'd, there is no need of me,-And much I need to help you, were there need;-

The royal tree hath left us royal fruit,
Which, mellow'd by the stealing hours of time,
Will well become the seat of majesty,
And make, no doubt, us happy by his reign.
On him I lay that you would lay on me,—
The right and fortune of his happy stars;
Which God defend that I should wring from him!

Buck. My lord, this argues conscience in your But the respects thereof are nice and trivial, All circumstances well considered. You say that Edward is your brother's son; So say we too, but not by Edward's wife; For first was he contract to Lady Lucy, Your mother lives a witness to his yow, And afterward by substitute betroth'd To Bona, sister to the King of France. These both put off, a poor petitioner, A care-craz'd mother to a many sons, A beauty-waning and distressed widow, . Even in the afternoon of her best days, Made prize and purchase of his wanton eye, Seduc'd the pitch and height of his degree To base declension and loath'd bigamy: By her, in his unlawful bed, he got This Edward, whom our manners call the prince. More bitterly could I expostulate, Save that, for reverence to some alive, I give a sparing limit to my tongue. Then, good my lord, take to your royal self This proffer'd benefit of dignity; If not to bless us and the land withal, Yet to draw forth your noble ancestry From the corruption of abusing time gou. Unto a lineal true-derived course.

May. Do, good my lord; your citizens entreat

Buck. Refuse not, mighty lord, this proffer'd love. [suit]

Cate. O, make them joyful, grant their lawful Glo. Alas, why would you heap those cares on me?

I am unfit for state and majesty:— I do beseech you, take it not amiss; I cannot nor I will not yield to you.

Buck. If you refuse it,—as, in love and zeal, Loth to depose the child, your brother's son—As well we know your tenderness of heart,

Son. Why do you look on us, and shake your head.

And call us orphans, wretches, castaways If that our noble father be alive? both: Duch. My pretty cousins, you mistake me I do lament the sickness of the king,

As loth to lose him, not your father's death; It were lost sorrow to wail one that's lost.
Son. Then you conlude, my grandam, he is dead. The king mine uncle is to blame for this: God will revenge it; whom I will importune With earnest prayers all to that effect.

Daugh. And so will I.

Duch. Peace, children, peace! the king doth love you well: Incapable and shallow innocents,

You cannot guess who caus'd your father's Son. Grandam, we can; for my good uncle Gloster

Told me, the king, provok'd to it by the queen, Devis'd impeachments to imprison him: And when my uncle told me so, he wept, And pitied me, and kindly kiss'd my cheek Bade me rely on him as on my father, And be would love me dearly as his child.

Duch. Ah, that deceit should steal such gentle shape,

And with a virtuous visard hide deep vicel He is my son; ay, and therein my shame; Yet from my dugs he drew not this deceit. Son. Think you my uncle did dissemble, grandam?

Duch. Ay, boy. (this?) Son. I cannot think it.—Hark! what noise is Enter Oueen Elizabeth, distractedly: RIVERS and DORSET following her.

Q. Eliz. Ah, who shall hinder me to wail and weep, To chide my fortune, and torment myself? I'll join with black despair against my soul, [patience? And to myself become an enemy.

Duch. What means this scene of rude 'm-Q. Eliz. To make an act of tragic violence: Edward, my lord, thy son, our king, is dead .-Why grow the branches when the root is gone? Why wither not the leaves that want their sap?-If you will live, lament; if die, be brief, That our swift-winged souls may catch the king's;

Or, like obedient subjects, follow him

To his new kingdom of perpetual rest. frow Duch. Ah, so much interest have I in thy sor-As I had title in thy noble husband! I have bewept a worthy husband's death, And liv'd by looking on his images: But now two mirrors of his princely semblance Are crack'd in pieces by malignant death. And I for comfort have but one false glass. That grieves me when I see my shame in him. Thou art a widow; yet thou art a mother, And hast the comfort of thy children left: But death hath snatch'd my husband from mine arms, [hands,

And pluck'd two crutches from my feeble! I marvel that her grace did leave it out. [Aside. Clarence and Edward. O, what cause have Chil. Were never orphans had so dear a loss? Duch. Was never mother had so dear a loss! Alas, I am the mother of these griefs! Their woes are parcell'd, mine are general. She for an Edward weeps, and so do I; I for a Clarence weep, so doth not she: These babes for Clarence weep, and so do I; I for an Edward weep, so do not they:— Alas, you three, on me, threefold distress'd, Pour all your tears! I am your sorrow's nurse, And I will pamper it with lamentation.

Dor. Comfort, dear mother: God is much displeas'd

That you take with unthankfulness his doing: In common worldly things 'tis call'd ungrateful, With dull unwillingness to repay a debt Which with a bounteous hand was kindly lent: Much more to be thus opposite with beaven, For it requires the royal debt it lent you.

Riv. Madam, bethink you, like a careful mother, for him: Of the young prince your son: send straight Let him be crown'd; in him your comfort lives: Drown desperate sorrow in dead Edward's grave, And plant your joys in living Edward's throne.

Enter GLOSTER, BUCKINGHAM, STANLEY, HASTINGS, RATCLIFF, and others.

Glo. Sister, have comfort: all of us have cause

To wail the dimming of our shining star; But none can cure their harms by wailing them .-

Madam, my mother, I do cry you mercy; I did not see your grace:-humbly on my knee I crave your blessing. Ithy breast, Duch. God bless thee; and put meekness in Love, charity, obedience, and true daty.

Glo. Amen; and make me die a good old man!-

That is the butt end of a mother's blessing Buck. You cloudy princes and heart-sorrowing peers,

Were red-hot steel, to sear me to the brain! Anointed let me be with deadly venom, And die ere men can say God save the Oueen!

Q. Eliz. Go, go, poor soul, I envy not thy glory;

To feed my humour, wish thyself no harm.

Anne. No, why?—When he that is my husband now

Came to me, as I follow'd Henry's corse; When scarce the blood was well wash'd from his hands

Which issu'd from my other angel husband And that dead saint which then I weeping follow'd;

O, when, I say, I look'd on Richard's face. This was my wish, -Be thou, quoth I, accurs'd For making me, so young, so old a widow! And when thou wedd'st, let sorrow haunt thy bed;

And be thy wife,—if any be so mad,-More miserable by the life of thee [death! Than thou hast made me by my dear lord's Lo, ere I can repeat this curse again, Within so small a time, my woman's heart Grossly grew captive to his honey words. And prov'd the subject of mine own soul's curse,

Which hitherto bath held mine eyes from rest: For never yet one hour in his bed Did I enjoy the golden dew of sleep But with his timorous dreams was still awak'd. Besides, he hates me for my father Warwick; And will, no doubt, shortly be rid of me.

Q. Eliz. Poor heart, adjeut I pity thy complaining. Anne. No more than with my soul I mourn [glory] for yours. Q. Eliz. Farewell, thou woeful welcomer of Anne. Adien, poor soul, that tak'st thy leave

Duch. Go thou to Richmond, and good fortune guide thee!-- . [To DORSET. Go thou to Richard, and good angels tend thee!-To Anne. Go thou to sanctuary, and good thoughts possess thee! [To QUEEN ELIZABETH. I to my grave, where peace and rest lie with mel Eighty odd years of sorrow have I seen, And each hour's joy wreck'd with a week of teen.

Q. Eliz. Stay yet, look back with me unto the Tower.

Pity, you ancient stones, those tender babes, Whom envy hath immur'd within your walls! Rough cradle for such little pretty ones! Rude ragged nurse, old sullen playfellow For tender princes, use my babies well! So foolish sorrow bids your stones farewell. Exeunt.

Buck. Say on, my loving lord. K. Rich. Why, Buckingham, I say, I would be king. Buck. Why, so you are, my thrice-renowned K. Rich. Ha! am I king? 'tis so: but Edward lives.

Buck. True, noble prince.

K. Rich. O bitter consequence, That Edward still should live,-true, noble prince!-Cousin, thou wast not wont to be so dull:-Shall I be plain?-I wish the bastards dead: And I would have it suddenly perform'd.

What say'st thou now? speak suddenly, be brief. Buck. Your grace may do your pleasure. K. Rich. Tut, tut, thou art all ice, thy kind-

ACT III.

Scene I .- London. A Street.

The trumpels sound. Enter the PRINCE OF WALES, GLOSTER, BUCKINGHAM, CATESBY, CARDINAL BOUCHIER, and others.

Buck. Welcome, sweet prince, to London, to your chamber.

Glo. Welcome, dear cousin, my thoughts' sovereign:

The weary way hath made you melancholy.

Prince. No, uncle; but our crosses on the WAY Have made it tedious, wearisome, and heavy: I want more uncles here to welcome me.

Glo. Sweet prince, the untainted virtue of your years Hath not yet div'd into the world's deceit:

No more can you distinguish of a man Than of his outward show; which, God he knows, Seldom or never jumpeth with the heart. Those uncles which you want were dangerous; Your grace attended to their sugar'd words, But look'd not on the poison of their hearts: God keep you from them, and from such false friends!

Prince. God keep me from false friends! but they were none. [greet you. Glo. My lord, the mayor of London comes to Fie, what a slug is Hastings, that he comes not To tell us whether they will come or uo! Buck. And, in good time, here comes the sweating lord.

Enter HASTINGS.

Prince. Welcome, my lord: what, will our mother come?

Hast. On what occasion, God he knows, not

The queen your mother and your brother York Have taken sauctuary: the tender prince Would fain have come with me to meet your grace,

But by his mother was perforce withheld. Buck. Fie, what an indirect and peevish course Is this of hers?-Lord cardinal, will your grace K. Rich. Come to me, Tyrrel, soon, at after supper,

When thou shalf tell the process of their death. Meantime, but think how I may do thee good, And be inheritor of thy desire. Farewell till then.

Tyr. I humbly take my leave. [Exit. K. Rich. The son of Clarence have I pent up close;

Cate. He will do all in all as Hastings doth. Buck. Well, then, no more but this: go, gentle Cateshy,

And, as it were far off, sound thon Lord Hast-How he doth stand affected to our purpose; And summon him to-morrow to the Tower, To sit about the coronation. If thou dost find him tractable to us.

Encourage him, and tell him all our reasons: If he be leaden, icy, cold, unwilling, Be thou so too; and so break off the talk, And give us notice of his inclination: For we to-morrow hold divided councils. Wherein thyself shalt highly be employ'd.

Glo. Commend me to Lord William: tell him, Cateshy,

His ancient knot of dangerous adversaries To-morrow are let blood at Pomfret Castle; And hid my lord, for joy of this good news, Give Mistress Shore one gentle kiss the more. Buck. Good Cateshy, go, effect this business soundly. II can. Cate. My good lords both, with all the heed Glo. Shall we hear from you, Cateshy, ere we sleep?

Cate. You shall, my lord.

Glo. At Croshy Place, there shall you find us hoth. Exit CATESBY. Buck. Now, my lord, what shall we do if we perceive Lord Hastings will not yield to our complots?

Glo. Chop off his head, man; -- somewhat we will do:-

And look, when I am king, claim thou of me The earldom of Hereford, and all the movables Whereof the king my hrother was possess'd. Buck. I'll claim that promise at your grace's hand kindness. Glo. And look to have it yielded with all Come, let us sup betimes, that afterwards We may digest our complots in some form.

Scene IV .- London. A Room in the Tower.

BUCKINGHAM, STANLEY, HASTINGS, the BISHOP OF ELY, RATCLIFFE, LOVEL, and others, sitting at a table: Officers of the Council attending.

Hast. Now, noble peers, the cause why we are met

Is to determine of the coronation.

In God's name, speak, -- when is the royal day? Buck. Are all things ready for that royal time?

Stan. They are; and wants hut nomination. Ely. To-morrow, then, I judge a happy day. Buck. Who knows the lord protector's mind herein?

Who is most inward with the noble duke? Ely. Your grace, we think, should soonest know his mind.

Buck. We know each other's faces: for our hearts,

He knows no more of mine than I of yours; Nor I of his, my lord, than you of mine .-

Lord Hastings, you and he are near in love.

Hast. I thank his grace, I know he loves me well;

But for his purpose in the coronation I have not sounded him, nor he deliver'd His gracious pleasure any way therein: But you, my noble lords, may name the time; And in the duke's behalf I'll give my voice, Which, I presume, he'll take in gentle part.

Ely. In happy time, here comes the duke himself.

Enter GLOSTER.

Glo. My noble lords and cousins all, goodmorrow.

I have been long a sleeper; hut I trust My absence doth neglect no great design Which by my presence might have been concluded.

Buck. Had you not come upon your cue, my lord,

William Lord Hastings had pronounc'd your I mean, your voice,—for crowning of the king. For I, too fond, might have prevented this.

Proclaim a pardon to the soldiers fled
That in submission will return to us:
And then, as we have ta'en the sacrament,
We will unite the white rose and the red:—
Smile heaven upon this fair conjunction,
That long hath frown'd upon their enmity!
What traitor hears me, and says not Amen?
England hath long been mad, and scarr'd herself;

The brother blindly shed the brother's blood, The father rashly slaughter'd his own son, The son, compell'd, been butcher to the sire: All this divided York and Lancaster, Divided in their dire division,—

O, now let Richmond and Elizabeth, The true succeeders of each royal house, By God's fair ordinance conjoin together! And let their heirs,—God, if thy will be so,—Enrich the time to come with smooth'd-fac'd peace,

With smiling plenty, and fair prosperous days! Abate the edge of traitors, gracious Lord, That would reduce these bloody days again, And make poor England weep in streams of blood!

Let them not live to taste this land's increase That would with treason wound this fair land's peace!

Now civil wounds are stopp'd, peace lives again:
That she may long live here, God say Amen!

ACT I.

Scene I.—London. An Ante-Chamber in the Palace.

Enter the DUKE OF NORFOLK at one door; at the other, the DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM and the LORD ABERGAVENNY.

Buck. Good-morrow, and well met. How have you done

Since last we saw in France?

I thank your grace, Healthful; and ever since a fresh admirer Of what I saw there.

An untimely ague Stay'd me a prisoner in my chamber, when Those suns of glory, those two lights of men, Met in the vale of Andren.

Nor. 'Twixt Guynes and Arde: I was then present, saw them salute on horseback; (clung

Beheld them, when they lighted, how they In their embracement, as they grew together Which had they, what four thron'd ones could have weigh'd

Such a compounded one?

All the whole time Buck. I was my chamber's prisoner.

Nor. Then you lost The view of earthly glory: men might say, Till this time pomp was single, but now married

To one above itself. Each following day Became the next day's master, till the last Made former wonders it's: to-day the French, All clinquant, all in gold, like heathen gods, Shone down the English; and to-morrow they Made Britain India: every man that stood Show'd like a mine. Their dwarfish pages

As cherubims, all gilt: the madams too, Not us'd to toil, did almost sweat to bear The pride upon them, that their very labour Was to them as a painting: now this masque Was cried incomparable; and the ensuing night Made it a fool and beggar. The two kings, Equal in lustre, were now best, now worst, As presence did present them; him in eye, Still him in praise: and, being present both, 'Twas said they saw but one; and no discerner Durst wag his tongue in censure. When these ileng'd suns.

For so they phrase 'em, - by their heralds chal-The noble spirits to arms, they did perform Beyond thought's compass: that former fabulous story, Being now seen possible enough, got credit, That Bevis was believ'd.

Buck. O, you go far. Nor. As I belong to worship, and affect In honour honesty, the tract of everything Would by a good discourser lose some life, Which action's self was tongue to. All was royal;

To the disposing of it naught rebell'd, Order gave each thing view; the office did Distinctly his full function.

Who did guide-Buck. I mean, who set the body and the limbs Of this great sport together, as you guess?

Nor. One, certes, that promises no element In such a business.

Buck. I pray you, who my lord? Nor. All this was order'd by the good discretion

Of the right reverend Cardinal of York. [freed Buck. The devil speed him! no man's pie is Krom his ambitious finger. What had be To do in these fierce vanities? I wonder That such a keech can with his very bulk Take up the rays o' the benefical sun, And keep it from the earth.

Nor. Surely, sir, There's in him stuff that puts him to these ends; For, being not propped by ancestry, whose Chalks successors their way; nor call'd upon For high feats done to the crown; neither allied To eminent assistants; but, spider-like, Out of his self-drawing web, he gives us note The force of his own merit makes his way: A gift that heaven gives for him, which buys A place next to the king.

I cannot tell Aber. What heaven hath given him,—let some graver eye Pierce into that; but I can see his pride Peep through each part of him: whence has he that?

If not from hell, the devil is a niggard; Or has given all before, and he begins A new hell in himself.

Why the devil, Buck. Upon this French going-out, took he upon him, Without the privity o' the king, to appoint Who should attend on him? He makes up the file

Of all the gentry; for the most part such To whom as great a charge as little bonour He meant to lay upon: and his own letter, The honourable board of council out, Must fetch him in the papers.

I do know Abet. Kinsmen of mine, three at the least, that bave By this so sicken'd their estates that never They shall abound as formerly.

O, many / l'em Buck. Have broke their backs with laying manors on What did this vanity For this great journey. But minister communication of A most poor issue?

Grievingly I think, Nor. The peace between the French and us not

The cost that did conclude it. Every man, Buck. After the hideous storm that follow'd was A thing inspir'd; and, not consulting, broke values,

To make amends I'll give it to your daughter. If I have kill'd the issue of your womb, To quicken your increase I will heget Mine issue of your blood npon your daughter: A grandam's name is little less in love Than is the doating title of a mother They are as children hut one step below. Even of your mettle, of your very blood; Of all one pain,—save for a night of groans Endur'd of ber, for whom you bid like sorrow. Your children were vexation to your youth; But mine shall be a comfort to your age. The loss you have is hut a son being king, And by that loss your daughter is made queen. I cannot make you what amends I would, Therefore accept such kindness as I can Dorset your son, that with a fearful soul Leads discontented steps in foreign soil. This fair alliance quickly shall call home To high promotions and great dignity: The king, that calls your heauteous daughter Familiarly shall call thy Dorset brother; Again shall you be mother to a king, And all the ruins of distressful times Repair'd with double riches of content. Whatl we have many goodly days to see: The liquid drops of tears that you have shed Shall come again, transform'd to orient pearl, Advantaging their loan with interest Of ten-times-double gain of happiness. Go, then, my mother, to thy daughter go; Make hold her hashful years with your experience,

Prepare her ears to hear a wooer's tale: Put in her tender heart the aspiring flame Of golden sovereignty; acquaint the princess With the sweet silent hours of marriage joys: And when this arm of mine hath chastised The petty rehel, dull-hrain'd Bnckingham, Bound with triumphant garlands will I come, And lead thy daughter to a conqueror's bed; To whom I will retail my conquest won And she shall he sole victress, Caesar's Caesar.

Q. Eliz. What were I hest to say? her father's hrother

Would he her lord? or shall I say her uncle? Or he that slew her hrothers and her uncles? Under what title shall I woo for thee, That God, the law, my honour, and her love Can make seem pleasing to her tender years?

Q. Eliz. But how long fairly shall her sweet K. Rich. As long as heaven and nature lengthens it.

Q. Eliz. As long as hell and Richard likes of K. Rich. Say I, ber sovereign, am her subject low.

Q. Eliz. But she, your subject, loathes such sovereignty.

K. Rich. Be eloquent in my hehalf to her. Q. Eliz. An bonest tale speeds hest being that is past. Q. Eliz. Harp on it still shall I till beartstrings break.

K. Rich. Now, by my George, my garter, and my crown, nsurp'd.

Q. Eliz. Profan'd, disbonour'd, and the third K. Rich. I swear,—

Q. Eliz. By nothing; for this is no onth: Thy George, profan'd hath lost his boly bonour; Tby garter, blemish'd, pawn'd his knightly virtue:

Thy crown, nsurp'd, disgrac'd his kingly glory. If something thou wouldst swear to be believ'd, Swear, then, by something that thou hast not wrong'd.

K. Rich. Now, by the world,—
Q. Eliz. 'Tis full of thy foul wrongs.

O. Eliz. 'Tis full of K. Rich. My father's death, Q. Eliz. Thy life hath K. Rich. Then, by myself, Thy life hath that dishonour'd.

Q. Eliz. Thyself I K. Rich. Why, then, hy God,-Thyself is self-misus'd.

God's wrong is most of all. If thou hadst fear'd to break an oath by him, The unity the king thy brother made

Had not been hroken, nor my brother slain: If thou hadst fear'd to break an oath by him, The imperial metal, circling now thy bead, Had grac'd the tender temples of my child; And both the princes had been breathing here, Which now, two tender bedfellows for dust, Thy broken faith bath made a prey for worms. What canst thou swear hy now?

The time to come. K. Rich. Q. Eliz. That thou hast wrong'd in the time o'erpast;

For I myself have many tears to wash Hereafter time, for time past wronged by thee. The children live whose parents thou hast slanghter'd, Ungovern'd youth, to wail it in their age; The parents live whose children thou hast hutcher'd.

Old harren plants, to wail it with their age. Swear not by time to come; for that thou bast Misus'd ere used, by times ill-us'd o'erpast.

C. Rich. As I intend to prosper and repentl So thrive I in my dangerous attempt Of hostile arms! myself myself confound! Heaven and fortune har me happy hours! Day, yield me not thy light; nor, night, thy restl

Be opposite all planets of good luck To my proceeding!—if, with pure heart's love, Immaculate devotion, holy thoughts,

I tender not thy heauteous princely daughter! In her consists my happiness and thine; Without her, follows to myself and thee,

Does buy and sell his honour as he pleases. And for his own advantage.

I am sorry To hear this of him; and could wish he were Something mistaken in't.

No, not a syllable: I do pronounce him in that very shape He shall appear in proof.

Enter Brandon, a Sergeant-at-Arms before him, and two or three of the Guard.

Bran. Your office, sergeant; execute it. Serg. My lord the Duke of Buckingham, and Earl Of Hereford, Stafford, and Northampton, I Arrest thee of high treason, in the name Of our most sovereign king.

Buck. Lo, you, my lord, The net has fall'n upon mel I shall perish

Under device and practice.

I am sorry To see you ta'en from liberty, to look on The business present: 'tis his highness' pleasure You shall to the Tower.

Buck. It will help me nothing To plead mine innocence; for that dye is on me Which makes my whit'st part black. The will of heaven

Q. Kath. Thank your majesty. That you would love yourself, and in that love Not unconsider'd leave your honour, nor The dignity of your office, is the point Of my petition.

K. Hen. Lady mine, proceed. Q. Kath. I am solicited, not by a few, And those of true condition, that your subjects Are in great grievance: there have been commissions Sent down among 'em which have flaw'd the heart

Of all their loyalties: - wherein, although, My good lord cardinal, they vent reproaches Most bitterly on you, as putter-on

Of these exactions, yet the king our master,-Whose honour Heaven shield from soil!—even he escapes not

Language unmannerly, yea, such which breaks The sides of loyalty, and almost appears In lond rebellion.

Nor. Not almost appears,-It doth appear; for, upon these taxations, The clothiers all, not able to maintain Them any to them longing, have put off The spinsters, carders, fullers, weavers, who, Unfit for other life, compell'd by hunger And lack of other means, in desperate manner Daring the event to the teeth, are all in uproar, And danger serves among them.

K. Hen.

Taxation! Wherein? and what taxation?—My lord cardinal, You that are blam'd for it alike with us, Know you of this taxation?

Please you, sir, I know but of a single part, in aught Pertains to the state; and front but in that file

This is All-Souls' day, fellows, is it not?

Sher. It is, my lord. [doomsday.

Buck. Why, then, All-Souls' day is my hody's
This is the day which in King Edward's time
I wisb'd might fall on me, when I was found
False to his children or his wife's allies;
This is the day wherein I wish'd to fall
By the false faith of him whom most I trusted;
This, this All-Soul's day to my fearful soul
Is the determin'd respite of my wrongs:
That high All-Seer which I dallied with Hath turn'd my feigned prayer on my head,
And given in earnest what I begg'd in jest.

Went through the army, cheering up the Think how thou stabb'dst me in my prime of soldiers.

K. Rich. So, I am satisfied.—Give me a bowl of wine:

I have not that alacrity of spirit Nor cheer of mind that I was wont to have. Set it down .- Is ink and paper ready? Rat. It is, my lord.

K. Rich. Bid my guard watch; leave me. Retcliff, about the mid of night come to my tent And help to arm me. Leave me, I say.
[K. Rich. retires into his tent. Exeunt

RATCLIFF and CATESBY.

RICHMOND'S tent opens, and discovers him and his Officers, &c.

Enter STANLEY.

Stan. Fortune and victory sit on thy helm! Richm. All comfort that the dark night can afford

Be to thy person, noble father-in-law! Tell me, how fares our loving mother? Stan. I, by attorney, bless thee from thy mother, Who prays continually for Richmond's good: So much for that .- The silent bours steal on, And flaky darkness breaks within the east. In brief,-for so the season bids us be. Prepare thy battle early in the morning, And put thy fortune to the arbitrement Of bloody strokes and mortal-staring war. I, as I may,—that which I would I cannot, With best advantage will deceive the time, And aid thee in this donbtful stroke of arms: But on thy side I may not be too forward, Lest, being seen, thy brother, teuder George, Bo executed in his father's sight. Farewell: the leisure and the fearful time Cuts off the ceremonious vows of love And ample interchange of sweet discourse, Which so-long-sunder'd friends should dwell npon:

God give us leisuro for these rites of lovel Once more, adieu: bo valiant, and speed well! Richm. Good lords, conduct him to his reri-

ment: I'll strive, with troubled thoughts, to take u

nap, Lest loaden slumber peise me down to-morrow, When I should mount with wings of victory:

Once more, good-night, kind lords and gentle-[Exeunt Lords, &c. with STAN.

O Thou whose captain I account myself, Look ou my forces with u gracious eye; Put in their hands thy bruising irons of wrath, That they may crush down with a heavy fall The usurping helmets of our udversaries! Make ns thy ministers of chastisement, That we may praiso thee in thy victory! To thee I do commend my watchful soul Ere I let fall the windows of mine eyes: Sleoping and waking, O, defend me still! Wol. What's that? Cham. Look out there, some of ye. Exit a Servant.

Wol. What warlike voice. And to what end, is this?—Nay ladies, fear not; By all the laws of war ye're privileg'd.

Re-enter Servant.

Cham. How now! what is't?

Serv. A noble troop of strangers. For so they seem: they have left their barge, and landed:

And hither make, as great ambassadors From foreign princes.

Wol. Good lord chamberlain. Go, give 'em welcome; you can speak the French tongue; And, pray receive 'em nobly, and conduct 'em Into our presence, where this heaven of beauty Shall shine at full upon them.—Some attend

> Exit Chamberlain attended. All arise, and tables removed.

You have now a broken banquet: but we'll mend it.

A good digestion to you all: and once more I shower a welcome on you; -welcome all.

Hautboys. Enter the KIRG, and others, as maskers, habited like shepherds, with Torchbearers, ushered by the Lord Chamberlain. They pass directly before the CARDINAL, and gracefully salute him.

A noble company! what are their pleasures? Cham. Because they speak no English, thus they pray'd

To tell your grace,—that, having heard by fame Of this so noble and so fair assembly This night to meet here, they could do no less Out of the great respect they bear to beauty, But leave their flocks; and, under your fair conduct,

Crave leave to view these ladies, and entreat

An hour of revels with 'em.

₩ol. Say, lord chamberlain, They have done my poor house grace, for which I pay 'em [pleasures.

K. Hen. The fairest hand I ever touch'd! O beauty.

Till now I never knew thee! Music. Dance. Wol. My lord,-

Cham. Your grace?

Wol. Pray tell them thus much from me:-There should be one amongst them, by his person.

More worthy this place than myself; to whom, If I but knew him, with my love and duty

I would surrender it. Cham.

I will, my lord. [Goes to the Maskers, and returns. He pleaded still not guilty, and alleg'd

Wol. What say they?

Such a one, they all confess, Cham. There is indeed; which they would have your grace

Find out, and he will take it. Wol.

Let me see, then,-[Comes from his state. By all your good leaves, gentlemen:-here I'll make My royal choice.

Ye have found him, cardinal: K. Hen. Unmasking. You hold a fair assembly; you do well, lord:

You are a churchman, or Pll tell you, cardinal I should judge now unhappily.

I am glad Your grace is grown so pleasant.

K. Hen. My lord chamberlain, Pr'ythee, come hither: what fair lady's that? Cham. An't please your grace, Sir Thomas Bullen's daughter,women. The Viscount Rochford, one of her highness' K. Hen. By heaven, she is a dainty one .-

I were unmannerly to take you out, And not to kiss you.—A health, gentlemen! Let it go round.

Wol. Sir Thomas Lovell, is the banquet ready I' the privy chamber?

Lov.

Sweetheart.

Yes. my ford. Your grace, Wol.

I fear, with dancing is a little heated.

K. Hen. I fear, too much.

Wol. There's fresher air, my lord. In the next chamber. [sweet partner, K. Hen. Lead in your ladies, every one:-

I must not yet forsake you:-let's be merry:-Good my lord cardinal, I have half a dozen healths

To drink to these fair ladies, and a measure To lead 'em once again; and then let's dream Who's best in favour.—Let the music knock it Exeunt, with trumpels.

K. Rich. What said Northumberland as touching Richmond?

Rat. That be was never trained up in arms. K. Rich. He said the truth: and what said

Surrey then? [purpose. Rat. He smil'd, and said, the better for our K. Rich. He was in the right; and so, in-deed, it is. [Clock strikes.

Tell the clock there.—Give me a calendar.— Who saw the sun to-day? Not I, my lord. Rat.

K. Rich. Then he disdains to shine; for by the book

He should bave brav'd the east an bour ago: A black day will it he to somehody.-Ratcliff, Rat. My lord?

H. Rich. The sun will not he seen to-day: The sky doth frown and lower upon our army. I would these dewy tears were from the ground. Not shine to-day! Why, what is that to me More than to Richmond? for the selfsame heaven

That frowns on me looks sadly upon him.

Enter Norfolk.

Nor. Arm, arm, my lord; the foe vaunts in the field. horse:-

K. Rich. Come, bustle, hustle; caparison my Call up Lord Stanley, hid him bring his power: I will lead forth my soldiers to the plain, And thus my battle shall he ordered: My forward shall be drawn out all in length, Consisting equally of horse and foot; Our archers shall he placed in the midst: John Duke of Norfolk, Thomas Earl of Surrey, Shall have the leading of this foot and borse. They thus directed, we ourself will follow In the main battle; whose puissance on either side Shall he well winged with our chiefest horse. This, and Saint George to hoot!-What think'st thou, Norfolk?

Nor. A good direction, warlike sovereign. This found I on my tent this morning.

[Giving a scroll. K. Rich. [Reads.] Jocky of Norfolk, be not too ·bold,

For Dickon thy master is bought and sold. A thing devised by the enemy.-Go, gentlemen, every man unto his charge: Let not our habbling dreams affright our souls; Conscience is but a word that cowards use, Devis'd at first to keep the strong in awe: Our strong arms he our conscience, swords our law. March on, join hravely, let us to 't pell-mell; If not to heaven, then band in band to hell. What shall I say more than I have inferr'd? Remember whom you are to cope withal;-

A sort of vagabonds, rascals, and runaways, A scum of Bretagnes, and base lackey peasants, Whom their o'er-cloyed country vomits forth To desperate ventures and assur'd destruction. You sleeping safe, they bring you to unrest; You having lands, and bless'd with heanteous wives,

They would restrain the one, distain the other. And who doth lead them but a paltry fellow, Long kept in Bretagne at our mother's cost? A milk sop, one that never in his life Felt so much cold as over shoes in snow? Let's whip these stragglers o'er the seas again; Lash bence these over-weening rags of France, These famisb'd beggars, weary of their lives; Who, hut for dreaming on this fond exploit, For want of means, poor rats, had hang'd themselves: If we he conquer'd, let men conquer us, And not these bastard Bretagnes; whom our fathers Ithump'd. Have in their own land beaten, hobb'd, and

And, on record, left them the beirs of shame. Shall these enjoy our lands? lie with our wives?

Ravish our daughters?-Hark! I hear their drum. Drum afar off. Fight, gentlemen of Englandi fight, bold yeomen!

Draw, archers, draw your arrows to the bead! Spur your proud borses bard, and ride in blood; Amaze the welkin with your hroken staves!

Enter a Messenger.

What says Lord Stanley? will he hring his power?

Mess. My lord, he doth deny to come. K. Rich. Off with his son George's head! Nor. My lord, the enemy is pass'd the marsh:

After the hattle let George Stanley die. K. Rich. A thousand hearts are great within my bosom:

Advance our standards, set upon our foes; Our ancient word of courage, fair Saint George, Inspire us with the spleen of fiery dragons! Upon them! Victory sits on our helms.

Exeunt.

Scene IV .- Another part of the Field.

Alarum: excursions. Enter Norfolk and Forces; to him CATESBY.

Cate. Rescue, my Lord of Norfolk, rescue, rescuel

The king enacts more wonders than a man, Daring an opposite to every danger: His horse is slain, and all on foot be fights, Seeking for Richmond in the throat of death Rescue, fair lord, or else the day is lost!

Alanum. Enter King Richard.

K. Rich. A horse! a horse! my kingdom for a horse!

Cate. Withdraw, my lord; I'll belp you to a horse.

K. Rich. Slave, I have set my life upon a cast, and I will stand the hazard of the die: I think there he six Richmonds in the field;

2 Gent. This secret is so weighty, 'twill re-A strong faith to conceal it. 1 Gent. Let me have it:

I do not talk much.

2 Gent. I am confident; You shall, sir: did you not of late days hear A buzzing of a separation

Between the king and Katherine?

I Gent. Yes, but it held not: For when the king once heard it, out of anger He sent command to the lord mayor straight To stop the rumour, and allay those tongues That durst disperse it

But that slander, sir, 2 Gent. Is found a truth now: for it grows again Fresher than e'er it was; and held for certain The king will venture at it. Either the cardinal, Or some about him near, have, out of malice To the good queen, possess'd him with a scruple That will undo her: to confirm this too Cardinal Campeius is arriv'd, and lately;

As all think for this business. 'Tis the cardinal; . 1. Gent. And merely to revenge him on the emperor For not bestowing on him, at his asking, The archbishopric of Toledo, this is purpos'd.

Will have his will, and she must fall. 'Tis woeful. We are too open here to argue this;

Let's think in private more.

An Ante-chamber in the Palace.

Enter the Lord Chamberlain reading a letter.

Cham. My lord,-The horses your lordship sent for, with all the care I had, I saw well chosen, ridden, and furnished. They were young and handsome, and of the best breed in When they were ready to set out for the north. London, a man of my lord cardinal's, by commission and main power, took 'em from me; with this reason,—His master would be served before a subject, if not before the king; which stopped our mouths, sir.

I fear he will indeed: well, let him have them: He will have all, I think.

Enter the DUKES OF NORFOLK and SUFFOLK,

Nor. Well met, my Lord Chamberlain. Cham. Good-day to both your graces. Suf. How is the king employ'd?

Cham. I left him private, Full of sad thoughts and troubles.

Nor. What's the cause? Cham. It seems the marriage with his brother's wife Has crept too near his conscience.

Suf. No, his conscience Has crept too near another lady.

This is the cardinal's doing, the king-cardinal: That blind priest, like the eldest son of fortune, Turns what he lists. The king will know him [self else. one day. Suf. Pray God he dol he'll never know him-Nor. How holily he works in all his business! And with what zeall for, now he has crack'd

[nephew, the league Between us and the emperor, the queen's great-He dives into the king's soul, and there scatters Dangers, doubts, wringing of the conscience, Fears, and despairs,—and all these for his marriage:

And out of all these to restore the king, He counsels a divorce; a loss of her That, like a jewel, has hung twenty years. About his neck, yet never lost her lustre; Of her that loves him with that excellence That angels love good men with; even of her That, when the greatest stroke of fortune falls, Will bless the king: and is not this course pious?

Cham. Heaven keep me from such counsell.
'Tis most true [speaks'em, These news are everywhere; every tongue And every true heart weeps for't: all that dare Look into these affairs see this main end,-The French king's sister. Heaven will one day open The king's eyes, that so long have slept upon This bold bad man.

And free us from his slavery. Suf. Nor. We had need pray,

And heartily, for our deliverance; Or this imperious man will work us all From princes into pages: all men's honours Lie like one lump before him, to be fashion'd Into what pitch he please.

For me, my lords, Suf. [Exeunt. | I love him not, nor fear him; there's my creed:

PROLOGUE.

I come no more to make you laugh: things now That bear a weighty and a serious brow, Sad, high, and working, full of state and woe, Such noble scenes as draw the eye to flow, We now present. Those that can pity, here May, if they think it well, let fall a tear; The subject will deserve it. Such as give Their money out of hope they may believe, May here find truth too. Those that come to Our own brains, and the opinion that we bring,

Only a show or two, and so agree

The play may pass, if they be still and willing, I'll undertake may see away their shilling Richly in two short hours. Only they That come to hear a merry bawdy play, A noise of targets, or to see a fellow In a long motley coat guarded with yellow, Will be deceived; for, gentle hearers, know, To rank our chosen truth with such a show As fool and fight is, beside forfeiting To make that only true we now intend, Will leave us never an understanding friend.

If I command him, follows my appointment: I will have none so near else. Learn this, brother.

Scene III.—London. An Ante-chamber in the Queen's Apartments.

Enter Anne Bullen and an Old Lady.

Anne. Not for that neither: here's the pang that pinches:-

His highness having liv'd so long with her, and

So good a lady that no tongue could ever Pronounce dishonour of her,—by my life, She never knew harm-doing; -O, now, after So many courses of the sun enthron'd, Still growing in a majesty and pomp,—the which To leave a thousand-fold more bitter than Tis sweet at first to acquire,—after this process, To give her the avaunt! it is a pity Would move a monster.

Old L. Hearts of most hard temper

O. God's will much better Anne. She ne'er had known pomp: though it be tem-

Yet, if that quarrel, fortune, do divorce It from the bearer, its a sufferance panging As soul and body's severing.
Alas, poor lady!

She's a stranger now again.

Anne. So much the more Must pity drop upon her. Verily, I swear, 'tis better to be lowly born, And range with humble livers in content, Than to be perk'd up in a glistering grief, And wear a golden sorrow.

Old L. Our content

Is our best having. By my troth and maidenhead, Anne.

I would not be a queen. Beshrew me, I would, $Old\ L.$

And venture maidenhead for't; and so would

For all this spice of your hypocrisy: You, that have so fair parts of woman on you, Have too a woman's heart; which ever yet Affected eminence, wealth, sovereignty; Which, to say sooth, are blessings;—and which gifts, Saving your mincing,—the capacity Of your soft cheveril conscience would receive If you might please to stretch it.

Anne Nay, good troth,-Old L. Yes, troth and troth; you would not be a queen?

Old. L. 'Tis strange: a threepence bowed would hire me,

Old as I am, to queen it: but, I pray you. What think you of a duchess? have you limbs To bear that load of title?

Anne. No, in truth. Old L. Then you are weakly made: pluck off a little;

I would not be a young count in your way For more than blushing comes to: if your back Cannot vouchsafe this burden, 'tis too weak. Ever to get a boy.

How you do talk! Anne. I swear again I would not be a queen For all the world.

Old L. In faith, for little England You'd venture an emballing: I myself Would for Carnarvonshire, although there long'd [here? No more to the crown but that. Lo, who comes

Enter the Lord Chamberlain.

Cham. Good-morrow, ladies. What wer't worth to know

The secret of your conference?

Аппе. My good lord, Not your demand; it values not your asking: Our mistress' sorrows we were pitying.

Cham. It was a gentle business, and becom-The action of good women: there is hope All will be well.

Anne. Now, I pray God, amen! Cham. You bear a gentle mind, and heavenly [lady, blessings

Follow such creatures. That you may, fair Perceive I speak sincerely, and high note's Ta'en of your many virtues, the king's majesty Commends his good opinion of you to you, and Does purpose honour to you no less flowing Than Marchioness of Pembroke; to which title A thousand pound a year, annual support, Out of his grace he adds.

I do not know Anne. What kind of my obedience I should tender; More than my all is nothing: nor my prayers Are not words duly hallow'd, nor my wishes More worth than empty vanities; yet prayers and wishes Beseech your lordship, Are all I can return. Vouchsafe to speak my thanks and my obedience.

As from a blushing handmaid, to his highness; Whose health and royalty I pray for.

Lady, I shall not fail to approve the fair conceit The king hath of you.—I have perus'd her well;

Beauty and honour in her are so mingled That they have caught the king: and who knows yet

But from this lady may proceed a gem To lighten all this isle?—I'll to the king And say I spoke with you

My honour'd lord. Anne. . [Exit Lord Chamberlain.

Old L. Why, this it is; see, see! I have been begging sixteen years in court, Am yet a courtier beggarly,—nor could Anne. No not for all the riches under heaven. | Come pat betwirt too early and too late

Into a general prophecy, -That this tempest, Dashing the garment of this peace, aboded Dashing the gamma.
The sudden breach on't.
Which is budded out;

For France hath flaw'd the league, and hath attach'd

Our merchants' goods at Bordeaux. Aber. Is it therefore The ambassador is silenc'd?

Marry, is't. Nor.

Aber. A proper title of a peace; and purchas'd

At a superfluous rate!
Why, all this business Our reverend cardinal carried.

Like it your grace, Nor. The state takes notice of the private difference Betwixt you and the cardinal. I advise you, And take it from a heart that wishes towards you

Honour and plenteous safety,-that you read The cardinal's malice and his potency Together; to consider further, that What his high hatred would effect wants not You know his nature, A minister in his power. That he's revengeful; and I know his sword

Hath a sharp edge: it's long, and, 'tmay be said, It reaches far; and where 'twill not extend, Thither he darts it. Bosom up my counsel, You'll find it wholesome.-Lo, where comes that rock

That I advise you shunning.

Enter CARDINAL WOLSEY, the purse borne be-fore him, certain of the Guard, and two Sec-retaries with papers. The CARDINAL in his passage fixeth his eye on BUCKINGHAM, and BUCKINGHAM on him, both full of disdain.

Wol. The Duke of Buckingham's surveyor?

Where's his examination?

Here, so please you. 1 Secr. Wol. Is he in person ready?

Ay, please your grace. 1 Secr. Wol. Well, we shall then know more; and Buckingham Shall lessen this big look. Exeunt WOLSEY and Train. Buck. This butcher's cur is venom-mouth'd, and I ·Have not the power to muzzle him; therefore best Not wake him in his slumber. A beggar's book

Outworths a noble's blood.

Nor. What, are you chaf'd? Ask God for temperance; that's the appliance only

Which your disease requires.

Buck. I read in's looks Matter against me; and his eye revil'd Me, as his abject object: at this instant [king; He bores me with some trick: he's gone to the I'll follow, and outstare him.

Nor. Stay, my lord, And let your reason with your choler question What 'tis you go about: to climb steep hills Requires slow pace at first: anger is like A full-hot horse, who being allow'd his way, Self-mettle tires him. Not a man in England As soon he shall by me, -that thus the cardinal

Can advise me like you: be to yourself As you would to your friend.

Buck. I'll to the king; And from a mouth of honour quite cry down This Ipswich fellow's insolence; or proclaim

There's difference in no persons. Nor. Be advis'd;

Heat not a furnace for your foe so hot That it do singe yourself: we may outrun, By violent swiftness, that which we run at, And lose by over-running. Know you not, The fire that mounts the liquor till 't run o'er. In seeming to augment it wastes it? Be advis'd: I say again, there is no English soul More stronger to direct you than yourself, If with the sap of reason you would quench

Or but allay the fire of passion. Buck. I am thankful to you; and I'll go along By your prescription: but this top-proud fellow, Whom from the flow of gall I name not, but From sincere motions,-by intelligence, And proofs as clear as founts in July, when We see each grain of gravel, I do know To be corrupt and treasonous.

Nor. Say not treasonous. Buck. To the king I'll say't; and make my vouch as strong As shore of rock. Attend. This holy for. Or wolf, or both,—for he is equal ravenous As he is subtle, and as prone to mischief As able to perform't; his mind and place Infecting one another, yea, reciprocally, Only to show his pomp as well in France As here at home, suggests the king our master To this last costly treaty, the interview, That swallow'd so much treasure, and like a glass

Did break i' the rinsing

Nor. Faith, and so it did. Buck. Pray, give me favour, sir. This cunning cardinal

The articles o' the combination drew As himself pleas'd; and they were ratified As he cried, Thus let be: to as much end As give a crutch to the dead: but our countcardinal

Has done this, and 'tis well; for worthy Wolsey, Who cannot err, he did it. Now this follows,-Which, as I take it, is a kind of puppy To the old dam treason, - Charles the emperor, Under pretence to see the queen his aunt,-For 'twas indeed his colour, but he came To whisper Wolsey,—here makes visitation: His fears that the interview betwixt England and France might, through their amity, Breed him some prejudice; for from this league

Peep'd harms that menac'd him: he privily Deals with our cardinal; and, as I trow, Which I do well; for I am sure the emperor Paid ere he promis'd; whereby his suit was granted Ere it was ask'd;—but when the way was made, And pav'd with gold, the emperor thus desir'd,

That he would please to alter the king's course. And break the foresaid peace. Let the king know,

It's fit this royal session do proceed; And that, without delay, their arguments Be now produc'd and heard.

Q. Kath. Lord cardinal,-

To you I speak.
Wol. Yo

Your pleasure, madam?

Q. Kath. Sir, I am about to weep; but, thinking that We are a queen,—or long have dream'd so,-certain

The daughter of a king, my drops of tears I'll turn to sparks of fire.

Wol. Be patient yet.
Q. Kath. I will, when you are humble;

nay, before,
Or God will punish me. I do believe,
Induc'd by potent circumstances, that
You are mine enemy; and make my challenge
You shall not be my judge: for it is you
Have blown this coal betwirt my lord and me,—
Which God's dew quenchl Therefore I say

again,
I utterly abhor, yea, from my soul
Refuse you for my judge; whom, yet once more,
I hold my most malicious foe, and think not
At all a friend to truth.

Wol. I do profess You speak not like yourself; who ever yet Have stood to charity, and display'd the effects Of disposition gentle, and of wisdom (wrong: O'er topping woman's power. Madam, you do me I have no spleen against you, nor injustice For you or any: how far I have proceeded, Or how far further shall, is warranted By a commission from the consistory, Yea, the whole consistory of Rome. You charge That I have blown this coal: I do deny it: The king is present: if it be known to him That I gainsay my deed, how may he wound, And worthily, my falsehood! yea, as much As you have done my truth. If he know That I am free of your report, he knows I am not of your wrong. Therefore in him I am not of your wrong. It lies to cure me: and the cure is, to fore Remove these thoughts from you: the which be-His highness shall speak in, I do beseech You, gracious madam, to unthink your speaking, And to say so no more.

Q. Kath. My lord, my lord,
I am a simple woman, much too weak
To oppose your cunning. You're meek and humble-mouth'd;

You sign your place and calling, in full seeming,
With meekness and humility; but your heart
Is cramm'd with arrogancy, spleen, and pride.
You have, by fortune and his highness' favours,
Goneslightlyo'er lowsteps, and noware mounted Where powers are your retainers; and your words,

Domestics to you, serve your will as't please
Yourself pronounce their office. I must tell you,
You tender more your person's honour than
Your high profession spiritual: that again
I do refuse you for my judge; and here,
Before you all, appeal unto the pope,
To bring my whole cause fore his holiness,
And to be judg'd by him.

[She curtsies to the KING, and offers to depart.

Cam. The queen is obstinate,
Stubborn to justice, apt to accuse it, and Disdainful to be tried by it: 'tis not well. She's going away.

K. Hen. Call her again.

Crier. Katharine Queen of England, come into the court.

Grif. Madam, you are call'd back. Q. Kath. What need you note it? pray you, keep your way: When you are call'd, return.—Now the Lord help,

They vex me past my patiencel Pray you, pass

on:
I will not tarry; no, nor ever more
Upon this business my appearance make

Upon this business my appearance make In any of their courts.

Exeunt QUEEN, GRIF., and her other Attendants.

K. Hen. Go thy ways, Kate:
That man i' the world who shall report he has
A better wife, let him in naught be trusted
For speaking false in that: thou art, alone—
If thy rare qualities, sweet gentleness,
Thy meekness saint-like, wife-like government—

Obeying in commanding—and thy parts Sovereign and pious else, could speak thee out,—

The queen of earthly queens:-she's noble born;

And like her true nobility she has Carried herself towards me.

Wol. Most gracious sir, In humblest manner I require your highness That it shall please you to declare, in hearing Of all these ears,—for where I am robbid and bound,

There must I be unloos'd; although not there
At once and fully satisfied,—whether ever I Did broach this business to your highness; or Laid any scruple in your way, which might Induce you to the question on't? or ever
Have to you,—but with thanks to God for such A royal lady,—spake one the least word that might

Be to the prejudice of her present state, Or touch of her good person?

Or touch of her good person?

K. Hen.

My lord cardinal,
I do excuse you; yea, upon mine honour,
I free you from't. You are not to be taught
That you have many enemies, that know not
Why they are so, but, like to village curs,
Bark when their fellows do: by some of these
The queen is put in anger. You are excus'd:
But will you be more justified? you ever
Have wish'd the sleeping of this business; never Desir'd it to be stirr'd; but oft have hinder'd,

The passages made toward it:—on my honour, I speak my good lord cardinal to this point, And thus far clear him. Now, what mov'd me to't,

I will be hold with time and your attention:—
Then mark the inducement. Thus it came;— give heed to't:—

My conscience first receiv'd a tenderness, Scruple, and prick, on certain speeches utter'd By the Bishop of Bayonne, then French ambassador; Who had been hither sent on the debating A marriage 'twixt the Duke of Orleans and Most pestileut to the hearing; and to bear 'em The back is sacrifice to the load. They say They are devis'd by yon; or else you suffer Too hard an exclamation.

K. Hen. Still exaction!
The nature of it? in what kind, let's know,

Is this exaction?

Q. Kath. I am much too venturous
In tempting of your patience; but am bolden'd Under your promis'd pardon. The subjects' grief

Comes through commissions, which compel from each

The sixth part of his substance, to be levied Without delay; and the pretence for this Is nam'd your wars in France: this makes bold mouths:

Tongues spit their duties ont, and cold hearts freeze

Allegiance in them; their curses now Live where their prayers did: and it's come to pass

This tractable obedience is a slave
To each incensed will. I would your highness
Would give it quick consideration, for

There is no primer business.

K. Hen. By my life.

This is against our pleasure.

Wol. And for me,
I have no further goue in this than by
'A single voice; and that not pass'd me but
By learned approbation of the judges. If I am Traduc'd by ignorant tongues, which neither
know

My faculties nor person, yet will be The chronicles of my doing,—let me say 'Tis but the fate of place, and the rough brake That virtue must go through. We must not stint

Our necessary actions, in the fear To cope malicious censurers; which ever. As raveuous fishes, do a vessel follow That is new-trimm'd, but benefit no further Than vainly longing. What we oft do best, By sick interpreters, once weak ones, is Not ours, or not allow'd; what worst, as oft Hitting a grosser quality, is cried np For our best net. If we shall stand still, In fear our motion will be mock'd or carp'd at, We should take root here where we sit, or sit State-statues only.

K. Hen. Things done well
And with a care exempt themselves from fear
Things done without example, in their issue
Are to be fear'd. Have you a precedent
Of this commission? I believe, not any.
We must not rend our subjects from our laws,
And stick them in our will. Sixth part of each
A trembling contribution! Why, we take From every tree lop, bark, and part o' the timber;

And, though we leave it with a root, thus hack'd
The air will drink the sap. To every county
Where this is questiou'd send our letters, with Free pardon to each man that has denied

The force of this commission: pray, look to't; I put it to your care.

Wol. A word with you.
[To the Secretary.
Let there be letters writ to every chire,

Of the king's graco and pardon. The griev'd commons

Hardly conceive of me; let it be nois'd
That through our intercession this revokement
And pardou comes: I shall anon advise you
Further in the proceeding. [Exit Secretary.

Enter Surveyor.

Q. Kath. I am sorry that the Duke of Buckingham

Is run in your displeasure.

K. Hen. It grieves many:
The gentleman is learn'd, and a most rare
speaker:

To nature uone more bound; his training such That he may furnish and instruct great teachers And never seek for aid out of himself. Yet see, When these so noble benefits shall prove Not well dispos'd, the mind growing ouce corrupt,

They turn to vicious forms, ten times more ngly

Than ever they were fair. This man so complete, who was enroll'd 'mougst wonders, and when Almost with ravish'd list'ning, could not find
His hour of speech a minute; he, my lady,
Hath into moustrous habits put the graces
That once were his, and is become as black As if besmear'd in hell. Sit by us; you shall hear—

This was his gentleman in trust,—of him
Things to strike honour sad.—Bid him recount
The fore-cited practices; whereof
We cannot feel too little, hear too much.

Wol. Stand forth, and with bold spirit relate what you, Most like a cereful subject, have collected Out of the Duke of Buckingham.

K. Hen. Speak freely.
Surv. First, it was usual with him, every day
It would infect his speech,—that if the king
Should without issue die, he'll carry it so
To make the sceptre his: these very words
I have heard him utter to his son-in-law,
Lord Aberga'ny; to whom by oath he menac'd
Revenge upon the cardinal.

Wol. Please your highness, note This dangerous conception in this point. Not friended by his wish, to your high person His will is most malignant; and it stretches

Beyond you to your friends.

O. Kath. My learn'd lord cardinal;

Deliver all with charity.

K. Hen.

Speak on:

How grounded he his title to the crown

Then our fail? to this point hast thou heard

Upon our fail? to this point hast thou heard him At any time speak aught? Surv. He was brought to this

By a vain prophecy of Nicholas Hopkins.

K. Hen. What was that Hopkins?

Surv. Sir, a Chartreux frier, His confessor; who fed him every minnte With words of sovereignty.

K. Hen. How know'st thou this?
Surv. Not long before your highness sped to France,

The Duke being at the Rose, within the parish Saint Lawrence Poultney, did of me demand Envy and base opinion set against 'em, I know my life so even. If your business Seek me out, and that way I am wife in, Out with it boldly: truth loves open dealing.

Wol. Tanta est erga te mentis integritas, regina serenissima,—

Q. Kath. O, good my lord, no Latin;
I am not such a truant since my coming
As not to know the language I have lived in:
A strange tongue makes my cause more strange,
suspicious;

Pray, speak in English: here are some will thank you, [sake,— If you speak truth, for their poor mistress' Believe me, she has had much wrong: lord cardinal,

The willing'st sin I ever yet committed

May be absolv'd in English.

Wol. Noble lady,
I am sorry my integrity should breed,—
And service to his majesty and yon,—
So deep suspicion, where all faith was meant.
We come not by the way of accusation
To taint that honour every good tongue blesses,
Nor to betray you any way to sorrow,—
You have too much, good lady; but to know
How you stand minded in the weighty difference Between the king and you; and to deliver,
Like free and honest men, our just opinions,
And comforts to your cause.

Cam. Most honour'd madam, My Lord of York,—out of his noble nature, Zeal and obedience he still bore your grace,—Forgetting, like a good man, your late censure Both of his truth and him,—which was too far,— Offers, as I do, in a sign of peace, His service and his counsel.

Q. Kath. To betray me. [Aside. My lords, I thank you both for your good-wills: Ye speak like honest men,—pray God ye prove so!

But how to make ye suddenly an answer, In such a point of weight, so near mine

honour,—
More near my life, I fear,—with my weak wit,
And to such men of gravity and learning,
In truth, I know not. I was set at work Among my maids; full little, God knows, looking

Either for such men or such business. For her sake that I have been,—for I feel The last fit of my greatness,—good your graces, Let me have time and counsel for my cause: Alas, I am a woman, friendless, hopeless!

Wol. Madam, you wrong the king's love with these fears: Your hopes and friends are infinite.

O. Kath.

In England
But little for my profit: can you think, lords,
That any Englishman dare give me counsel?
Or be a known friend, 'gainst his highness'

pleasure,—
Though he be grown so desperate to be honest,—
And live a subject? Nay, forsooth, my friends,
They that must weigh out my afflictions,
They that my trust must grow to, live not here:
They are, as all my other comforts, far hence,
In mine own country, lords.

Cam. I would your grace Would leave your griefs, and take my counsel.

Q. Kath. How, sir?
Cam. Put your main cause into the king's protection;

He's loving and most gracious: 'twill be much Both for your honour better and your cause; For if the trial of the law o'ertake ye You'll part away disgrac'd.

Wol. He tells you rightly. Q. Kath. Ye tell me what ye wish for both,

—my ruin:
Is this your Christian counsel? out upon ye?
Heaven is above all yet; there sits a Judge
That no king can corrupt.

Cam. Your rage mistakes us.
Q. Kath. The more shame for ye: holy men
I thought ye,

Upon my soul, two reverend cardinal virtues; But cardinal sins and hollow hearts I fear ye: Mend them, for shame, my lords. Is this your comfort?

The cordial that ye bring a wretched lady,— A woman lost among ye, laugh'd at, scorn'd? I will not wish ye half my miseries; I have more charity: but say I warn'd ye; Take heed, for heaven's sake, take heed, lest at

The burden of my sorrows fall upon ye.

Wol. Madam, this is a mere distraction;
You turn the good we offer into envy.

Q. Kath. Ye turn me into nothing: wee upon ye, me,—And all such false professors! would you have If you have any justice, any pity, If ye be anything but churchmen's habits,—

Put my sick cause into his hands that hates me? Alas! has banish'd me his bed already, His love too long ago! I am old, my lords, And all the fellowship I hold now with him Is only my obedience. What can happen To me above this wretchedness? all your studies Make me a curse like this.

Cam. Your fears are worse.

Q. Kath. Have I liv'd thus long,—let me speak myself,

Since virtue finds no friends,—a wife, a true one?

A woman,—I dare say without vain-glory,—
Never yet branded with suspicion?
Have I with all my full affections
Still met the king? lov'd him next heaven?
obey'd him?

Been, out of fondness, superstitious to him? Almost forgot my prayers to content him? And am I thus rewarded? its not well, lords. Bring me a constant woman to her husband, Onethatne'erdream'da joy beyond hispleasure; And to that woman, when she has done most, Yet will I add an honour,—a great patience.

Wol. Madam, you wander from the good we aim at. [guilty,

Q. Kath: My lord, I dare not make myself so To give up willingly that noble title Your master wed me to: nothing but death Shall e'er divorce my dignities.

Wol.

Q. Kath. Would I had never trod this

English earth,
Or felt the flatteries that grow upon it!
Ye have angels' faces, but heaven knows your hearts.

The lag end of their lewdness, and be langh'd

Sands. 'Tis time to give 'em physic, their diseases

Are grown so catching.

What a loss our ladies Cham. Will have of these trim vanities!

Ay, marry. There will be woe indeed, lords: the sly whore-

SOUS Have got a speeding trick to lay down ladies; A French song and a fiddle has no fellow.

Sands. The devil fiddle 'eml I am glad they're going,—

For, sure, there's no converting of 'em:-now An honest country lord, as I am, beaten [song, A long time out of play, may bring his plain-And have an hour of hearing; and, by'r Lady, And have an hour Held current music too.

Well said, Lord Sands;

Your colt's tooth is not cast yet.

No, my lord;

Sands. Nor shall not, while I have a stamp. Sir Thomas,

Whither were you a-going? To the cardinal's:

Your lordship is a guest too.

U, 'tis true; This night he makes a supper, and a great one, To many lords and ladies; there will be

The beauty of this kingdom, I'll assure you. Lov. That churchman bears a bounteous mind indeed,

A hand as fruitful as the land that feeds us;

His dews fall everywhere. No doubt he's noble; Cham.

He had a black mouth that said other of him. Sands. He may, my lord, -has wherewithal; in him

Sparing would show a worse sin than ill doc-Men of his way should be most liberal; They are set here for examples.

True, they are so; Cham. But few now give so great ones. My barge Thomas, stays: Your lordship shall along.—Come, good Sir We shall be late else; which I would not be,

For I was spoke to, with Sir Henry Guildford, This night to be comptrollers.

Exeunt.

Sands. I am your lordship's.

SCENE IV .- LONDON. The Presence Chamber in York Place.

Hautboys. A small table under a state for the CARDINAL, a longer table for the guests. Enter, at one door, Anne Bullen, and divers Lords, Ladies, and Gentlewoman, as guests; at another door, enter SIR HENRY GUILDFORD.

Guild. Ladies, a general welcome from his grace

Salutes ye all; this night he dedicates To fair content and you: none here, he hopes, In all this noble bevy, has brought with her One care abroad; he would have all as merry As, first, good company, good wine, good wel-[tardy:

Can make good people.-O, my lord, you are | For this to such a thing,-

Enter Lord Chamberlain, LORD SANDS, and SIR THOMAS LOVELL.

The very thought of this fair company Clapp'd wings to me.

Cham. You are young, Sir Henry Guildford. Sands. Sir Thomas Lovell, had the cardinal But half my lay-thoughts in him, some of these Should find a running banquet ere they rested; I think would better please 'em: by my life,

They are a sweet society of fair ones. Ifessor Lov. O, that your lordship were but now con-To one or two of these!

I would I were; Sands.

They should find easy penance. Lov. Faith, how easy? Sands. As easy as a down-bed would afford it. Cham. Sweet ladies, will it please you sit?

Sir Harry, Place you that side; I'll take the charge of this; His grace is ent'ring .- Nay, you must not freeze; Two women plac'd together makes cold weather:-

My Lord Sands, you are one will keep 'em waking; Pray, sit between these ladies.

Sands. By my faith. And thank your lordship .- By your leave, sweet ladies:

[Seats himself between ANNE BULLEN and another Lady.

If I chance to talk a little wild, forgive me; I had it from my father.

Was he mad, sir? Anne. Sands. O, very mad, exceeding mad, in love too:

But he would bite none; just as I do now,-He would kiss you twenty with a breath. Kisses her.

Well said, my lord.-So, now you've fairly seated. - Gentlemen. The penance lies on you if these fair ladies Pass away frowning.

For my little cure, Sands. Let me alone.

Hautboys. Enter CARDINAL WOLSEY, attended; and takes his state.

Wol. Ye're welcome, my fair guests: that noble lady Or gentleman that is not freely merry Is not my friend: this, to confirm my welcome; And to you all, good health.

Your grace is noble:-Sands. Let me have such a bowl may hold my thanks, And save me so much talking

My Lord Sands. I am beholden to you: cheer your neighbours,-Ladies, you are not merry:—gentlemen, Whose fault is this? The red wine first must rise Sands. In their fair cheeks, my lord; then we shall have

'em Talk us to silence.

You are a merry gamester, Anne. My Lord Sands.

Yes, if I make my play.

Here's to your ladyship: and pledge it, madam,

Now, God incense him, Cham. And let him cry Hal louder!

But, my lord,

When returns Cranmer?

Suf. He is return'd, in his opinions; which Have satisfied the king for his divorce, Together with all famous colleges Almost in Christendom: shortly, I believe, His second marriage shall be publish'd, and Her coronation. Katharine no more Shall be call'd queen, but princess dowager And widow to Prince Arthur.

Nor. This same Cranmer's A worthy fellow, and hath ta'en much pain In the king's business.

Suf. He has; and we shall see him For it an archbishop.

Nor.

So I hear.

Suf. 'Tis ao.-

The cardinal!

Enter Wolsey and Cromwell.

Observe, observe, he's moody. Nor. Wol. The packet, Cromwell, Gave't you the king?

Crom. To his own hand, in's bedchamber. Wol. Look'd he o' the inside of the paper? Presently

He did unseal them: and the first he view'd, He did it with a serious mind; a heed Was in his countenance. You he bade Attend him here this morning.

Is he ready Wol.

To come abroad?

I think by this he is. Crom.Leave me awhile. [Exit CROMWELL. Wól. It shall be to the Duchess of Alencon, The French king's sister: he shall marry her.— Anne Bullen! No; Pll no Anne Bullens for him:

There's more in't than fair visage.—Bullen! No, we'll no Bullens.—Speedily I wish To hear from Rome.—The Marchioness of Pembroke1

Nor. He's discontented.

May be he hears the king Does whet his anger to him.

Sharp enough, Sur.

Lord, for thy justice! Wol. The late queen's gentlewoman, a knight's daughter,

To be her mistress' mistress! the queen's queen!-This candle burns not clear: 'tis I must snuff it; Then out it goes.—What though I know her virtuous And well deserving? yet I know her for A spleeny Lutheran; and not wholesome to Our cause, that she should lie i' the bosom of Our hard-rul'd king. Again, there is sprung up An heretic, an arch one, Cranmer; one Hath crawl'd into the favour of the king, And is his oracle.

He is vex'd at something. Nor. Sur. I would 'twere something that would fret the string,

The master-cord on's heart!

Suf.

Enter the King, reading a schedule, and Lovell.

K. Hen. What piles of wealth hath he accumulated

To his own portion! and what expense by the hour Seema to flow from him! How, i' the name of Does he rake this together!—Now, my lords. Saw you the cardinal?

Nor. My lord, we have ! [tion Stood here observing him: some strange commo-Ia in his brain: he bites his lip and starts; Stops on a sudden, looks upon the ground, Then lays his finger on his temple; straight Springs out into fast gait; then stops again, Strikes his breast hard; and anon he casts Hia eye against the moon: in most strange posturea.

We have seen him set himself.

K. Hen. It may well be: There is a mutiny in's mind. This morning Papera of state he sent me to peruse, As I requir'd: and wot you what I found There,—on my conscience, put unwittingly? Forsooth, an inventory, thus importing,-The several parcels of his plate, his treasure, Rich stuffs, and ornaments of household; which I find at such proud rate that it out-speaks Possession of a subject.

It's heaven's will: Nor. Some spirit put this paper in the packet To bless your eye withal.

K. Hen. If we did think His contemplation were above the earth, And fix'd on spiritual object, he should still Dwell in his musings: but I am afraid His thinkings are below the moon, not worth His serious considering.

He takes his seat and whispers LOVELL, who goes to WOLSEY.

Wol. Heaven forgive mel Ever God bless your highness!

K. Hen. Good, my lord, You are full of heavenly stuff, and bear the inventory

Of your best graces in your mind; the which You were now running o'er: you have scarce

To steal from spiritual leisure a brief span To keep your earthly audit: sure, in that I deem you an ill husband, and am glad To have you therein my companion.

Wol. For holy offices I have a time; a time To think upon the part of business which I bear i' the state; and nature does require Her times of preservation, which perforce I, her frail son, amongst my brethern mortal, I, her fran son, manager to.

Must give my tendance to.

You have said well.

Wol. And ever may your highness yoke together, As I will lend you cause, my doing well With my well saying!

'Tis well said again; K. Hen. And 'tis a kind of good deed to say well: And yet words are no deeds. My father lov'd VOU:

The king, the king! He said he did; and with his deed did crown

Many sharp reasons to defeat the law.
The king's attorney, on the contrary,
Urg'd on the examinations, proofs, confessions
Of divers witnesses; which the duke desir'd
To have brought, viva voce, to his face:
At which appear'd against him his surveyor;
Sir Gilbert Peck, his chancellor; and John Car,
Confessor to him; with that devil-monk,
Hopkins, that made this mischief.

2 Gent.
That was he That fed him with his prophecies?

I Gent.

All these accus'd him strongly; which he fain Would have flung from him, but, indeed, he could not:

And so his peers, upon this evidence, Have found him guilty of high treason. Much He spoke, and learnedly, for life; but all

Was either pitied in him or forgotten. [self? 2 Gent. After all this, how did he bear him-1 Gent. When he was bronght again to the bar to hear [stirrd

His knell rung out, his judgment,—he was With such an agony, he sweat extremely, And something spoke in choler, ill, and hasty; But he fell to himself again, and sweetly In all the rest show'd a most noble patience.

2 Gent. I do not think he fears death.
1 Gent.
Sure, he does not,
He never was so womanish; the cause

He never was so womanish; the cause
He may a little grieve at.

2 Gent.

Certainly

The cardinal is the end of this.

I Gent. 'Tis likely,

By all conjectures: first, Kildare's attainder, Then deputy of Ireland; who remov'd, Earl Surrey was sent thither, and in haste too, Lest he should help his father.

2 Gent. That trick of state

Was a deep envious one.

I Gent.
At his return
No doubt he will requite it. This is noted,
And generally,—whoever the king favours
The cardinal instantly will find employment,
And far enough from court too.

2 Gent All the commons Hate him perniciously, and, o' my conscience, Wish him ten fathom deep: this duke as much They love and dote on; call him bounteons Buckingham,

The mirror of all courtesy,—

1 Gent. Stay there, sir, And see the noble ruin'd man you speak of.

Enter Buckingham from his arraignment; Tip-staves before him; the axe with the edge towards him; halberds on each side: with him Sir Thomas Lovell, Sir Nicholas Vaux, Sir William Sands, and common people.

2 Gent. Let's stand close, and behold him.
Buck.
You that thus far have come to pity me,
Hear what I say, and then go home and lose me
I have this day receiv'd a traitor's indement,
And by that name must die: yet, heaven bear witness.

And if I have a conscience, let it sink me, Even as the are falls, if I be not faithful! The law I bear no malice for my death;

'T has done, upon the premises, but justice:
But those that sought it I could wish more Christians:

Be what they will, I heartily forgive 'em: Yet let 'em look they glory not in mischief, Nor build their evils on the graves of great men; For then my guiltless blood must cry against 'em.

For further life in this world I ne'er hope,
Nor will I sue, although the king have mercies
More than I dare make faults. You few that lov'd me.

And dare be bold to weep for Buckingham, His noble friends and fellows, whom to leave Is only bitter to him, only dying, Go with me, like good angels, to my end; And as the long divorce of steel fells on me Make of your prayers one sweet sacrifice, And lift my soul to heaven.—Lead on, o' Gods'

And lift my soul to heaven.—Lead on, o' Gods' name.

Lov. I do beseech your grace, for charity,
If ever any melice in your heart

Were hid against me, now to forgive me frankly.

Buck. Sir Thomas Lovell, I as free forgive

As I would be forgiven: I forgive all; There cannot be those numberless offences 'Gainst me that I cannot take peace with: no black envy

Shall make my grave.—Commend me to his grace;

And if he speak of Buckingham, pray tell him You met him half in heaven: my vows and prayers

Yet are the king's; and, till my soul forsake, Shall cry for blessings on him: may he live Longer than I have time to tell his years! Ever belov'd may his rule be! And when old time shall lead him to his end, Goodness and he fill up one monument!

Lov. To the water side I must conduct your grace; Then give my charge up to Sir Richolas Vaux, Who undertakes you to your end.

Vaux. Prepare there,
The duke is coming; see the barge be ready;
And fit it with such furniture as suits
The greatness of his person.

Buck. Nay, Sir Nicholas, Let it slone: my state now will but mock me. When I came hither I was lord high constable And Duke of Buckingham; now, poor Edward Bohun:

Yet I am richer than my base accusers, lit; That never knew what truth meant: I now seal And with that blood will make 'em one day groan for't.

My noble father, Henry of Buckingham, Who first rais'd head against usurping Richard, Flying for succour to his servant Banister, Being distress'd, was by that wretch betray'd, And without trial fell; God's peace be with him! Henry the Seventh succeeding, truly pitying My father's loss, like a most royal prince, Restor'd me to my honours, and out of ruins Made my name once more noble. Now his son, Henry the Eighth, life, honour, name, and all That made me happy, at one stroke has taken For ever from the world. I had my trial,

Weigh'd not a hair of his. Plague of your policy! You sent me deputy for Ireland; Far from his succor, from the king, from all That might have mercy on the fault thou gav'st

Whilst your great goodness, out of holy nity.

Absolv'd him with an axe.

Wol. This, and all else This talking lord can lay upon my credit. I answer, is most false. The duke by law Found his deserts: how innocent I was From any private malice in his end, His noble jury and foul cause can witness. If I lov'd many words, lord, I should tell you You have as little honesty as honour, That in the way of loyalty and truth Toward the king, my ever royal master, Dare mate a sounder man than Surrey can be, And all that love his follies.

Sur. By my soul, Your long coat, priest, protects you; thou shouldst feel [lords, My sword i' the life-blood of thee else.--My Can ye endure to hear this arrogance? And from this fellow? If we live thus tamely,

To be thus jaded by a piece of scarlet, Farewell, nobility; let his grace go forward. And dare us with his cap like larks.

Wol. All goodness

Is poison to thy stomach. Sur. Yes, that goodness Of gleaning all the land's wealth into one, Into your own hands, cardinal, by extortion: The goodness of your intercepted packets You writ to the pope against the king: your goodness,

Since you provoke me, shall be most notori-My Lord of Norfolk,—as you are truly noble, As you respect the common good, the state Of our despis'd nobility, our issues, Who, if he live, will scarce be gentlemen,-Produce the grand sum of his sins, the articles Collected from his life:—I'll startle you Worse than the sacring bell, when the brown wench

Lay kissing in your arms, lord cardinal. Wol. How much, methinks, I could despise his man, But that I am bound in charity against it! Nor. Those articles, my lord, are in the king's hand:

But, thus much, they are foul ones.

So much fairer And spotless shall mine innocence arise, When the king knows the truth.

Sur. This cannot save you: I thank my memory I yet remember Some of these articles; and out they shall. Now, if you can blush and cry guilty, cardinal, You'll show a little honesty.

Speak on, sir; ₩ol. I dare your worst objections: if I blush,

It is to see a nobleman want manners. Sur. Pd rather want those than my head. Redge, Have at youl First, that, without the king's assent or know-You wrought to be a legate; by which power You maim'd the jurisdiction of all bishops.

Nor. Then, that in all you writ to Rome, or elso

To foreign princes, Ego et Rex meus king Was still inscrib'd; in which you brought the To be your servant.

Suf. Then, that, without the knowledge. Either of king or council, when you went Ambassador to the emperor, you made bold To carry into Flanders the great seal.

Sur. Item, you sent a large commission To Gregory de Cassalis, to conclude, Without the king's will or the state's allowance. A league between his highness and Ferrara.

Suf. That, but of mere ambition, you have caus'd

Your holy hat to be stamp'd on the king's coin. Sur. Then, that you have sent innumerable substance, science. By what means got I leave to your own con-To furnish Rome, and to prepare the ways You have for dignities; to the mere undoing Of all the kingdom. Many more there are, Which, since they are of you, and odious. I will not taint my mouth with.

Cham. O my lord. Press not a falling man too farl 'tis virtue; His faults lie open to the laws; let them, Not you, correct him. My heart weeps to see · him

So little of his great self.

I forgive him. jis,— Suf. Lord Cardinal, theking's further pleasure Because all those things you have done of late, By your power legatine within this kingdom, Fall into the compass of a praemunire, That therefore such a writ be sued against you; To forfeit all your goods, lands, tenements, Chattels, and whatsoever, and to be

Out of the king's protection: - this is my charge. Nor. And so we'll leave you to your meditations

How to live better. For your stubborn answer About the giving back the great seal to us, The king shall know it, and, no doubt, shall thank you.

So fare you well, my little good lord cardinal. Exeunt all but WOLSEY. Wol. So farewell to the little good you bear

Farewell, a long farewell, to all my greatness! This is the state of man: to-day he puts forth The tender leaves of hope; to-morrow blossoms, And bears his blushing honours thick upon him; The third day comes a frost, a killing frost, And,-when he thinks, good easy man, full surely

His greatness is a-ripening,—nips his root, And then he falls, as I do. I have ventur d, Like little wanton boys that swim on bladders, This many summers in a sea of glory; But far beyond my depth: my high-blown pride At length broke under me; and now has left me, Weary and old with service, to the mercy Of a rude stream, that must for ever hide me. Vain pomp and glory of this world, I hate ye: I feel my heart new opened. O, how wretched Is that poor man that hangs on prince's favoural There is, betwirt that smile we would espire to, That sweet aspect of princes, and their ruin, More pangs and fears than wars or women have: And when he falls, he falls like Lucifer, Never to hope again.

As I am made without him, so I'll stand, If the king please; his cursea and his blessings Touch me alike, they are breath I not believe in. I knew him, and I know him; so I leave him To him that made him proud, the pope.

Let's in; And with some other business put the king From these sad thoughts that work too much upon him:-My lord, you'll bear us company?

· Cham. Excuse me; The king has sent me other-where: besides, You'll find a most unfit time to disturb him:

Health to your lordships.

Nor. Thanks, my good lord chamberlain.

[Exit Lord Chamberlain.

The KING is NORFOLK opens a folding door. discovered sitting, and reading pensively.

Suf. How sad he looks! sure, he is much afflicted.

K. Hen. Who is there, ha?

Nor. Pray God he be not angry. K. Hen. Who's there, I say? How dare you thrust yourselves

Into my private meditations?

Who am I, ha?

Nor. A gracious king, that pardons all offences

Malice ne'er meant: our breach of duty this way Is business of estate; in which we come To know your royal pleasure.

K. Hen. Ye are too bold: Go to; I'll make you know your times of busi-· ness:

Is this an hour for temporal affairs, ha?

Enter Wolsey and Campeius.

Who's there? my good lord cardinal?-O my

Wolsey, The quiet of my wounded conscience,

Thou art a cure fit for a king .- You're welcome To CAMPEIUS. Most reverend learned sir, into our kingdom: Use us and it.-My good lord, have great care

[To WOLSEY. I be not found a talker. Sir, you cannot. Wol. I would your grace would give us but an hour

I would your ofference.

Of private conference.

We are busy; go.

[To Norfolk and Suffolk. Nor. [Aside to SUF.] This priest has no pride in himl

Not to speak of: Suf. [Aside to Nor.] I would not be so sick though for his place:

But this cannot continue. Nor. [Aside to Sur.] If it do, I'll venture one have-at-him.

Suf. [Aside to NOR.] I another.

[Exeunt Non. and SUF. Wol. Your grace has given a precedent of wisdom

Above all princes, in committing freely Your scruple to the voice of Christendom. Who can be angry now? what envy reach you? The Spaniard, tied by blood and favour to her, Must now confess, if they have any goodness, The trial just and noble. All the clerks,

I mean the learned ones, in Christian kingdoms. Have their free voices: Rome the nurse of judgment,

Invited by your noble self, hath sent One general tongue unto us, this good man, This just and learned priest, Cardinal Cam-

Whom once more I present unto your highness. K. Hen. And once more in mine arms I bid him welcome,

And thank the holy conclave for their loves: They have sent me such a man I would have wish'd for.

Cam. Your grace must needs deserve all strangers' loves, so noble. To your highness' hand You are so noble.

I tender my commission;—by whose virtue,-The court of Rome commanding, -you, my lord Cardinal of York, are join'd with me their servant, In the unpartial judging of this business. The queen

K. Hen. Two equal men. The queen shall be acquainted you come.-Where's Forthwith for what Gardiner?

Wol. I know your majesty has always lov'd her

So dear in heart, not to deny her that A woman of less place might ask by law, Scholars allow'd freely to argue for her.

K. Hen. Ay, and the best she shall have: and my favour

To him that does best: God forbid else. Cardinal,

Pr'ythee, call Gardiner to me, my new secretary:

Exit WOLSEY. I find him a fit fellow.

Re-enter WOLSEY with GARDINER.

Wol. [Aside to GARD.] Give me your hand: much joy and favour to you; You are the king's now.

Gard. [Aside to WoL.] But to be commanded For ever by your grace, whose hand has rais'd me.

K. Hen. Come hither, Gardiner.

They converse abart. Cam. My Lord of York, was not one Doctor Pace

In this man's place before him? Yes, he was. Wol.

Cam. Was he not held a learned man? Yes, surely. Wol.

Cam. Believe me, there's an ill opinion spread, then,

Even of yourself, lord cardinal.

Howl of me? Wol. Cam. They will not stick to say you envied him

And fearing he would rise, he was so virtuous, Kept him a foreign man still; which so griev'd him

That he ran mad and died.

2 Gent. May I be bold to ask what that contains,

That paper in your hand?

r Gent. Yes; 'tis the list Of those that claim their offices this day, By custom of the coronation. The Duke of Suffolk is the first, and claims To be high-steward; next, the Duke of Norfolk, He to be earl marshal: you may read the rest.

2 Gent. I thank you, sir; had I not known those customs,

I should have been beholden to your paper. But, I beseech you, what's become of Katharine, The princess dowager? how goes her business? I Gent. That I can tell you too. The Archbishop Of Canterbury, accompanied with other Learned and reverend fathers of his order, Held a late court at Dunstable, six miles off From Ampthill, where the princess lay; to which

She was often cited by them, but appear'd not: And, to be short, for not appearance and The king's late scruple, by the main assent Of all these learned men, she was divorc'd, And the late marriage made of none effect: Since which she was remov'd to Kimbolton. Where she remains now sick.

2 Gent. Alas, good lady!-(Trum bets.

The trumpets sound: stand close, the queen is coming.

> THE ORDER OF THE PROCESSION A lively flourish of trumpets: then enter,

3. Choristers singing. [Music. 4. Mayor of London, bearing the mace. Then Garter, in his coat of arms, and on his head a gilt copper crown.

5. Marquis Dorset, bearing a sceptre of gold, on his head a demi-coronal of gold. With him, the Earl of Surrey, bearing the rod of silver with the dove, crowned with an earl's coronet. Collars of SS.

6. Duke of Suffolk, in his robe of estate, his coronet on his head, bearing a long white wand, as high-steward. With him, the Duke of Norfolk, with the rod of marshalship, a coronet on his head. Collars of SS.

7. A canopy borne by four of the Cinque-ports; under it the Queen in her robe; her hair richly adorned with pearl, crowned. On each side of her, the Bishops of London and Winchester. 8. The old Duchess of Norfolk, in a coronal of gold, wrought with flowers, bearing the Queen's

9. Certain Ladies or Countesses, with plain circlets of gold without flowers.

A royal train, believe me.—These I know:-Who's that that bears the sceptre?

Marquis Dorset: I Gent. And that the Earl of Surrey, with the rod.

2. Gent. A bold brave gentleman. That should be

The Duke of Suffolk?

'Tis the same, -high-steward. 2 Gent. And that my Lord of Norfolk?

Yes. I Gent. 2 Gent.

Heaven bless theel

Thou hast the sweetest face I ever look'd on. Sir, as I have a soul, she is an angel; Our king has all the Indies in his arms, And more and richer, when he strains that lady: I cannot blame his conscience.

I Gent. They that bear The cloth of honour over her are four barons

Of the Cinque-ports.
2 Gent. Those men are happy; and so are all are near her.

I take it, she that carries up the train Is that old noble lady, Duchess of Norfolk.

I Gent. It is: and all the rest are countesses. 2 Gent. Their coronets say so. These are stars indeed; And sometimes falling ones.

Good sir, speak it to us. mable. Therichstream z Gent. 3 Gent. Aswellas Iamable. Of lords and ladies, having brought the queen To a prepar'd place in the choir, fell off A distance from her: while her grace sat down

To rest awhile, some half an hour or so, In a rich chair of state, opposing freely The beauty of her person to the people. Believe me, sir, she is the goodliest woman That ever lay by man: which when the people Had the full view of, such a noise arose

As the shrouds make at sea in a stiff tempest, As loud, and to as many tunes: hats, cloaks,-Doublets, I think,—flew up; and had their faces Been loose, this day they had been lost. Such joy I never saw before. Great-bellied women, That had not half a week to go, like rams In the old time of war, would shake the press, And make 'em reel before 'em. No man living

Could say, This is my wife, there; all were woven

So strangely in one piece. But what follow'd? 2 Gent.

3 Gent. At length her grace rose, and with [saintlike, modest paces

Came to the altar; where she kneel'd, and, Cast her fair eyes to heaven, and pray'd devoutly.

Then rose again, and bow'd her to the people: When by the Archbishop of Canterbury She had all the royal makings of a queen: As holy oil, Edward Confessor's crown, The rod, and bird of peace, and all such emblems

Laid nobly on her: which perform'd, the choir, With all the choicest music of the kingdom, [Looking on the QUEEN. | Together sung Te Deum. So she parted,

For any suit of pounds; and you, O fate! A very fresh-fish here,—fie, fie, fie upon [up This compell'd fortunel—have your mouth fill'd Before you open it.

Anne. This is strange to me. [no. Old L. How tastes it? is it hitter? forty pence, There was a lady once,—'tis an old story,—
That would not he a queen, that would she not, For all the mud in Egypt:—have you heard it?

Anne. Come, you are pleasant.
Old L. With your theme I could O'ermount the lark. The Marchioness of Pemhroke!

A thonsand pounds a year for pure respect!
No other obligation! By my life,
That promises more thousands: honour's train
Is longer than his foreskirt. By this time
I know your hack will hear a duchess:—say,
Are you not stronger than you were?

Anne. Good lady, Make yourself mirth with your particular fancy, And leave me out on't. Would I had no being, If this salute my blood a jot: it faints me To think what follows.

The queen is comfortless, and we forgetful In our long absence: pray, do not deliver What here you have heard to her.

Old L. What do you think me? [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—LONDON. A Hall in BLACK-FRIARS.

Trumpet, sennet, and cornets. Enter two Vergers, with short silver wands; next them, two Scribes, in the habits of doctors; after them, the ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY alone; after him, the BISHOPS OF LINCOLN, ELY, ROCHESTER, and SAINT ASAPH; next them, with some small distance, follows a Gentleman bearing the purse, with the great seal, and a Cardinal's hat; then two Priests, bearing each a silver cross; then a Gentleman-usher bareheaded, accompanied with a Sergeant-at-Arms bearing a silver mace; then two Gentlemen bearing two great silver pillars; after them, side by side, the two Cardinals, Wolsey and Campeius; two Nohlemen with the sword and mace. Then Noblemen with the sword and mace. enter the KING and QUEEN and their Trains. The King takes place under the cloth of state; the two Cardinals sit under him as judges. The QUEEN takes place at some distance from The Bishops place themselves an the King. each side the court, in manner of a consistory; between them the Scribes. The Lords sit between them the Scribes. The Lords sit next the Bishops. The Crier and the rest of the Attendants stand in convenient order next the Bishops. about the hall.

Wol. Whilst our commission from Rome is read,

Let silence be commanded.

K. Hen. What's the need? It hath already publicly been read, And on all sides the authority allow'd; Yon may, then, spare that time.

Wol. Be't so.—Proceed. Scribe. Say, Henry King of England, come into the court.

Crier. Henry King of England, &c.

K. Hen. Here.
Scribe. Say, Katherine, Queen of England, come into the court.
Crier. Katherine Queen of England. Ac.

Crier. Katharine Queen of England, &c.

[The QUEEN makes no answer, rises out of her chair, goes about the court, comes to the King, and kneels at his feet; then speaks.

Kath. Sir, I desire you do me right and justice;

And to bestow your pity on me: for I am n most poor woman, and a stranger, Born out of your dominions; having here No judge indifferent, nor no more assurance Of equal friendship and proceeding. Alas, sir, In what have I offended yon? what cause Hath my behaviour given to your displeasure, That thus you should proceed to put me off, And take your good grace from me? Heaven witness.

I have been to you a true and humble wife, At all times to your will conformable: Ever in fear to kindle your dislike, Yea, subject to your countenance,—glad or As I saw it inclin'd. When was the hour I ever contradicted your desire, Or made it not mine too? Or which of your Have I not strove to love, although I knew He were mine enemy? what friend of mine That had to him deriv'd your anger, did I Continue in my liking? nay, gave notice He was from thence discharg'd? Sir, call to mind That I have been your wife, in this ohedience, Upward of twenty years, and have been blest With many children by you: if, in the course And process of this time, you can report, And prove it too, against mine honour aught, My bond to wedlock or my love and duty, Against your sacred person, in God's name, Turn me away; and let the foul'st contempt Shut door upon me, and so give me np To the sharp'st kind of justice. Please you, sir, The king, your father, was reputed for A prince most prudent, of an excellent And unmatch'd wit and judgment: Ferdinand, My father, King of Spain, was reckon'd one The wisest prince that there had reign'd hy many A year hefore: it is not to be question'd That they had gather'd a wise council to them Of every realm, that did dehate this business, Who deem'd our marriage lawful: wherefore I humbly

Beseech you, sir, to spare me, till I may Be by my friends in Spain advis'd; whoso counsel

I will implore; if not, i' the name of God, Your pleasure be fulfill'd!

Wol. You have here, lady,—And of your choice,—these reverend fathers;

Of singular integrity and learning, Yea, the elect o' the land, who are assembled To plead your cause; it shall be therefore bootless

That longer you desire the court; as well For your own quiet as to rectify What is unsettled in the king. His grace

Cam. His grace Hath spoken well and justly: therefore, madam, THE VISION. Enter, solemnly tripping one after another, six Personages clad in white robes, wearing on their heads garlands of bays, and golden virands on their faces; branches of bays or palm in their hands. They first conges unto her, then dance; and, at certain changes, the first two hold a spare garland over her head; at which the other four make reverent courtesies: then the two that held the garland deliver the same to the other next two, who observe the same order in their changes, and holding the garland over her head: which done, they deliver the same garland to the last two, who likewise observe the same order: at which—as it were by inspiration,—she makes in her sleep signs of rejoicing, and holdeth up her hands to heaven: and so in their dancing they vanish, carrying the garland with them. The music continues.

Kath. Spirits of peace, where are ye? Are ye all gone?

And leave me here in wretchedness bohind ye? Grif. Madam, we are here.

Kath. It is not you I call for: Saw ye none enter since I slept?

Grif. No.? Saw you not, even now, a blessed troop

Invite me to a banquet; whose bright faces
Cast thousand beams upon me, like the sun?
They promis'd me eternal happiness;
And brought me garlands, Griffith, which I feel
I am not worthy yet to wear: I shall,

Assuredly. [dreams Grif. I am most joyful, madam, such good Possess your fancy.

Kath. Bid the music leave,

They are harsh and heavy to me. [Music ceases. Pat. Do you note How much her grace is alter'd on the sudden? How long her face is drawn? how pale she looks,

And of an earthy cold? Mark you her eyesl Grif. She is going, wench: pray, pray.

Pat. Heaven comfort her!

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. An't like your grace.—

Kath. You are a saucy fellow:
Deserve we no more reverence?

Grif. You are to blame. Knowing she will not lose her wonted greatness, To use so rude behaviour: go to, kneel.

Mess. I humbly do entreat your highness' pardon; lstaying
My haste made me unmannerly. There is
A gentleman, sent from the king, to see you.

Kath. Admit him entrance, Griffith: but this fellow

Let me ne'er see again.

[Exeunt GRIFFITH and Messenger.

Re-enter GRIFFITH, with CAPUCIUS.

If my sight fail not, You should be lord ambassador from the emperor,

My royal nephew, and your name Capacius.

Cap. Madam, the same,—your servant.

Kath.

O, my Lord,
The times and titles now are alter'd strangely
With me since first you knew me. But, I pray you,

What is your pleasure with me?

Cap. Noble lady, First, mine own service to your grace; the next, The king's request that I would visit you: Who grieves much for your weakness, and by me Sends you his princely commondations, And heartily entreats you take good comfort. Kath. O, my good lord, that comfort comes too late;

'Tis like a pardon after execution:

That gentle physic, given in time, had cur'd me; But now I am past all comforts here, but prayers.

How does his highness?

Cap. Madam, in good health.

Kath. So may he ever do I and ever flourish,

When I shall dwell with worms, and my poor

Banish'd the kingdom!—Patience, is that letter I caus'd you write yet sent away?

Pat.

[Giving it to KATHARINE.

Kath. Sir, I most humbly pray you to deliver
This to my load the bing.

Kath. Sir, I most manner, Francis to my lord the king.
Cap. Most willing, madam.
Kath. In which I have commended to his goodness

The model of our chaste loves, his young daughter,—

The dews of heaven fall thick in blessings on hor!—

Beseeching him to give her virtuous breeding; She is young, and of a noble modest nature,— I hope she will deserve well;—and a little To love her for her mother's sake, that lov'd him, (petition

Heaven knows how dearly. My next poor Is, that his noble grace would have some pity Upon my wretched women, that so long Have follow'd both my fortunes faithfully: Of which there is not one, I dare avow,— And now I should not lie,—but will deserve, For virtue and true beauty of the soul,

For honesty and decent carriage, A right good husband, let him be a noble; And, sure, those men are happy that shall have them.

The last is, for my men,—they are the poorest, But poverty could never draw 'em from me,— That they may have their wages duly paid 'em, And something over to remember me by: If heaven had pleas'd to have given me longer life

And able means, we had not parted thus.

These are the whole contents:—and, good my

lord,
By that you love the dearest in this world,
As you wish Christian peace to souls departed, Stand these poor people's friend, and urge the king

To do me this last right.

Cap.

By heaven, I will,

Or let me lose the fashion of a man!

Kath. I thank you, honest lord. Remember In all humility unto his highness:
Say his long trouble now is passing [him, Out of this world; tell him, in death I bless'd For so I will,—Mine eyes grow dim.—Farewell My lord.—Griffith, farewell.—Nay, Patience, You must not leave me yet: I must to bed;

Our daughter Mary: I' the progress of this business,

Ere a determinate resolution, he,-I mean the bishop,—did require a respite; Wherein he might the king his lord advertise Whether our daughter were legitimate. Respecting this our marriage with the dowager, Sometimesourbrother'swife. This respite shook
The bosom of my conscience, enter'd me, Yea, with a splitting power, and made to tremble The region of my breast; which forc'd such way That many maz'd considerings did throng, And press'd in with this caution. First, methought

I stood not in the smile of heaven; who had Commanded nature that my lady's womb, If it conceiv'd a male child by me, should Do no more offices of life to't than The grave does to the dead; for her male issue Or died where they were made, or shortly after This world had air'd them: hence I took a thought This was a judgment on me; that my kingdom, Well worthy the best heir o' the world, should

Be gladded in't by me: then follows that I weigh'd the danger which my realms stood in By this my issue's fail: and that gave to me Many a groaning throe. Thus hulling in The wild sea of my conscience, I did steer Towards this remedy, whereupon we are Now present here together; that's to say, I meant to rectify my conscience,—which I then did feel full sick, and yet not well,-By all the reverend fathers of the land, And doctors learn'd:—first, I began in private With you, my Lord of Lincoln; you remember How under my oppression I did reek

When I first mov'd you. Very well, my liege. Lin. K. Hen. I have spoke long: be pleas'd yourself to say

How far you satisfied me.

So please your highness, The question did at first so stagger me,-Bearing a state of mighty moment in't, And consequence of dread,—that I committed The daring st counsel which I had to doubt; And did entreat your highness to this course

Which you are running here.

I then mov'd you, K. Hen. My Lord of Canterbury; and got your leave To make this present summons:—unsolicited I left no reverend person in this court; But by particular consent proceeded Under your hands and seals: therefore, go on; For no dislike i' the world against the person Of the good queen, but the sharp thorny points Of my alleged reasons, drive this forward: Prove but our marriage lawful, by my life And kingly dignity, we are contented To wear our mortal state to come with her, Katharine our queen, before the primest creature That's paragon'd o' the world.

So pleasure your highness, The queen being absent, 'tis a needful fitness That we adjourn this court till further day: Meanwhile must be an earnest motion Made to the queen to call back her appeal

She intends unto his holiness.

They rise to depart. K. Hen. I may perceive These cardinals trifle with me: I abhor This dilatory sloth and tricks of Rome. [Aside.

My learn'd and well-belov'd servant, Cranmer, Prythee, return! with thy approach, I know, My comfort comes along. Break up the court: I say, set on.

Exeunt in manner as they entered.

ACT III.

Scene I.—London. Palace at Bridewell. A Room in the Queen's Apartment.

The Queen and some of her Women at work.

Q. Kath. Take thy lute, wench: my soul grows sad with troubles; Sing and disperse 'em, if thou canst: leave working.

SONG.

Orpheus with his lute made trees, And the mountain-tops that freeze Bow themselves, when he did sing: To his music plants and flowers Ever sprung; as sun and showers There had made a lasting spring.

Everything that heard him play, Even the billows of the sea, Hung their heads and then lay by. In sweet music is such art: Killing care and grief of heart Fall asleep, or, hearing, die.

Enter a Gentleman.

Q. Kath. How now? [cardinals Gent. An't please your grace, the two great Wait in the presence.

Q. Kath. Would they speak with me? Gent. They will'd me say so, madam. O. Kath.

Pray their graces To come near. [Exit Gent.] What can be their business

With me, a poor weak woman, fallen from favour?

I do not like their coming, now I think on't. They should be good men; their affairs as righteous:

But all hoods make not monks.

Enter Wolsey and CAMPEIUS.

Wol. Peace to your highness! O. Kath. Your graces find me here part of a housewife;

I would be all, egainst the worst may happen. What are your pleasures with me, reverend lords? [withdraw

Wol. May it please you, noble madam, to Into your private chamber, we shall give you The full cause of our coming.

Speak it here: Q. Kath. There's nothing I have done yet, o' my conscience, Deserves a corner: would all other women Could speak this with as free a soul as I dol. My lords, I care not,—so much I am happy Above a number,—if my actions Were tried by every tongue, every eye saw 'em, What!

Den. He attends your highness' pleasure.

K. Hen. Bring him to us. K. Hen. [Exit Denny.

Lov. This is about that which the bishop spake:

am happily come hither.

Aside.

Re-enter DENNY, with CRANMER.

K. Hen. Avoid the gallery.

LOVELL seems to stay. Ha! I have said. Be gone. Exeunt LOVELL and DENNY. Cran. I am fearful:—wherefore frowns he thus? 'Tis his aspect of terror. All's not well. [Aside. K. Hen. How now, my lord? you do desire to know Wherefore I sent for you.

It is my duty To attend your highness' pleasure.

K. Hen. Pray you, arise. My good and gracious Lord of Canterbury. Come, you and I must walk a turn together; I have news to tell you: come, come, give me your hand.

Ah, my good lord, I grieve at what I speak, And am right sorry to repeat what follows: I have, and most unwillingly, of late Heard many grievous, I do say, my lord, Grievous complaints of you; which, being consider'd,

Have mov'd us and our council that you shall This morning come before us; where, I know, You cannot with such freedom purge yourself But that, till further trial in those charges Which will require your answer, you must take Your patience to you, and be well contented To make your house our Tower: you a brother of us,

It fits we thus proceed, or else no witness

Would come against you.

Cran. I humbly thank your highness; And am right glad to catch this good occasion Most thoroughly to be winnow'd, where my chaff

And corn shall fly asunder: for I know There's none stands under more calumnions tongues

Than I myself, poor man.

Stand up, good Canterbury: K. Hen. Thy truth and thy integrity is rooted In us, thy friend: give me thy hand, stand up: Pr'ythee, let's walk. Now, by my holy-dame, What manner of man are yon? My lord, I look'd

You would have given me your petition that I should have ta'en some pains to bring together Yourself and your accusers; and to have heard

Without indurance, further.

Most dread liege, The good I stand on is my truth and honesty: If they shall fail, I, with mine enemies, [not, Will triumph o'er my person; which I weigh Being of those virtues vacant. I fear nothing What can be said against me.

Know you not How your state stands i' the world, with the whole world?

Your enemies are many, and not small: their practices

Must bear the same proportion; and not ever The justice and the truth o' the question carries The due o' the verdict with it: at what ease Might corrupt minds procure knaves as corrupt To swear against you? such things have been done.

You are potently oppos'd; and with a malice Of as great size. Ween you of better luck, I mean in perjur'd witness, than your Master, Whose minister you are, whiles here he liv'd Upon this naughty earth? Go to, go to; You take a precipice for no leap of danger, And woo your own destruction.

Cran. God and your majesty Protect mine innocence, or I fall into

The trap is laid for mel

K. Hen. Be of good cheer; They shall no more prevail than we give way to. Keep comfort to you; and this morning see You do appear before them: if they shall chance, In charging you with matters, to commit you, The best persuasions to the contrary Fail not to use, and with what vebemency The occasion shall instruct you: if entreaties Will render you no remedy, this ring Deliver them, and your appeal to us There make before them.-Look, the good man weeps!

He's honest, on mine honour. God's bless'd motheri

I swear he is true-hearted; and a soul None better in my kingdom.—Get you gone, And do as I have bid you. [Exit CRANMER.] —He has strangled

His language in his tears.

Enter on Old Lady.

Gent. [Within.] Come back: what mean you? Old L. I'll not come back; the tidings that I bring

Will make my boldness manners.-Now, good Fly o'er thy royal head, and shade thy person Under their blessed wings!

K. Hen. Now, by thy looks I guess thy message. Is the queen deliver'd? Say ay; and of a boy.

Ay, ay, my liege; Old L. And of a lovely boy: the God of Heaven Both now and ever bless her!-'tis a girl,-Promises boys hereafter. Sir, your queen Desires your visitation, and to be Acquainted with this stranger; 'tis as like you As cherry is to cherry.

Lovell,-K. Hen.

Re-enter LOVELL.

Sir? K. Hen. Give her an hundred marks. Pil to the queen. [Exit. Old L. An hundred marks! By this light, I'll ha' more. An ordinary groom is for such payment. I will have more, or scold it out of him. Said I for this, the girl was like to him? I will have more, or else unsay't; and now, While it is hot, I'll put it to the issue. Exeunt What will become of me now, wretched lady? I am the most unhappy woman living.

Alas, poor wenches, where are now your fortunes? To her Women. Shipwreck'd upon a kingdom, where no pity, No friends, no hope; no kindred weep for me; Almost no grave allow'd me:-like the lily. That once was mistress of the field and flourish'd, I'll hang my head and perish.

If your grace Wol. Could but be brought to know our ends are honest.

You'd feel more comfort: why should we, good lady, Upon what cause, wrong you? alas, our places. The way of our profession is against it: We are to cure such sorrows, not to sow 'em, For goodness' sake, consider what you do; How you may hurt yourself, ay, utterly Grow from the king's acquaintance, by this carriage. The hearts of princes kiss obedience, So much they love it; but to stubborn spirits They swell, and grow as terrible as storms. I know you have a gentle, noble temper, A soul as even as a calm: pray, think us-Those we profess, peace-makers, friends, and servants.

Cam. Madam, you'll find it so. You wrong your virtues With these weak women's fears: a noble spirit,

As yours was put into you, ever casts Such doubts, as false coin, from it. The king loves you;

Beware you lose it not: for us, if you please To trust us in your business, we are ready To use our utmost studies in your service. Q. Kath. Do what yo will, my lords: and,

pray, forgive me
If I have us'd myself unmannerly; You know I am a woman, lacking wit To make a seemly answer to such persons. Pray, do my service to his majesty: He has my heart yet; and shall have my prayers While I shall have my life. Come, reverend fathers, Bestow vonr counsels on me; she now begs That little thought, when she set footing here, She should have bought her dignities so dear. Exeunt.

Scene II.—London. Ante-chamber King's Apartment in the Palace. Ante-chamber to the

Enter the DUKE OF NORFOLK, the DUKE OF SUFFOLK, the EARL OF SURREY, and the Lord Chamberlain.

Nor. If you will now unite in your complaints, And force them with a constancy, the cardinal Cannot stand under them: if you omit The offer of this time, I cannot promise But that you shall sustain more new disgraces, With these you bear already.

Sur. I am joyful

To meet the least occasion that may give me Remembrance of my father-in-law, the duke, To be reveng'd on him.

Suf. Which of the peers Have uncontemn'd gone by him, or at least Strangely neglected? when did he regard

The stamp of nobleness in any person

Out of himself?

Cham. My lords, you speak your pleasures: What he deserves of you and me I know; What we can do to him,—though now the time Gives way to us,-- I much fear. If you cannot Bar his access to the king, never attempt Anything on him; for he hath a witchcraft Over the king in's tongue.

Nor. O, fear him not; His spell in that is out: the king hath found Matter against him that for ever mars The honey of his language. No. he's settled. Not to come off, in his displeasure.

Sur. I should be glad to hear such news as this Once every hour.

Nor. Believe it, this is true: In the divorce his contrary proceedings Are all unfolded; wherein he appears

His practices to light?

Suf. Most strangely. Súr. O, how, how? Suf. The cardinal's letters to the pope miscarried.

And came to the eye o' the king: wherein was

How that the cardinal did entreat his holiness. To stay the judgment o' the divorce; for if It did take place, I do, quoth he, perceive My king is tangled in affection to

A creature of the queen's, Lady Anne Bullen. Sur. Has the king this?

Suf. Believe it. Sur.

Will this work? Cham. The king in this perceives him how he coasts

And hedges his own way. But in this point All his tricks founder, and he brings his physic After his patient's death: the king already Hath married the fair lady.

Sur. Would he had! Suf. May you be happy in your wish, my lord! For, I profess, you have it.

Now, all my joy Sut. Trace the conjunction!

My amen to't! Suf.

Nor. All men's! Suf. There's order given for her coronation: Marry, this is yet but young, and may be left To some ears unreconnted.—But, my lords, She is a gallant creature, and complete In mind and feature: I persuade me, from her Will fall some blessing to this land, which shall In it be memoriz'd.

But will the king Sur. Digest this letter of the cardinal's?

The Lord forbid!

Nor. Marry, amen! Suf. No, no;

There be more wasps that buzz about his nose Will make this sting the sooner. Cardinal Campeius Is stol'n away to Rome; hath ta'en no leave; Has left the cause o' the king unhandled; and Is posted, as the agent of our cardinal, To second all his plot. I do assure you The king cried Ha! at this.

Suf. Nay, my lord, That cannot be: you are a counsellor, And, by that virtue, no man dare accuse you.

Gar. My lord, because we have business of more moment, pleasure, We will be short with you. 'Tis his highness' And our consent, for better trial of you, From hence you be committed to the Tower: Where, being but a private man again, You shall know many dare accuse you boldly,

More than, I fear, you are provided for. Cran. Ah, my good Lord of Winchester,I thank you; You are always my good friend; if your will I shall both find your lordship judge and juror, You are so merciful: I see your end,-'Tis my undoing: love and meekness, lord, Become a churchman better than ambition: Win straying souls with modesty again, That I shall clear myself, Cast none away. Lay all the weight ye can upon my patience, I make as little doubt as you do conscience In doing daily wrongs. I could say more,

But reverence to your calling makes me modest. Gar. My lord, my lord, you are a sectary That's the plain truth: your painted gloss discovers. To men that understand you, words and weak-Crom. My Lord of Winchester, you are a Little, By your good favour, too sharp; men so noble, However faulty, yet should find respect For what they have been: 'tis a cruelty To load a falling man.

Good master secretary, I cry your honour mercy; you may, worst

Of all this table, say so

Why, my lord? Gar. Do not I know you for a favourer Of this new sect? ye are not sound.

Not sound? Crom.Gar. Not sound, I say.

Would you were half so honest! Men's prayers then would seek you, not their fears.

Gar. I shall remember this bold language. Do. Стот.

Remember your bold life too. This is too much; Chan.

Forbear, for shame, my lords I have done. Gar. And I. Crom.

Chan. Then thus for you, my lord: it stands agreed,

I take it, by all voices, that forthwith You be conveyed to the Tower a prisoner; There to remain till the king's further pleasure Be known unto us:—are you all agreed, lords? All. We are.

Is there no other way of mercy, Cran. But I must needs to the Tower, my lords? What other

Would you expect? You are strangely troublesome.~

Let some o' the guard be ready there.

Enter Guard.

Must I go like a traitor thither?

Gar. Receive him, And see him safe i' the Tower.

Stay, good my lords, I have a little yet to say. Look there, my lords; By virtue of that ring I take my cause Out of the gripes of cruel men, and give it

To a most noble judge, the king my master. Cham. This is the king's ring.

'Tis no counterfelt. Sur. Suf. 'Tis the right ring, by heaven: I told ye ह्यी.

When we first put this dangerous stone a-rolling, 'Twould fall upon ourselves.

Nor. Do you think, my lords, The king will suffer but the little finger

Of this man to be ver'd? 'Tis now too certain: How much more is his life in value with him?

Would I were fairly out on't! Crom.My mind gave me, In seeking tales and informations Against this man,—whose honesty the devil And his disciples only envy at,~

Ye blew the fire that burns ye: now have at ye. Enter the KING frowning on them; he takes his seat.

Gar. Dread sovereign, how much are we bound to heaven

In daily thanks, that gave us such a prince; Not only good and wise, but most religious: One that, in all obedience, makes the church The chief aim of his honour; and, to strengthen That holy duty, out of dear respect, His royal self in judgment comes to hear

The cause betwixt her and this great offender. K. Hen. You were ever good at sudden commendations, Bishop of Winchester. But know, I come not To hear such flattery now, and in my presence; They are too thin and bare to hide offences. To me you cannot reach: you play the spanicl, And think with wagging of your tongue to win me:

But whatsoe'er thou tak'st me for, I am sure Thou hast a cruel nature, and a bloody. Good man [to CRANMER], sit down. Now let me see the proudest, He that dares most, but wag his finger at thee: By all that's holy, he had better starve Than but once think this place becomes thee

Sur. May it please your grace,— K. Hen. No, sir, it does not please me. I had thought I had had men of some understanding

And wisdom of my council; but I find none. Was it discretion, lords, to let this man, This good man,-few of you deserve that title,-

This honest man, wait like a lousy footboy At chamber door? and one as great as you are? Did my com-Why, what a shame was this! mission

Bid ye so far forget yourselves? I gave ye Power as he was a counsellor to try him, Not as a groom: there's some of ye, I see, More out of malice than integrity For me? Would try him to the utmost, had ye mean; Which ye shall never have while I live.

His word upon you. Since I had my office I have kept you next my heart; have not alone Employ'd you where high profits might come home.

But par'd my present havings to bestow My bounties upon you.

Wol. What should this mean?
Sur. The Lord increase this business! l'Aside.

Aside to others. Have I not made you The prime man of the state? I pray you, tell me If what I now pronounce you have found true: And, if you may confess it, say withal If you are bound to us or no. What s What say you?

Wol. My sovereign, I confess your royal graces. fconld Shower'd on me daily, have been more than My studied purposes requite; which went Beyond all man's endeavours:-my endeavours Here ever come too short of my desires. Yet fill'd with my abilities: mine own ends Have been mine so that evermore they pointed To the good of your most sacred person and The profit of the state. For your great graces Heap'd npon me, poor undeserver, I Can nothing render but allegiant thanks: My prayers to heaven for you; my loyalty. Which ever has and ever shall be growing, Till death, that winter, kill it.

Fairly answer'd; K. Hen. A loyal and obedient subject is Therein illustrated: the honour of it Does pay the act of it; as, i' the contrary, The foulness is the punishment. I presume That, as my hand has open'd bounty to you, My heart dropp'd love, my power rain'd honour, more On you than any; so your hand and heart, Your brain, and every function of your power, Should, notwithstanding that your bond of duty, As 'twere in love's particular, be more To me, your friend, than any

I do profess That for your highness' good I ever labour'd More than mine own; that am, have, and will bе,-[yon, Though all the world should crack their duty to And throw it from their soul; though perils did Abound as thick as thought could make 'em, and Appear in forms more horrid,—yet my dnty, As doth a rock against the chiding flood, Should the approach of this wild river break, And stand unshaken yours.

'Tis nobly spoker.: K. Hen. Take notice, lords, he has a loyal breast, For you have seen him open't .- Read o'er this;

[Giving him papers. And after, this; and then to breakfast with What appetite you have.

[Exit frowning upon CARDINAL WOLSEY: the Nobles throng after him, smiling and whispering.

What should this mean? Wol. What sudden anger's this? how have I reap'd it?

He parted frowning from me, as if ruin Leap'd from nis eyes: so looks the chafed lion Upon the daring huntsman that has gall'd him; Then makes him nothing. I must read this paper:

I fear, the story of his anger.—'Tis so; This paper has undone me:—'tis the account Of all that world of wealth I have drawn together For mine own ends; indeed, to gain the popedom

And fee my friends in Rome. O negligence, Fit for a fool to fall byl What cross devil Made me put this main secret in the packet I sent the king? Is there no way to cure this? No new device to beat this from his brains? I know 'twill stir him strongly; yet I know A way, if it take right, in spite of fortune, Will bring me off again.—What's this—To the Pobel

The letter, as I live, with all the business I writ to's holiness. Nay then, farewell! I have touch'd the highest point of all my great-

And from that full meridian of my glory I haste now to my setting: I shall fall Like a bright exhalation in the evening, And no man see me more.

Re-enter the DUKES OF NORFOLK and SUF-FOLE, the EARL OF SURREY, and the Lord Chamberlain.

Nor. Hear the king's pleasure, cardinal: who commands you

To render up the great seal presently Into our hands; and to confine yourself To Asher House, my Lord of Winchester's, Till you hear further from his highness. Stay,

Where's your commission, lords? words cannot CRITY

Anthority so weighty.

Suf.Who dare cross 'om, Bearing the king's will from his month so expressly Wol. Till I find more than will or words to do it.-

I mean your malice,—know, officious lords, I dare and must deny it. Now I feel Of what coarse metal ye are moulded, envy How eagerly ye follow my disgraces, As if it fed yel and how sleek and wanton Ye appear in everything may bring my ruin! Follow your envious courses, men of malice; You have Christian warrant for them, and, no doubt,

That seal, In time will find their fit rewards. You ask with such a violence, the king, Mine and your master,-with his own hand gave me;-Bade me enjoy it, with the place and honours, During my life; and, to confirm his goodness, Tied it by letters-patents: now, who'll take it?

Sur. The king, that gave it. It must be himself then. Wol. Sur. Then art a proud traiter, priest. Prond lord, thou liest: Wol.

Within these forty hours Surrey durst better Have burnt that tongue than said so.

Sur. Thy ambition, Thou scarlet sin, robb'd this bewailing land Of noble Buckingham, my father-in-law: The heads of all thy brother cardinals, With thee and all thy best parts bound together .-

Great store of room, no doubt, left for the ladies.

When they pass back from the christening. An't please your honour, Port. We are but men; and what so many may do, Not being torn a pieces, we have done:

An army cannot rule 'em.

 ${\it Cham}.$ As I live If the king blame me for't, I'll lay ye all By the heels, and suddenly; and on your heads Clapround fines for neglect: you're lazy knaves; And here ye lie baiting of bombards, when Ye should do service. Hark! the trumpets sound:

They are come already from the christening: Go, break among the press, and find a way out To let the troop pass fairly; or I'll find A Marshalsea shall hold you play these two

Port. Make way there for the princess. Man. You great fellow, Stand close up, or I'll make your head ache.

Port. You i' the camlet, get up o' the rail;
I'll pick you o'er the pales else. [Exeunt.

Scene IV .- The Palace.

Enter trumpets, sounding; then two Aldermen, Lord Mayor, Garter, CRANMER, DUKE OF NORFOLE, with his marshal's staff, DUKE OF SUFFOLK, two Noblemen bearing great standing-bowls for the christening gifts; then four Noblemen bearing a canopy, under which the Duchess of Norfolk, godmother, bearing the child richly habited in a mantle, Train borne by a Lady; then follows the Marceloness of Dorset, the other godmother, and Ladies. The troop pass once about the stage, and Garter speaks.

Gart. Heaven, from thy endless goodness, send prosperous life, long, and ever-happy, to the high and mighty princess of England, Elizabethl

Flourish. Enter KING and Train.

Cran. [Kneeling.] And to your royal grace and the good queen,

My noble partners and myself thus pray; All comfort, joy, in this most gracious lady, Heaven ever laid up to make parents happy,

May hourly fall upon yel

K. Hen. Thank you, good lord archbishop.

What is her name?

Elizabeth. Стап.

Stand up, lord. K. Hen. [The KING kisses the child. With this kiss take my blessing: God protect theel

Into whose hand I give thy life.

Cran. Amen. K. Hen. My noble gossips, ye have been too prodigal.

I thank ye heartily; so shall this lady, When she has so much English.

Let me speak, sir, Cran. For heaven now bids me; and the words I utter Let none think flattery, for they'll find 'em truth.

This royal infant,-Heaven still move about herl-

Though in her cradle, yet now promises Upon this land a thousand thousand blessings, Which time shall bring to ripeness: she shall

But few now living can behold that goodness,-A pattern to all princes living with her, And all that shall succeed: Saba was never More covetous of wisdom and fair virtue Than this pure soul shall be: all princely graces. That mould up such a mighty piece as this is, With all the virtues that attend the good. Shall still be doubled on her: truth shall nurse

Holy and heavenly thoughts still counsel her: She shall be lov'd and fear'd: her own shall bless her:

Her foes shake like a field of beaten corn, And hang their heads with sorrow: good grows with her:

In her days every man shall eat in safety. Under his own vine, what he plants; and sing The merry songs of peace to all his neighbours: God shall be truly known; and those about her From her shall read the perfect ways of honour, and by those claim their greatness, not by blood. Nor shall this peace sleep with her: but as when. The bird of wonder dies, the maiden phoenix, Her ashes new create another heir, As great in admiration as herself;

So shall she leave her blessedness to one,-When heaven shall call her from this cloud of darkness,-

Who from the sacred ashes of her honour Shall star-like rise, as great in fame as she was, And so stand fix'd: peace, plenty, love, truth,

That were the servants to this chosen infant, Shall then be his, and like a vine grow to him: Wherever the bright sun of heaven shall shine, His honour and the greatness of his name Shall be, and make new nations: he shall flourish,

And, like a mountain cedar, reach his branches To all the plains about him:-our children's children

Shall see this and bless Heaven.

Thou speak'st wonders. K. Hen. Cran. She shall be, to the happiness of England,

An aged princess; many days shall see her, And yet no day without a deed to crown it. Would I had known no morel but she must die, She must, the saints must have her,—yet a virgin;

A most unspotted lily shall she pass To the ground, and all the world shall mourn

K. Hen. O lord archbishop, Thou hast made me now a man; never, before This happy child, did I get anything This oracle of comfort has so pleas'd me That when I am in heaven I shall desire To see what this child does, and praise my Maker. I thank ye all .- To you, my good lord mayor, And you, good brethern, I am much beholding; I have received much honour by your presence, Enter CROMWELL, amazedly.

Why, how now, Cromwell! Crom. I have no power to speak, sir. What amez'd Wol. At my misfortunes? can thy spirit wonder A great man should decline? Nay, an you weep, I am fallen indeed.

How does your grace? Crom. Why, well; Wol.

Never so truly happy, my good Cromwell. I know myself now; and I feel within me A peace above all earthly dignities, A still and quiet conscience. The king has cur'd me,

I humbly thank his grace; and from these shoulders, These ruin'd pillars, out of pity, taken A load would sink a navy,—too much honour: O, 'tis a burden, Cromwell, 'tis a burden

Too heavy for a man that hopes for heaven! Crom. I am glad your grace has made that right use of it. [thinks,-

Wol. I hope I have; I am ablo now, me-Out of a fortitude of soul I feel,-To endure more miseries and greater far Than my weak-hearted enemies dare offer. What news abroad?

The heaviest and the worst Crom. Is your displeasure with the king.

Wo!.

God bless him! Crom. The next is that Sir Thomas More is chosen

Lord Chancellor in your place.

Wol. That's somewhat sudden: But he's a learned man. May he continue Long in his highness' favour, and do justice, For truth's sake and his conscience; that his

When he has run his course and sleeps in bless-May have a tomb of orphans' tears went on 'em!

Crom. That Cranmer is return'd with welcome, Install'd Lord Archbishop of Canterbury.

Wo!. That's news indeed. Last, that the Lady Anne, Whom the king hath in secrecy long married, This day was view'd in open as his queen, Going to chapel; and the voice is now

Only about her coronation. Wol. There was the weight that pull'd me down. O Cromwell,

The king has gone beyond me: all my glories In that one woman I have lost for ever: No sun shall ever usher forth mine honours. Or gild again the noble troops that waited Upon my smiles. Go, get thee from me, Cromwell; I am a poor fallen man, unworthy now To be thy lord and master: seek the king; That sun, I pray, may never set! I have told ithee: him

What and how true thou art: he will advance Some little memory of me will stir him,-I know his noble nature, -not to let Thy hopeful service perish too: good Cromwell, Neglect him not; make use now, and provide For thine own future safety.

Crom. O my lord, Must I then leave you? must I needs forego So good, so noble, and so true a master? Bear witness, all that have not hearts of iron, With what a sorrow Cromwell leaves his lord. The king shall have my service; but my prayers For ever and for ever shall be yours.

Wol. Cromwell, I did not think to shed a tear In all my miseries; but thou hast forc'd me, Out of thy honest truth, to play the woman. Let's dry our eyes: and thus far hear me,

Cromwell; And,— when I am forgotten, as I shall be, And sleep in dull cold marble, where no mention Of me more must be heard of,—say I taught thee: Say Wolsey,-that once trod the ways of glory, And sounded all the depths and shoals of honour.

Found thee a way, out of his wreck, to rise in; A sure and safe one, though thy master miss'dit. Mark but my fall, and that that ruin'd me. Cromwell, I charge thee, fling away ambition: By that sin fell the angels; how can man, then, The image of his Maker, hope to win by it? Love thyself last: cherish those hearts that hate thee:

Corruption wins not more than honesty. Still in thy right hand carry gentle peace, To silence envious tongues. Be just, and fear not:

Let all the ends thou aim'st at be thy country's, Thy God's and truth's: then, if thou fall'st, O. Cromwell

Thou fell'st a blessed martyr! Serve the king: And,-prythee, lead me in: There take an inventory of all I have, To the last penny; 'tis the king's: my robe, And my integrity to heaven, is all [well! I dere now call mine own. O Cromwell, Crom-

Had I but serv'd my God with half the zeal I serv'd my king, he would not in mine age Have left me usked to mine enemies. Crom. Good sir, have patience.

So I have. Wol. Farewell The hopes of courtl my hopes in heaven do dwell. Exeunt.

ACT IV.

Enter two Gentlemen, meeting.

I Gent. You are well met once again.

So are Jou. 2 Gent. r Gent. You come to take your stand here, and behold

The Ledy Anne pass from her coronation?
2 Gent. 'Tis all my business. At our last encounter

The Duke of Buckingham came from his trial. I Gent. 'Tis very true: but that time offer'd SOITOW:

This, general joy.

'Tis well: the citizens, 2 Gent. I am sure, have shown at full their royal minds; As, let 'em have their rights, they are ever forward, In celebration of this day with shows, Pageants, and sights of honour.

Never greater, I Gent. . Nor, I'll assure you, better taken, sir.

PROLOGUE.

In Troy, there lies the scene. From isles of Greece

The princes orgulous, their high blood chaf'd, Have to the port of Athens sent their ships, Fraught with the ministers and instruments Of cruel war: sixty and nine, that wore Their crownets regal, from the Athenian bay Put forth toward Phrygia: and their vow is made

To ransack Troy; within whose strong immures The ravish'd Helen, Menelaus' queen, With wanton Paris sleeps; and that's the quarrel.

To Tenedos they come; And the deep-drawing barks do there disgorge

Their warlike fraughtage: now on Dardan plains
The fresh and yet unbruised Greeks do pitch
Their brave pavilions: Priam's six-gated city,
Dardan, and Tymbria, Helias, Chetas, Troien,
And Antenorides, with massy staples
And corresponsive and fulfilling boits,
Sperr up the sons of Troy.
Now expectation, tickling skittish spirits,
On one and other side, Trojan and Greek,
Sets all on hazard:—and hither am I come
A prologue arm'd,—but not in confidence
Of author's pen or actor's voice; but suited
In like conditions as our argument,—
To tell you, fair beholders, that our play Leaps o'er the vaunt and firstlings of those broils.

And with the same full state pac'd back again To York Place, where the feast is held.

1 Gent. You must no more call it York Place, that's past:

For, since the cardinal fell, that title's lost:

'Tis now the king's and call'd Whitehall. 3 Gent. I know it:

But 'tis so lately alter'd that the old name Is fresh about me. 2 Gent. What two reverend bishops

Were those that went on each side of the queen? 3 Gent. Stokesly and Gardiner; the one of Winchester,— Newly preferr'd from the king's secretary,-The other, London.

2 Gent. He of Winchester

Is held no great good lover of the archbishop's, The virtuous Cranmer. All the land knows that: з Gent.

However, yet there is no great breach; when it comes. ihim. Cranmer will find a friend will not shrink from

2 Gent. Who may that be, I pray you? Thomas Cromwell: 3 Gent. A man in much esteem with the king, and truly worthy friend.—The king Has made him master o' the jewel-house, And one, already, of the privy council.

2 Gent. He will deserve more.

з Gent. Yes, without all donbt .-Come, gentlemen, ye shall go my way, which Is to the court, and there ye shall be my guests:

Something I can command. As I walk thither I'll tell ye more.

Both. You may command us, sir. Exeunt.

Scene IL-Kimbolton.

Enter Katharine, Dowager, sick; led between Griffith and Patience.

Grif. How does your grace?
Kath. O Griffith, sick to death! My legs, like loaden branches, bow to the earth, Willing to leave their burden. Reach a chair:-So,-now, methinks, I feel a little ease. [me, Didst thou not tell me, Griffith, as thou ledd'st That the great child of honour, Cardinal Wolsey, Was dead?

Grif. Yes, madam; but I think your grace, Out of the pain you suffer'd, gave no ear to't.

Kath. Pr'ythee, good Griffith, tell me how he died:

If well, he stepp'd before me, happily,

For my example.

Grif. Well, the voice goes, madam: For after the stout Earl Northumberland Arrested him at York, and brought him forward,

As a man sorely tainted,—to his answer, He fell sick suddenly, and grew so ill He could not sit his mule. Kath.

Alas, poor man! Grif. At last, with easy roads, he came to Leicester, Lodg'd in the abbey; where the reverend abbot, With all his covent, honourably receiv'd him;

To whom he gave these words, -O, father obbot, An old man, broken with the storms of state, Is come to lov his weary bones among ye: Give him a little earth for charity! So went to bed; where eagerly his sickness Pursu'd him still: and three nights after this, About the hour of eight.—which he himself Foretold should be his last, -full of repentance, Continual meditations, tears, and sorrows, He gave his honours to the world again, His blessed part to heaven, and slept in peace.

Koth. So may he rest; his faults lie gently on him! him, Yet thus far, Griffith, give me leave to speak And yet with charity. He was a man Of an unbounded stomach, ever ranking Himself with princes; one that, by suggestion, Tied all the kingdom: simony was fair play; His own opinion was his law: i' the presence He would say untruths; and be ever donble Both in his words and meaning: he was never, But where he meant to ruin, pitiful: His promises were, as he then was, mighty; But his performance, as he is now, nothing:

The clergy ill example. Grif. Noble madam, Men's evil manners live in brass; their virtues We write in water. May it please your highness To hear me speak his good now!

Yes, good Griffith: Kath.

Of his own body he was ill, and gave

I were malicious else. Grif.

This cardinal, Though from an humble stock, undonbtedly Was fashion'd to much honour from his cradle. He was a scholar, and a ripe and good one; Exceeding wise, fair-spoken, and persuading: Lofty and sour to them that lov'd him not; But to those men that sought him sweet as summer.

And though he were unsatisfied in getting,-Which was a sin, -yet in bestowing, madam, He was most princely: ever witness for him Those twins of learning that he rais'd in you. Ipswich and Oxford! one of which fell with him, Unwilling to ontlive the good that did it; The other, though unfinish'd, yet so famous, So excellent in art, and still so rising, That Christendom shall ever speak his virtue. His overthrow heap'd happiness upon him; For then, and not till then, he felt himself, And found the blessedness of being little: And, to add greater honours to his age

Than man could give him, he died fearing God. Kath. After my death I wish no other herald, No other speaker of my living actions, To keep mine honour from corruption, But such an honest chronicler as Griffith. Whom I most hated living, thou hast made me, With thy religious truth and modesty, Now in his ashes honour: peace be with him!-Patience, be near me still; and set me lower: I have not long to trouble thee .- Good Griffith. Cause the musicians play me that sad note I nam'd my knell, whilst I sit meditating On that celestial harmony I go to.

(Sad and solemn music. Grif. She is asleep; good wench, let's sit down quiet,

For fear we wake her: -- softly, gentle Patience.

Ene. Hark, what good sport is out of town to-day!

Tro. Better at home, if would I might were [thither? may.-But to the sport abroad;—are you bound

Æne. In all swift haste. T10.

Come, go we, then, together. Exeunt.

Scene II.—Troy. A Street.

Enter CRESSIDA and ALEXANDER.

Cres. Who were those went by?

Alex. Queen Hecuba and Helen.

Cres. And whither go they?

Alex. Up to the eastern tower, Whose height commands as subject all the vale, To see the battle. Hector, whose patience Is as a virtue fix'd, to-day was mov'd: He chid Andromache, and struck his armourer; And, like as there were husbandry in war, Before the sun rose he was harness'd light. And to the field goes he; where every flower Did, as a prophet, weep what it foresaw In Hector's wrath.

Cres. What was his cause of anger? Alex. The noise goes, this; there is among the Greeks

A lord of Trojan blood, nephew to Hector; They call him Ajax.

Good; and what of him? Cres. Alex. They say he is a very man per se, And stands alone.

Cres. So do all men,—unless they are drunk, sick, or have no legs.

Alex. This man, lady, hath robbed many beasts of their particular additions: he is as valiant as the lion, churlish as the bear, slow as the elephant: a man into whom nature hath so crowded humours that his valour is crushed into folly, his folly sauced with discretion: there is no man hath a virtue that he hath not a glimpse of; nor any man an attaint, but he carries some stain of it: he is melancholy without cause, and merry against the hair: he hath the joints of everything; but everything so out of joint that he is a gouty Briareus, many hands and no use; or purblind Argus, all eyes and no sight.

Cres. But how should this man, that makes me smile, make Hector angry?

Alex. They say he yesterday coped Hector in the battle, and struck him down; the disdain and shame whereof hath ever since kept Hector fasting and waking.

Cres. Who comes here?

Alex. Madam, your uncle Pandarus.

Enter PANDARUS.

Cres. Hector's a gallant man.

Alex. As may be in the world, lady. Pan. What's that? what's that?

Cres. Good-morrow, uncle Pandarus.

Pan. Good-morrow, cousin Cressid: what do you talk of?-Good-morrow, Alexander .-How do you, cousin? When were you at Ilium? | tongue had commended Troilus for a copper Cres. This morning, uncle.

Pan. What were you talking of when I came? Was Hector armed and gone ere ye came to better than Paris.

Ilium? Helen was not up, was she?

Cres. Hector was gone; but Helen was not

Pan. E'en so: Hector was stirring early. Cres. That were we talking of, and of his anger.
Pan. Was he angry?

Cres. So he says here.

Pan. True, he was so; I know the cause too; he'll lay about him to-day, I can tell them that: and there is Troilus will not come far behind him; let them take heed of Troilus, I can tell them that too.

Cres. What, is he angry too? Pan. Who, Troilus? Troilus is the better man of the two.

Cres. O Jupiter! there's no comparison. Pan. What, not between Troilus and Hector?

Do you know a man if you see him? Cres. Ay, if I ever saw him before, and knew him. Pan. Well, I say Troilus is Troilus.

Cres. Then you say as I say; for I am sure he is not Hector.

Pan. No. nor Hector is not Troilus in some Cres. 'Tis just to each of them; he is himself. Pan. Himselfl Alas, poor Troilus! I would he were.

Cres. So he is.

Pan. Condition, I had gone barefoot to India.

Cres. He is not Hector.

Pan. Himself! no, he's not himself,—would 'a were himself! Well, the gods are above; time must friend or end: well, Troilus, well,— I would my heart were in her bodyl-No, Hector is not a better man than Troilus.

Cres. Excuse me. Pan. He is elder.

Cres. Pardon me, pardon me. Pan. The other's not come to't; you shall tell me another tale when the other's come to't. Hector shall not have his wit this year,-

Cres. He shall not need it if he have his own. Pan. Nor his qualities,— Cres. No matter. Pan. Nor his beauty.

Cres. 'Twould not become him,-his own's better.

Pan. You have no judgment, niece: Helen herself swore the other day that Troilus, for a brown favour,-for so 'tis, I must confess,not brown neither .--

Cres. No, but brown. Pan. Faith, to say truth, brown and not brown.

Cres. To say the truth, true and not true. Pan. She praised his complexion above Paris.

Cres. Why, Paris hath colour enough.

Pan. So he has.

Cres. Then Troilus should have too much: if she praised him above, his complexion is higher than his; he having colour enough, and the other higher, is too flaming a praise for a good complexion. I had as lief Helen's golden nose. Pan. I swear to you I think Helen loves him

Cres. Then she's a merry Greek indeed.

Call in more women .- When I am dead, good wench,

Let me be us'd with honour: strew me over With maiden flowers, that all the world may know

I was a chaste wife to my grave: embaim me, Then lay me forth: although unqueen'd, yet like

A queen, and daughter to a king, inter me. I can no more. [Exeunt, leading KATHARINE.

ACT V.

Scene I .- London. A Gallery in the Palace.

Enter GARDINER, Bishop of Winchester, a Page with a torch before him.

Gar. It's one o'clock, boy, is't not'? Boy. It has struck. Gar. These should be hours for necessities, Not for delights; times to repair our nature With comforting repose, and not for us To waste these times.

Enter SIR THOMAS LOVELL.

Good hour of night, Sir Thomasl Whither so late? Came you from the king, my Lord?

Lov. Gar. I did, Sir Thomas; and left him at primero

With the Duke of Suffolk.

I must to him too, Lov. Before he go to bed. I'll take my leave. Gar. Not yet, Sir Thomas Lovell.

That seks despatch by day. My lord, I love you; Lon. And durst commend a secret to your ear Much weightier than this work. The queen's in labour,

They say in great extremity; and fear'd

She'll with the labour end.

· Gar. The fruit she goes with I pray for heartily, that it may find [Thomas, Good time, and live: but for the stock, Sir I wish it grubb'd up now:

Lov. Methinks I could Cry thee amen; and yet my conscience says She's a good creature, and, sweet lady, does Deserve our better wishes.

Gar. But, sir, sir,-Hear me, Sir Thomas: you are a gentleman · Of mine own way; I know you wise, religions; And, let me tell yon, it will ne'er be well,-'Twill not, Sir Thomas Lovell, take't of me,-Till Cranmer, Cromwell, her two hands, and she.

Sleep in their graves. Now, sir, you speak of two Lov. The most remark'd i' the kingdom. As for Cromwell, master

Gar. Yes, yes, Sir Thomas, There are that dare; and I myself have ventur'd To speak my mind of him: and indeed this day, Sir,-I may tell it you,-I think I have Incens'd the lords o' the council, that he is,-For so I know he is, they know he is,

A most arch heretic, a postilence [moved, That does infect the land: with which they Have hroken with the king; who hath so far Given ear to our complaint,—of his great grace And princely care; foreseeing those fell mischiefs

Our reasons laid before him, -hath commanded To-morrow morning to the council-board He be convented. He's a rank weed, Sir Thomas,

And we must root him out. From your affairs I hinder you too long: good night, Sir Thomas. Lov. Many good nights, my lord: I rest your servant.

[Excunt GARDINER and Page.

As LOVELL is going out, enter the KING and the Duke of Suffolk.

K. Hen. Charles, I will play no more to-night; My mind's not on't; you are too hard for me.

Suf. Sir, I did never win of you before. K. Hen. But little, Charles; Nor shall not, when my fancy's on my play.-Now, Lovell, from the queen what is the news?

Lov. I could not personally deliver to her -What you commanded me, but by her woman I sent your message; who return'd her thanks In the greatest humbleness, and desir'd your highness

Most heartily to pray for her. What say'st thou, ha?

To pray for her? what, is she crying out? Lov. So said her woman: and that her sufferance mado

K. Hen. Alas, good ladyl Suf. God safely quit her of her burden, and With gentle travail, to the gladding of Your highness with an heir!

K. Hen. 'Tis midnight, Charles: Prythee, to bed; and in thy prayers remember The estate of my poor queen. Leave me alone; For I must think of that which company Will not be friendly to.

I wish your highness Suf. A quiet night; and my good mistress will A quiet night, and P. Remember in my prayers.

Charles, good-night.

Exit SUFFOLK.

Enter SIR ANTHONY DENNY.

Well, sir, what follows? Ibishop, Den. Sir, I have brought my lord the arch-As you commanded me.

K. Hen. Hal Canterbury? Den. Ay, my good lord.

K. Hen. 'Tis true: where is he, Denny?

Troilus basses.

Pan. Where? yonder? that's Deighobus:-'tis Troilus! there's a man, niece!—Hem!— Brave Troilus! the prince of chivalry!

Cres. Peace, for shame, peace!

Pan. Mask him; him:--O note Troilus!-look well upon him, niece; look you how his sword is bloodied, and his helm more hack'd than Hector's; and how he looks, and how he goes!-O admirable youth! he ne'er saw three and twenty.-Go thy way, Troilus, go thy way!-Had I a sister were a grace, or a daughter a goddess, he should take his choice. O admirable man! Paris?—Paris is dirt to him; and, I warrant, Helen, to change, would give an eye to boot.

Cres. Here come more.

Forces pass.

Pan. Asses, fools, dolts! chaff and bran, chaff and bran! porridge after meat!-I could live and die i' the eyes of Troilus.-Ne'er look, ne'er look; the eagles are gone: crows and daws, crows and daws!-I had rather be such a man as Troilus than Agamemnon and all Greece.

Cres. There is among the Greeks Achilles,

-a better man than Troilus.

Pan. Achilles! a drayman, a porter, a very camel.

Cres. Well, well.

Pan. Well, well!—Why, have you any discretion? have you any eyes? do you know what a man is? Is not birth, beauty, good shape, discourse, manhood, learning, gentleness, virtue, youth, liberality, and such like, the spice and salt that season a man?

Cres. Ay, a minced man: and then to be baked with no date in the pie,-for then the man's date's out.

Pan. You are such a woman! one knows not at what ward you lie.

Cres. Upon my back, to defend my belly; upon my wit, to defend my wiles; upon my secrecy, to defend mine honesty; my mask, to defend my beauty; and you, to defend all these: and at all these wards I lie, at a thousand watches.

Pan. Say one of your watches.
Cres. Nay, I'll watch you for that; and that's one of the chiefest of them too: if I cannot ward what I would not have hit, I can watch you for telling how I took the blow; unless it swell past hiding, and then it is past watching.

Pan. You are such another!

Enter TROILUS' Boy.

Boy. Sir, my lord would instantly speak with you.

Pan. Where?

Boy. At your own house; there he unarms

Pan. Good boy, tell him I come. [Exit boy. I doubt he be hurt.—Fare ye well, good niece.

Cres. Adieu, uncle. Pan. I'll be with you, niece, by and by.

Cres. To bring, uncle.

Scene III.—The Grecian Camp. Before AGAMEMNON'S Tent.

Sennet. Enter Agamemnon, Nestor. ULYSSES, MENELAUS, and others.

Agam. Scene II .- Lobby before the Council Chomber. Enter CRANMER; Servants, Door-keeper, &c., attending.

Cran. I hope I am not too late; and yet the gentleman

That was sent to me from the council pray'd me To make great haste. All fast? what means this?-Ho!

Who waits there?-Sure, you know me? D. Keep. Yes, my lord;

But yet I cannot help you. Cron. Why?

D. Keep. Your grace must wait till you be call'd for.

Enter DOCTOR BUTTS.

Butts. There my lord: The high promotion of his grace of Canterbury; Who holds his state at door, 'mongst pursuivants.

Pages, and footboys. K. Hen. Hal 'tis he indeed: Is this the honour they do one another? 'Tis well there's one above them yet. I had thought

They had parted so much honesty among 'em, At least good manners,—as not thus to suffer A man of his place, and so near our favour, To dance attendance on their lordships' pleasures. And at the door too, like a post with packets. By holy Mary, Butts, there's knavery: Let 'em alone, and draw the curtain close; We shall hear more anon. [Exeunt.

The Council Chomber.

Chan. Speak to the business, master secretary:

Why are we met in council?

Crom. Please your honours, The chief cause concerns his grace of Canterbury.

Gor. Has he had knowledge of it? Crom. Yes.

Nor. Who waits there? D. Keep. Without, my noble lords? Gar. Yes.

D. Keep. My lord archbishop; And has done half an hour, to know your pleasures.

Chan. Let him come in.

D. Keep. Your grace may enter now. [CRAN. approaches the Council-toble. Chon. My good lord archbishop, I am verý SOTT

For so we are inform'd, -with new opinions, Divers and dangerous; which are heresies,

And, not reform'd, may prove pernicious.

Gor. Which reformation must be sudden too, My noble lords; for those that tame wild horses Pace 'em not in their hands to make 'em gentle. But stop their mouths with stubborn bits, and spur 'em.

Till they obey the manage. If we suffer,-Out of our easiness, and childish pity To one man's honour, -this contagious sick-

Cran. My good lords, hitherto in all the pro-Both of my life and office, I have labour'd, And with no little study, that my teaching And the strong course of my authority Might go one way, and safely; and the end Was ever to do well: nor is there living,-I speak it with a single heart, my lords,-A man that more detests, more stirs against, Both in his private conscience and his place, Defacers of a public peace, than I do. Pray heaven, the king may never find a heart With less allegiance in it! Men that make Envy and crooked malice nourishment Dare bite the best. I do beseech your lordships That, in this case of justice, my accusers, Be what they will, may stand forth face to face,

He acts thy greatness in: and when he speaks 'Tis like a chime a-mending; with terms unsquar'd, (dropp'd, Which, from the tongue of roaring Typhon Would seem hyperboles. At this fusty stuff The large Achilles, on his press'd bed lolling, From his deep chest laughs out a loud applause; Cries, Excellent! 'tis Agamemnon just Now play me Nestor; hem, and stroke thy beard, As he being drest to some oration. That's done;—as near as the extremest ends Of parallels; as like as Vulcan and his wife: Yet god Achilles still cries, Excellent! 'Tis Nestor right. Now play him me, Patroclus, Arming to answer in a night alarm. And then, forsooth, the faint defects of age Must be the scene of mirth; to cough and spit, And, with a palsy-fumbling on his gorget, Shake in and out the rivet: and at this sport Sir Valour dies; cries, O, enough, Patroclus; Or give me ribs of steel! I shall split all In pleasure of my spleen. And in this fashion All our abilities, gifts, natures, shapes, Severals and generals of grace exact, Achievements, plots, orders, preventions, Excitements to the field or speech for truce, Success or loss, what is or is not, serves As stuff for these two to make paradoxes. Nest. And in the imitation of these twain,

Who, as Ulysses says, opinion crowns With an imperial voice,—many are infect. Ajax is grown self-willed; and bears his head In such a rein, in full as proud a place As broad Achilles; keeps his tent like him; Makes factious feasts; rails on our state of war Bold as an oracle; and sets Thersites, A slave, whose gall coins slanders like a mint, To match us in comparisons with dirt, To weaken and discredit our exposure, How rank soever rounded in with danger. Ulyss. They tax our policy, and call it

Of their observant toil, the enemies' weight,-Why, this hath not a finger's dignity: They call this bed-work, mappery, closet-war; So that the ram that batters down the wall, For the great swing and rudeness of his poise, They place before his hand that made the engine.

Or those that with the fineness of their souls By reason guide his execution.

Nest. Let this be granted, and Achilles' horse Makes many Thetis' sons. [Trumpet sounds. Agam. What trumpet? look, Menelaus. Men. From Troy.

Enter ENEAS.

Agam. What would you fore our tent? Ene. Is this great Agamemnon's tent, I pray you?

Agam. Even this.

Æne. May one, that is a herald and a prince,

Do a fair message to his kingly ears?

Agam. With surety stronger than Achilles' arm ivoice Fore all the Greekish heads, which with one Call Agamemnon head and general. may Ene. Fair leave and large security. How A stranger to those most imperial looks Know them from eyes of other mortals? Agam. . How!

Æne. Ay I ask, that I might waken reverence. And bid the cheek be ready with a blush Modest as morning when she coldly eyes The youthful Phæbus:

Which is that god in office, guiding men? Which is the high and mighty Agamemnon? Agam. This Trojan scorns us; or the men of Troy Are ceremonious courtiers.

Ene. Courtiers as free, as debonair, un-

As bending angels; that's their fame in peace: But when they would seem soldiers, they have Jove's accord, galis.

Good arms, strong joints, true swords; and, Nothing so full of heart. But peace, Eneas, Peace, Trojan; lay thy finger on thy lips! The worthiness of praise distains his worth, If that the prais'd himself bring the praise forth: But what the repining enemy commends, That breath fame blows; that praise, sole pure, transcends.

Agam. Sir, you of Troy, call you yourself Ene. Ay, Greek, that is my name. Agam. What's your affair, I pray you? Ene. Sir, pardon; 'tis for Agamemnon's cars. Agam. He hears not privately that comes from Troy.

Ene. Nor I from Troy come not to whisper I bring a trumpet to awake his ear; To set his sense on the attentive bent, And then to speak.

Agam. Speak frankly as the wind; It is not Agamemnon's sleeping hour: That thou shalt know, Trojan, he is awake, He tells thee so himself.

Æne. Trumpet, blow loud, Send thy brass voice through all these lazy tents; And every Greek of mettle, let him know What Troy means fairly shall be spoke aloud. [Trumpet sounds.

We have, great Agamemnon, here in Troy A prince called Hector,—Priam is his father,-Who in this dull and long-continued truce Is rusty grown: he bade me take a trumpet And to this purpose speak. Kings, prin es, lords!

If there be one among the fair'st of Greece That holds his honour higher than his ease; That seeks his praise more than he fears his peril; That knows his valour and knows not his fear; That loves his mistress more than in confession,-With truant vows to her own lips he loves,-And dare avow her beauty and her worth In other arms than hers,—to him this challenge. Hector, in view of Trojans and of Greeks, Shall make it good, or do his best to do it, He hath a lady wiser, fairer, truer Than ever Greek did compass in his arms And will to-morrow with his trumpet call

I'm sure in me.

K. Hen. Well, well, my lords, respect him; Take him, and use him well, he's worthy of it. I will say thus much for him, -if a prince May be beholding to a subject, I Am, for his love and service, so to him.

Make me no more ado, but all embrace him: Be friends, for shame, my lords!-My Lord of Canterbury,

I have a suit which you must not deny me; That is, a fair young maid that yet wants baptism,

You must be godfather, and answer for her. Cran. The greatest monarch now alive may glory

In such an honour: how may I deserve it, That am a poor and humble subject to you? K. Hen. Come, come, my lord, you'd spare your spoons: you shall have

Two noble partners with you: the old Duchess of Norfolk [you? And Lady Marquis Dorset: will these please

Once more, my Lord of Winchester, I charge

you, Embrace and love this man. With a truo heart And brother-love I do it.

And let heaven Cron.

Witness how dear I hold this confirmation. K. Hen. Good man, those joyful tears show thy true heart:

The common voice, I see, is verified Of thee, which says thus,-Do my Lord of Conterbury A shrewd turn, and he is your friend forever. -Come, lords, we trifle time away; I long To have this young one made a Christian. As I have made ye one, lords, one remain; So I grow stronger, you more honour gain. Exeunt.

SCENE III .- The Poloce Yard.

Noise and tumult within. Enter Porter ond his Man.

Port. You'll leave your noise anon, ye rascals: do you take the court for Paris garden? ye rude slaves, leave your gaping.
[Within.] Good master porter, I belong to the larder.

. Port. Belong to the gallows, and be hanged, you reguel is this a place to roar in?-Fetch me a dozen crab-tree staves, and strong ones: these are but switches to them .- I'll scratch your heads: you must be seeing christenings? do you look for ale and cakes here, you rude rascals?

Mon. Pray, sir, be patient: 'tis as much [cannons,impossible,-Unless we sweep them from the door with To scatter 'em as 'tis to make 'em sleep On May-day morning; which will never be: We may as well push against Paul's as stir 'em. I

Port. How got they in, and be hang'd? Mon. Alas, I know not; how gets the tide in? As much as one sound cudgel of four foot,-You see the poor remainder, -could distribute, I made no spare, sir.

Port. You did nothing, sir. Mon. I am not Samson, nor Sir Gny, nor

Colbrand, To mow 'em down before me: but if I spar'd That had a head to hit, either young or old, He or she, cuckold or cuckold-maker, Let me ne'er hope to see a chine again; And that I would not for a cow, God save herl

[Within.] Do you hear, master porter? Port. I shall be with you presently, good master puppy .- Keep the door close, sirrah.

Man. What would you have me do?

Port. What should you do, but knock them down by the dozens? In this Moorfields to muster in? or have we some strange Indian with the great tool come to court, the women so besiege us? Bless me, what a fry of fornication is at door! On my Christian conscience, this one christening will beget a thousand: here will be father, godfather, and all together. Mon. The spoons will be the bigger, sir.

There is a fellow somewhat near the door, he should be a brazier by his face, for, o' my conscience, twenty of the dog-days now reign in's nose; all that stand about him are under the line, they need no other penance: that fire-drake did I hit three times on the head, and three times was his nose discharged against me; he stands there, like a mortar-piece, to blow us. There was a haberdasher's wife of small wit near him, that railed upon me till her pink'd porringer fell off her head, for kindling such a combustion in the state. I mis'd the meteor once, and hit that woman, who cried out Clubs! when I might see from far some forty truncheoners draw to her succor, which were the hope of the Strand, where she was quartered. They fell on: I made good my place: at length they came to the broomstaff to me; I defied them still: when suddenly a file of boys behind them, loose shot, delivered such a shower of pebbles, that I was fain to draw mine honour in, and let them win the work: the devil was amongst them, I think, surely.

Port. These are the youths that thunder at a play-house and fight for bitten apples; that, no audience, but the Tribulation of Tower-hill or the limbs of Limehouse, their dear brothers, are able to endure. I have some of them in Limbo Patrum, and there they are like to dance these three days; besides the running banquet of two beadles that is to come.

Enter the Lord Chamberlain.

Cham. Mercy o' me, what a multitude are herel coming, They grow still too; from all parts they are As if we kept a fair here! Where are these porters,

These lazy knaves? - Ye have made a fine hand,

fellows.

There's a trim rabble let in: are all these Your faithful friends o' the suburbs?

Ajax. Thou bitch-wolf's son, canst thou not hear? Feel, then. Beating him, Ther. The plague of Greece upon thee, thou mongrell heef-witted lord!

Ajax. Speak, then, thou vinewedst leaven, speak: I will beat thee into handsomeness.

Ther. I shall sooner rail thee into wit and holiness; but I think thy horse will sooner con an oration than thou learn a prayer without Thou canst strike, canst thou? a red hook. murrain o' thy jade's tricks!

Ajax. Toadstool, learn me the proclamation. Ther. Dost thou think I have no sense, thou strikest me thus?

Ajax. The proclamation,-

Ther. Thou art proclaimed a fool, I think.

Ajax. Do not, porcupine, do not; my fingers itch.

Ther. I would thou didst itch from head to foot, and I had the scratching of thee; I would make thee the loathsomest scab in Greece. When thou art forth in the incursions, thou strikest as slow as another.

Ajax. I say, the proclamation,-

Ther. Thou grumblest and railest every hour on Achilles; and thou art as full of envy at his greatness as Cerberus is at Proserpina's beauty, ay, that thou barkest at him.

Ajax. Mistress Thersites:

Ther. Thou shouldst strike him. Ajax. Cobloaf!

Ther. He would pun thee into shivers with his fist, as a sailor breaks a biscuit.

Ajax. You whoreson cur! [Beating him.]

. Ther. Do, do.

Ajax. Thou stool for a witch!

Ther. Ay, do, do; thou sodden-witted lord! thou hast no more brain than I have in mine elbows; an assinego may tutor thee: thou scurvy valiant ass! thou art here but to thrash Trojans; and thou art bought and sold among those of any wit, like a barbarian slave. If thou use to beat me, I will begin at thy heel, and tell what thou art by inches, thou thing of no bowels, thou!

Ajax. You dog!

Ther. You scurvy lord!

Ajax. You cur!

Beating him. Ther. Mars his idiot! do, rudeness; do, camel; do, do.

Enter ACHILLES and PATROCLUS.

Achil. Why, how now, Ajax! wherefore do you thus?-

How now, Thersites! what's the matter, man?

Ther. You see him there, do you?

Aehil. Ay; what's the matter? Ther. Nay, look upon him.

Achil. So I do: what's the matter?

Ther. Nay, but regard him well.

Achil. Well! why, I do so.

Ther. But yet you look not well upon him; for whosoever you take him to be, he is Ajax. Achil. I know that, fool.

Ther. Ay, but that fool knows not himself.

Aiax. Therefore I beat thee.

Ther. Lo, 10, 10, 10, what modicums of wit he utters! his evasions have ears thus long. I have bobbed his brain more than he has beat He knew his man.

my bones: I will buy nine sparrows for a penny, and his pia mater is not worth the This lord, Achilles, ninth part of a sparrow. Ajax,-who wears his wit in his belly, and his guts in his head,-I'll tell you what I say of. him.

Achil. What? Ther. I say, this Ajax,-[AJAX offers to beat him, ACHILLES interposes. *Achil. '*Nay, good Ajax.

Ther. Has not so much wit,— Achil. Nay, I must hold you.

Ther. As will stop the eye of Helen's needle, for whom he comes to fight.

Achil. Peace, fool!

Ther. I would have peace and quietness, but the fool will not: he there; that he; look you. there.

Ajax. O thou damned cur! I shall,— Achil. Will you set your wit to a fool's?
Ther. No, I warrant you; for a fool's will shame it,

Patr. Good words, Thersites.

Achil. What's the quarrel? Ajax. I hade the vile owl go learn me the tenor of the proclamation, and he rails upon me.

Ther. I serve thee not.

Ajax. Well, go to, go to.
Ther. I serve here voluntary.
Achil. Your last service was sufferance, 'twas not voluntary,-no man is beaten voluntary: Ajax was here the voluntary, and you as under an impress.

Ther. E'en so: a great deal of your wit, too. lies in your sinews, or else there be liars. Hector shall have a great catch if he knock out either of your brains: 'a were as good crack a rusty nut with no kernel.

Achil. What, with me too, Thersites?

Ther. There's Ulysses and old Nestor,— whose wit was mouldy ere your grandsires had nails on their toes, -yoke you like draught oxen, and make you plough up the wars.

Achil. What, what? [Ajax! to! Ther. Yes, good sooth: to, Achilles! to, Ajax. I shall cut out your tongue.

Ther. 'Tis no matter; I shall speak as much as thou afterwards.

Patr. No more words, Thersites; peace! Ther. I will hold my peace when Achilles' brach bids me, shall I?

Achil. There's for you, Patroclus.

Ther. I will see you hanged, like clotpoles, ere I come any more to your tents: I will keep where there is wit stirring, and leave the faction Exit. of fools.

Patr. A good riddance.

Achil. Marry, this, sir, is proclaim'd through all our host:-

That Hector, by the fifth hour of the sun, Will, with a trumpet, 'twixt our tents and Troy, To-morrow morning call some knight to arms That hath a stomach; and such a one that dare Maintain I know not what; 'tis trash. Farewell. Ajax. Farewell. Who shall answer him? Achil. I know not, it is put to lottery; otherwise

And ye shall find me thankful.—Lead the way, lords:— iye,

Ye must all see the queen, and she must thank She will be sick else. This day, no man think Has business at his honse; for all shall stay: This little one shall make it holiday. [Exeunt.

EPILOGUE

'Tis ten to one this play can never please
All that are here: some come to take their ease,
And sleep an act or two; but those, we fear,
If they hold when their ladies bid 'em clap.

We have frightened with our trumpets; so, 'ris clear,

They'll say 'tis nanght: others to hear the city
Abns'd extremely, and to cry,—That's witty!
Which we have not done neither: that, I fear,
All the expected good we're like to hear
For this play at this time, is only in
The merciful construction of good women:
For such a one we show'd 'em: if they smile,
And say 'twill do, I know, within awhile
All the best men are ours; for 'tis ill hap
If they hold when their ladies bid 'em clap.

Our firebrand brother, Paris, burns us all. Cry, Trojans, cryl an Helen and a woe: Cry, cry! Troy burns, or else let Helen go.

Hect. Now, youthful Troilus, do not these high strains

Of divination in our sister work
Some touches of remorse? or is your blood
So madly hot that no discourse of reason,
Nor fear of bad success in a bad cause,
Can qualify the same?

Tro. Why, brother Hector,
We may not think the justness of each act
Such and no other than event doth form it;
Nor once deject the courage of our minds
Because Cassandra's mad: her brain-sick

raptures
Cannot distaste the goodness of a quarrel
Which hath our several honours all engag'd
To make it gracious. For my private part,
I am no more touch'd than all Priam's sons:
And Jove forbid there should be done amongst

Such things as might offend the weakest spleen To fight for and maintain!

Par. Else might the world convince of levity As well my undertakings as your counsels: But I attest the gods, your full consent Gave wings to my propension, and cut off All fears attending on so dire a project. For what, alas, can these my single arms? What propugnation is in one man's valour, To stand the push and enmity of those This quarrel would excite? Yet, I protest, Were I alone to pass the difficulties, And had as ample power as I have will, Paris should ne'er retract what he hath done, Nor faint in the pursuit.

Pri. Paris, you speak Like one besotted on your sweet delights: You have the honey still, but these the gall; So to be valiant is no praise at all.

Par. Sir, I propose not merely to myself The pleasures such a beauty brings with it; But I would have the soil of her fair rape Wip'd off in honourable keeping her. What treason were it to the ransack'd queen, Disgrace to your great worths, and shame to me, Now to deliver her possession up On terms of base compulsion! Can it be That so degenerate a strain as this [bosoms? Should once set footing in your generous There's not the meanest spirit on our party, Without a heart to dare or sword to draw When Helen is defended; nor none so noble, Whose life were ill bestow'd or death unfam'd, Where Helen is the subject: then, I say, [well, Well may we fight for her, whom, we know The world's large spaces cannot parallel.

Hect. Paris and Troilus, you have both said

well;
And on the cause and question now in hand
Have gloz'd,—but superficially; not much
Unlike young men, whom Aristotle thought
Unfit to hear moral philosophy:
The reasons you allege do more conduce
To the hot passion of distemper'd blood
Than to make up a free determination
'Twixt right and wrong; for pleasure and revenge

Have ears more deaf than adders to the voice Of any true decision. Nature craves All dues be render'd to their owners: now. What nearer debt in all humanity Than wife is to the husband? If this law Of nature be corrupted through affection: And that great minds, of partial indulgence To their benumbed wills, resist the same; There is a law in each well-order'd nation To curb those raging appetites that are Most disobedient and refractory If Helen, then, be wife to Sparta's king,-As it is known she is,—these moral laws Of nature and of nations speak aloud To have her back return'd: thus to persist In doing wrong extenuates not wrong, But makes it much more heavy. Hector's opmion

Is this, in way of truth: yet, ne'ertheless, My spritely brethren, I propend to you In resolution to keep Helen still; For 'tis a cause that hath no mean dependence Upon our joint and several dignities.

Tro. Why, there you touch'd the life of our design:

Were it not glory that we more affected
Than the performance of our heaving spleens,
I would not wish a drop of Trojan blood
Spent more in her defence. But, worthy Hector,
She is a theme of honour and renown;
A spur to valiant and magnanimous deeds;
Whose present courage may beat down our foes,
And fame in time to come canonize us:
For, I presume, brave Hector would not lose
So rich advantage of a promis'd glory,
As smiles upon the forehead of this action,
For the wide world's revenue.

Hect. I am yours,
You valiant offspring of great Priamus.—
I have a roisting challenge sent amongst
The dull and factious nobles of the Greeks
Will strike amazement to their drowsy spirits:
I was advertis'd their great general slept,
Whilst emulation in the army crept:
This, I presume, will wake him. [Exeunt.

Scene III.—The Grecian Camp. Before Achilles' Tent.

Enter THERSITES.

Ther. How now, Thersites! what, lost in. the labyrinth of thy fury! Shall the elephant Ajax carry it thus? he beats me, and I rail at him: O worthy satisfaction! would it were otherwise; that I could beat him, whilst he 'Sfoot, I'll learn to conjure and railed at me. raise devils, but I'll see some issue of my spiteful execrations. Then there's Achilles,—a rare engineer. If Troy be not taken till these two undermine it, the walls will stand till they fall of themselves. O thou great thunder-darter of Olympus, forget that thou art Jove, the king of gods; and, Mercury, lose all the serpentine craft of thy caduceus; if ye take not that little little less-than-little wit from them that they havel which short-aimed ignorance itself knows is so abundant scarce, it will not in circumvention deliver a fly from a spider, without drawing their massy irons and cutting the web. After this, the vengeance on Beginning in the middle; starting thence away To what may be digested in a play. Like, or find fault; do as your pleasures are; Now good or had, 'tis but the chance of war.

ACT I.

Scene I .- TROY. Before PRIAM's Palace.

Enter TROILUS armed, and PANDARUS.

Tro. Call here my variet; I'll unarm again: Why should I war without the walls of Troy, That find such cruel hattle here within? Each Trojan that is master of his heart, Let him to field; Troilus, alas! hath none.

Pan. Will this gear ne'er he mended?
Two. The Greeks are strong, and skilful to their strength,
[valiant;
Fierce to their skill, and to their fierceness

Fierce to their skill, and to their fiercenes But I am weaker than a woman's tear, Tamer than sleep, fonder than ignorance, Less valiant than the virgin in the night, And skilless as unpractis'd infancy.

Pon. Well, I have told you enough of this: for my part, I'll not meddle nor make no further. He that will have a cake out of the wheat must needs tarry the grinding.

Tro. Have I not tarried?

Pan. Ay, the grinding; but you must tarry the holting.

Tro. Have I not tarried?

Pan. Ay, the holting; but you must tarry the leavening.

Tro. Still have I tarried.

Pan. Ay, to the leavening; but here's yet in the word hereafter, the kneading, the making of the cake, the heating of the oven, and the baking; nay, you must stay the cooling too, or you may chance to hurn your lips. [be,

Tro. Patience herself, what goddess e'er she Doth lesser hlench at sufferance than I do.

At Priam's royal table do I sit;

And when fair Cressid comes into my thoughts,— So, traitor!—when she comes!—When is she thence?

Pon. Well, she looked yesternight fairer than ever I saw her look, or any woman else.

Tro. I was about to tell thee,—when my heart, As wedged with a sigh, would rive in twain; Lest Hector or my father should perceive me, I have,—as when the sun doth light a storm,—Buried this sigh in wrinkle of a smile:

But sorrow that is couch'd in seeming gladness Is like that mirth fate turns to sudden sadness.

Pan. An her hair were not somewhat darker than Helen's,—well, go to,—there were no more comparison hetween the women,—but, for my part, she is my kinswoman; I would not, as they term it, praise her,—but I would somehody had heard her talk yesterday, as I did. I will not dispraise your sister Cassandra's wit; but,—

T70. O Pandarus! I tell thee, Pandarus,—When I do tell thee there my hopes lie drown'd, Reply not in how many fathoms deep They lie indrench'd. I tell thee, I am mad In Cressid's love: thou answer'st, she is fair; Pour'st in the open ulcer of my heart [voice; Her eyes, her hair, her cheek, her gait, her Handlest in thy discourse, O, that her hand,

In whose comparison all whites are ink, Writing their own reproach; to whose soft seizure

The cygnet's down is harsh, and spirit of senso Hard as the palm of ploughman!—This thon tell'st me,

As true thou tell'st me, when I say I love her; But, saying thus, instead of oil and halm, [me Thou lay'st in every gash that love hath given The knife that made it.

Pan. I speak no more than truth.
Tro. Thou dost not speak so much.
Pan. Faith, I'll not meddle in't.

Pan. Faith, I'll not meddle in't. Let her he as she is: if she be fair, 'tis the better for her; an she he not, she has the mends in her own hands.

Tro. Good Pandarus,—how now, Pandarus!
Pan. I have had my labour for my travail;
ill-thought on of her, and ill-thought on of you:
gone between and between, but small thanks for my labour.

Tro. What, art thou angry, Pandarus?

what, with me?

Pan. Because she is kin to me, therefore she's not so fair as Helen: an she were not kin to me, she would be as fair on Friday as Helen is on Sunday. But what care I? I care not an she were a blackamoor; 'tis all one to me.

Tro. Say I, she is not fair?

Pon. I do not care whether you do or no.

She's a fool to stay hehind her father; let her to the Greeks; and so I'll tell her the next time I see her: for my part, I'll meddle nor make no more in the matter.

Tro. Pandarus,-

Pan. Not I. Tro. Sweet Pandarus,-

Pan. Pray you, speak no more to me: I will leave all as I found it, and there an end.

[Exit. An alarum.

Tro. Peace, you ungracious clamours! peace, rude sounds!

Fools on both sides! Helen must needs be fair,

When with your blood you daily paint her thus. I cannot fight upon this argument; It is too starv'd a subject for my sword.

It is too stary'd a subject for my sword.
But Pandarus,—O gods, how do you plague

I cannot come to Cressid hut hy Pandar;
And he's as tetchy to be woo'd to woo.
As she is stubhorn-chaste against all suit.
Tell me, Apollo, for thy Daphne's love,
What Cressid is, what Pandar, and what we?
Her bed is India; there she lies, a pearl:
Between our Ilium and where she resides
Let it he call'd the wild and wandering flood;
Ourself the merchant; and this sailing Pandar
Our doubtful hope, our convoy, and our bark.

Alarum. Enter ÆNEAS.

Enc. How now, Prince Troilus's wherefore not afield? [sorts, Tro. Because not there: this woman's answer

For womanish it is to be from thence. What news, Aeneas, from the field to-day?

What news, Aeneas, from the field to-day?

Ene. That Paris is returned home, and hurt.

Tro. By whom, Aeneas?

Enc. Troilus, hy Menelaus.
Tro. Let Paris bleed; 'tis but a scar to scorn;
Paris is gor'd with Menelaus' horn. [Alarum.

That if he overhold his price so much, We'll none of him; but let him, like an engine Not portable, lie under this report,—
Bring action hither, this cannot go to war:
A stirring dwarf we do allowance give
Before a sleeping giant:—tell him so.

Patr. I shall; and bring his answer presently.

Agam. In second voice we'll not be satisfied; We come to speak with him.—Ulysses, enter you.

[Exit ULYSSES.

Ajax. What is he more than another?

Agam. No more than what he thinks he is.

Ajax. Is he so much? Do you not think he thinks himself a better man than I am?

Agam. No question.

Ajax. Will you subscribe his thought, and Let me go to him.

say he is?

Agam. No, noble Ajax; you are as strong, as valiant, as wise, no less noble, much more gentle, and altogether more tractable.

Ajax. Why should a man be proud? How doth pride grow? I know not what pride is.

Agam. Your mind is the clearer, Ajax, and your virtues the fairer. He that is proud eats up himself: pride is his own glass, his own trumpet, his own chronicle; and whatever praises itself but in the deed devours the deed in the praise.

Ajax. I do hate a proud man as I hate the engendering of toads.

Nest. Yet he loves himself: is't not strange?
[Aside.

Re-enter ULYSSES.

Ulyss. Achilles will not to the field to-morrow. Agam. What's his excuse?

Ulyss. He doth rely on none;
But carries on the stream of his dispose,
Without observance or respect of any,
In will peculiar and in self-admission.

Agam. Why will he not, upon our fair request,

Untent his person, and share the air with us?

Ulyss. Things small as nothing, for request's sake only, [greatness:

He makes important: possess'd he is with And speaks not to himself but with a pride. That quarrels at self-breath: imagin'd worth Holds in his blood such swoln and hot discourse That 'twixt his mental and his active parts Kingdom'd Achilles in commotion rages, And batters down himself: what should I say? He is so plaguy proud that the death tokens of it Cry, No recovery.

Agam. Let Ajax go to him.— Dear lord, go you and greet him in his tent: 'Tis said he holds you well; and will be led, At your request, a little from himself.

Ulyss. O Agamemnon, let it not be sol We'll consecrate the steps that Ajax makes When they go from Achilles. Shall the proud

lord,
That bastes his arrogance with his own seam,
And never suffers matter of the world
Enter his thoughts,—save such as do resolve
And ruminate himself,—shall he be worshipp'd
Of that we hold an idol more than he?
No, this thrice-worthy and right valiant lord
Must not so stale his palm, nobly acquir'd;

Nor, by my will, assubjugate his merit, As amply titled as Achilles is, By going to Achilles:

That were to enlard his fat-already pride, And add more coals to Cancer when he burns With entertaining great Hyperion. This lord go to him! Juniter forbid.

This lord go to him! Jupiter forbid; And say in thunder, Achilles go to him.

Nest. O, this is well; he rubs the vein of him.

[Aside.]

Dio. And how his silence drinks up this applause!

Ajax. If I go to him, with my armed fist I'll pash him o'er the face.

Agam. O, no, you shall not go. [pride Ajax. An' a be proud with me I'll pheeze his Let me go to him. [quarrel. Ulyss. Not for the worth that hangs upon our Ajax. A paltry, insolent fellow!

Nest. How he describes himself! [Aside. Ajax. Can he not be sociable?

Ulyss. The raven chides blackness. [Aside. Ajax. I'll let his humours blood.

Ajax. An all men were o' my mind,— Ulyss. Wit would be out of fashion. [Aside. Ajax. 'A should not bear it so, 'a should eat swords first: shall pride carry it?

Nest. An 'twould, you'd carry half. [Aside.

Ulyss. 'A would have ten shares. [Aside.

Ajax. I will knead him, I'll make him supple.

Nest. He's not yet thorough warm; force him with praises: pour in, pour in: his ambition is dry.

[Aside.

Ulyss. My lord, you feed too much on this dislike. [To AGAMEMNON. Nest. Our noble general, do not do so.

Dio. You must prepare to fight without Achilles. [harm,
Ulyss. Why 'tis this naming of him does him

Here is a man—but 'tis before his face; I will be silent.

Nest. Wherefore should you so? He is not emulous, as Achilles is.
Ulyss. Know the whole world, he is as valiant.

Ajax. A whoreson dog, that shall palter thus with us!

Would he were a Trojan!

Nest. What a vice were it in Ajax now,—

Ulyss. If he were proud.—
Dio. Or covetous of praise,— Ulyss. Ay, or surly borne,—
Dio. Or strange, or self-affected!
Ulyss. Thank the heavens, lord, thou art of sweet composure; [suck; Praise him that got thee, she that gave thee Fam'd be thy tutor, and thy parts of nature

Fam'd be thy tutor, and thy parts of nature Thrice-fam'd, beyond all erudition:
-But he that disciplin'd thy arms to fight,
Let Mars divide eternity in twain,
And give him half: and, for thy vigour,
Bull-bearing Milo his addition yield
To sinewy Ajax. I will not praise thy wisdom,
Which, like a bourn, a pale, a shore, confines

Thy spacious and dilated parts: here's Nestor,— Instructed by the antiquary times, He must, he is, he cannot but be wise;— But pardon, father Nestor, were your days

Pan. Nay, I am sure she does. She came to him the other day into the compassed window,-and, you know, he has not past three or four hairs on his chin.

Cres. Indeed, a tapster's arithmetic may soon bring his particulars therein to a total.

Pan. Why, he is very young: and yet will he, within three pounds, lift as much as his [lifter? brother Hector.

Cres. Is he so young a man and so old a Pan. But to prove to you that Helen loves him. -she came, and puts me her white hand to his cloven chin, Cres. Juno have mercy! how came it cloveu?

Pan. Why, you know, 'tis dimpled: I think his smiling becomes him better than any man in all Phrygia.

Cres. O, he smiles valiantly. Pan. Does he not?

Cres. O yes, an 'twere a cloud in antumn.
Pan. Why, go to, then:—but to prove to you that Heleu loves Troilns.

Cres. Troilus will stand to the proof if you'll prove it so.

Pan. Troilus! why, he esteems her no more than I esteem an addle egg.

Cres. If you love an addle egg as well as von love an idle head, you would eat chickens i' the shell.

Pan. I cannot choose but laugh to think how she tickled his chin; -indeed, she has a marvellous white hand. I must needs confess,-Cres. Without the rack.

Pan. And she takes upon her to spy a white hair on his chin.

Cres. Alas, poor chin! many a wart is richer. Pan. But there was such laughing!-Queen Hecuba laughed, that her eyes ran o'er .-

Cres. With millstones.

Pan. And Cassandra laughed,— Cres. Butthere was more temperate fire under the pot of her eyes. - Did her eyes run o'er too? Pan. And Hector laughed.

Cres. At what was all this laughing? Pan. Marry, at the white hair that Helen spied on Troilus' chin.

Cres. An't had been a green hair I should . have laughed too. Pan. They laughed not so much at the hair as at his pretty answer. Cres. What was his answer?

Pan. Quoth she, Here's but one and fifty hairs on your chin, and one of them is white. Cres. This is her question. Pan. That's true; make no question of that.

One and fifty hairs, quoth he, and one white: that white hair is my father, and all the rest are his sons.—Jupiter! quoth she, which of these hairs is Paris my husband?—The forked one, quoth he; pluck it out and give it him. But there was such laughing! and Helen so blushed, and Paris so chafed; and all the rest so laughed that it passed.

Cres. So let it now; for it has been a great while going hy.

Pan. Well, cousin, I told you a thing yesterday; think ou't.

Cres. So I do.

Pan. I'll he sworn 'tis true; he will weep Heleuus is a priest. you, an 'twere a man born in April.

Cres. And I'll spring up in his tears, an 'twere a nettle against May. A retreat sounded. Pan. Hark! they are coming from the field: shall we stand up here, and see them as they pass toward Hium? good niece, do; sweet Cressida.

Cres. At your pleasure.

Pan. Here, here, here's an excellent place; here we may see most bravely: I'll tell you them all by their names as they pass by; but mark Troilus above the rest.

Cres. Speak not so loud.

ENEAS passes.

Pan. That's Eneas: is not that a brave man? he's one of the flowers of Troy. I can tell you. But mark Troilus; you shall see anon.

ANTENOR passes.

Cres. Who's that? Pan. That's Antenor: he has a shrewd wit, I can tell you; and he's a man good euough: he's one o' the soundest judgments in Troy, whosoever, and a proper man of person. When comes Troilus?—I'll show you Troilus anon:

if he see me, you shall see him nod at me.

Cres. Will he give you the nod?

Pan. You shall see.

Cres. If he do, the rich shall have more.

HECTOR passes.

Pan That's Hector, that, that, look you, that; there's a fellow!—Go thy way, Hector! There's a brave man, niece. —O brave Hector! Look how he looks !- There's a countenance! Is't not a brave man?

Cres. O, a brave man!
Pan. Is 'a not? It does a man's heart good. -Look you what hacks are on his helmet! look you yonder, do you see? look you there: there's no jesting; there's laying on; take't off who will; as they say: there be hacks!

Cres. Be those with swords?

Pan. Swords! anything, he cares not; an the devil come to him, it's all one: by god's lid, it does one's heart good. Youder comes Paris, yonder comes Paris:

PARIS passes.

look ye youder, niece; is't not a gallant man too, is't not?—Why, this is brave now.—Who said he came hurt home to-day? he's not hurt: why, this will do Helen's heart good now, ha! -Would I could see Troilus now!--yon shall see Troilus anou.

HELENUS passes.

Cres. Who's that?

Pan. That's Helenus:—I marvel where
Troilus is:—that's Helenus:—I think he weut not forth to-day:-that's Heleuus.

Cres. Can Helenus fight, uncle?
Pan. Helenus! no;—yes, he'll fight indiffereut well.—I marvel where Troilus is.—Hark! do you not hear the people cry Troilus?-

Cres. What sneaking fellow comes yonder?

Pan. Come, come, I'll hear no more of this; I'll sing you a song now.

Helen. Ay, ay, pr'ythee now. By m sweet lord, thou hast a fine forebead. By my troth.

Pan. Ay, you may, you may.

Helen. Let thy song be love: this love will undo us all. O Cupid, Cupid, Cupid!

Pan. Love! ay, that it sball, i' faith. [love. Par. Ay, good now, love, love, nothing but

Pan. In good troth, it hegins so:

Love, love, nothing but love, still more! For, oh, love's bow Shoots buck and doe: The shaft confounds, Not that it wounds, But tickles still the sore. These lovers cry—Oh! oh! they die!
Yet that which seems the would to kill, Doth turn oh! oh! to ha! ha! he! So dying love lives still: Oh! oh! a while, but ha! ha! ha! Oh! oh! groans out for ha! ha! ha!

Heigh ho!

Helen. In love, i' faith, to the very tip of the

Par. He eats nothing hut doves, love; and that breeds hot blood, and hot blood begets hot thoughts, and hot thoughts heget hot deeds, and hot deeds is love.

Pan. Is this the generation of love? hot blood, hot thoughts, and hot deeds? Why, they are vipers: is love a generation of vipers?

Sweet lord, who's a-field to-day? Par. Hector, Deiphobus, Helenus, Antenor, and all the gallantry of Troy: I would fain have armed to-day, but my Nell would not have it so. How chance my brother Troilus went not?

Helen. He hangs the lip at something:

you know all, Lord Pandarus.

Pan. Not I, honey-sweet queen.—I long to hear how they sped to-day. You'll remember your brother's excuse?

Par. To a hair.

Pan. Farewell, sweet queen.

Helen. Commend me to your niece.

Pan. I will, sweet queen. Exit. [A retreat sounded.

Par. They are come from field; let us to Priam's hall [woo you, To greet the warriors. Sweet Helen, I must To help unarm our Hector: his stuhborn [touch'd, buckles, With these your white enchanting fingers Shall more obey than to the edge of steel, Or force of Greekish sinews; you shall do more Than all the island kings,—disarm great Hector.

Helen. 'Twill make us proud to he his servant, Paris;

Yea, what he shall receive of us in duty Gives us more palm in heauty than we have, Yea, overshines ourself.

Par. Sweet, ahove thought I love thee. . . [Exeunt.

Scene. II-Troy. Pandarus' Orchard. Enter PANDARUS and TROILUS' Boy meeting

Pan. How now! where's thy master? at my cousin Cressida's?

Boy. No, sir; he stays for you to conduct him thither.

Pan. O, here he comes.

Enter TROILUS.

How now, how now!

Tro. Sirrah, walk off. Exit Boy.

Pan. Have you seen my cousin? Tro. No, Pandarus: I stalk ahout her door, Like a strange soul upon the Stygian banks Staying for waftage. O, be thou my Charon

And give me swift transportance to those fields Where I may wallow in the lily beds Propos'd for the deserver! O gentle Pandarus, From Cupid's shoulder pluck his painted wings, And fly with me to Cressid!

Pan. Walk here i' the orchard, I'll bring her straight.

Tro. I am giddy; expectation whirls me round.

The imaginary relish is so sweet That it enchants my sense: what will it be, When that the wat'ry palate tastes indeed Love's thrice-repured nectar? death, I fear me; Swooning destruction; or some joy too fine, Too subtle-potent, tun'd too sharp in sweetness, For the capacity of my ruder powers: I fear it much; and I do fear besides That I shall lose distinction in my joys; As doth a hattle, when they charge on heaps The enemy flying.

Re-enter PANDARUS.

Pan. She's making her ready, she'll come straight: you must be witty now. She does so blush, and fetches her wind so sbort, as if she were frayed with a sprite: I'll fetch her. It is the prettiest villain: she fetches her breath as short as a new-ta'en sparrow. [Exit.

Tro. Even such a passion doth embrace my bosom: My heart beats thicker than a feverous pulse; And all my powers do their bestowing lose, Like vassalage at unawares encounting The eye of majesty.

Re-enter Pandarus with Cressida.

Pan. Come, come, what need you blusb? shame's a baby.—Here she is now: swear the oaths now to her that you have sworn to me. -What, are you gone again? you must be watched ere you he made tame, must you? Come your ways, come your ways; an you draw backward, we'll put you i' the fills.— Why do you not speak to her?—Come, draw this curtain, and let's see your picture. Alas the day, how loth you are to offend daylight! an 'twere dark, you'd close sooner. So, so; ruh on, and kiss the mistress. How now, a hiss in fee-farm! build there, carpenter; the air is sweet. Nay, you shall fight your hearts out ere I part you. The falcon as the tercel, for all the ducks i' the river: go to, go to.

Tro. You have hereft me of all words, lady. Pan. Words pay no debts, give her deeds: hut she'll hereave you o' the deeds too, if she call your activity in question. What, hilling again? Here's-In witness whereof the parties

Cres. Prophet may you be!
If I be false, or swerve a hair from truth,
When time is old and hath forgot itself,
When waterdrops have worn the stones of Troy
And blind oblivion swallow'd cities up,
And mighty states characterless are grated
To dusty nothing; yet let memory

As air, as water, wind, or sandy earth, As fox to lamb, as wolf to heifer's calf, Pard to the hind, or stepdame to her son; Yes, let them say, to stick the heart of falsehood.

As false as Cressid.

Pan. Go to, a bargain made: seal it, seal it; I'll be the witness. Here I hold your hand; here my cousin's. If ever you prove false one to another, since I have taken such pains to bring you together, let all pitiful goers-between be called to the world's end after my name, call them all Pandars; let all constant men be Troiluses, all false women Cressids, and all brokers between Pandarsi say, amen.

Tro. Amen. Cres. Amen.

Pan. Amen. Whereupon I will show you a chamber and a bed; which bed, because it shall not speak of your pretty encounters, press it to death: away!
And Cupid grant all tongue-tied maidens here,

Bed, chamber, Pandar to provide this gear!

Scene III.—The Grecian Camp.

Enter Agamemnon, Ulysses, Diomedes Nestor, Ajax, Menelaus, and Calchas.

Cal. Now, princes, for the service I have done you

The advantage of the time prompts me aloud
To call for recompense. Appear it to your mind

To call for recompense. Appear it to your mind That, through the sight I bear in things to Jove, I have abandon'd Troy, left my possession, Incurr'd a traitor's name; expos'd myself, From certain and possess'd conveniences, To doubtful fortunes; sequest'ring from me all That time, acquaintance, custom, and condition Made tame and most familiar to my nature; And here, to do you service, am become As new into the world, strange, unacquainted. I do beseech you, as in way of taste, To give me now a little benefit, Out of those many register'd in promise, Which, you say, live to come in my behalf. Agam. What wouldst thou of us, Trojan?

make demand. [Antenor, Cal. You have a Trojan prisoner, call'd Yesterday took: Troy holds him very dear.

Oft have you,—often have you thanks therefore.—

Desir'd my Cressid in right great exchange, Whom Troy hath still denied: but this Antenor, I know, is such a wrest in their affairs That their negotiations all must slack Wanting his manage; and they will almost Give us a prince of blood, a son of Priam, In change of him: let him be sent. great princes, And he shall buy my daughter; and her presence Shall quite strike off all service I have done In most accepted pain.

Agam. Let Diomedes bear him, And bring us Cressid hither: Calchas shall have What he requests of us.—Good Diomed, Furnish you fairly for this interchange: Withal, bring word if Hector will to-morrow Be answer'd in his challenge: Ajax is ready.

Dio. This shall I undertake; and 'tis a burden Which I am proud to bear.

Exeunt Diomedes and Calchas.

Enter ACHILLES and PATROCLUS, before their tent.

Ulyss. Achilles stands i' the entrance of his tent:—

Please it our general to pass strangely by him, as if he were forgot; and, princes all, Lay negligent and loose regard upon him: I will come last. 'Tis like he'll question me Why such unplausive eyes are bent on him: If so, I have derision med'cinable, To use between your strangeness and his pride, Which his own will shall have desire to drink: It may do good: pride hath no other glass To show itself but pride; for supple lenees Feed arrogance, and are the proud man's fees. Agam. We'll execute your purpose, and put on A form of strangeness as we pass along;— So do each lord; and either greet him not, Or else disdainfully, which shall shake him more

Than if not look'd on. I will lead the way.
Achil. What, comes the general to speak with me?

(Troy.

You know my mind, I'll fight no more 'gainst Agam. What says Achilles? would he aught with us? [general? Would you my lord, sught with the Nest. Would you, my lord, aught with the Achil. No.

Nest. Nothing, my lord. Agam. The better.

Execut AGAMEMNON and NESTOR

Achil. Good day, good day.

Men. How do you? how do you? [Exit.

Achil. What, does the cuckold scorn me?

Ajax. How now, Patroclus?
Achil. Good-morrow, Ajax.

Ajax. Ha?

Achil. Good-morrow.

Ajax. Ay, and good next day too. | Exit.
Achil. What mean these fellows? Know they not Achilles? | (to bend,

Patr. They pass by strangely: they were us'd To send their smiles before them to Achilles; To come as humbly as they us'd to creep

To holy altars.

Achil. What, am I poor of late?

'Tis certain, greatness, once fallen out with fortune,

Mid-way hetween your tents and walls of Troy. To rouse a Grecian that is true in love: If any come, Hector shall honour him; If none, he'll say in Troy when he retires. The Grecian dames are sunhurnt, and not worth The splinter of a lance. Even so much.

Agam. This shall be told our lovers, Lord

Æneas;

If none of them have soul in such a kind, We left them all at home: hut we are soldiers; And may that soldier a mere recreant prove That means not, hath not, or is not in love! If then one is, or hath, or means to be. That one meets Hector; if none else, I am he.

Nest. Tell him of Nestor, one that was a man When Hector's grandsire suck'd: he is old now; But if there be not in our Grecian host One noble man that hath one spark of fire To answer for his love, tell him from me-I'll hide my silver beard in a gold beaver, And in my vanthrace put this wither'd brawn; And, meeting him, will tell him that my lady Was fairer than his grandame, and as chaste As may be in the world: his youth in flood, I'll prove this truth with my three drops of blood.

[youth! Ene. Now heavens forhid such scarcity of Ulyss: Amen.

Agam. Fair Lord Aeneas, let me touch your To our pavilion shall I lead you, sir. Achilles shall have word of this intent; So shall each lord of Greece, from tent to tent: Yourself shall feast with us before you go, And find the welcome of a noble foe.

[Exeunt all but ULYSS. and NEST.]

Ulyss. Nestor,— Nest. What says Ulysses?

[brain; Ulyss. I have a young conception in my Be you my time to bring it to some shape. Nest. What is't?

Ulyss. This 'tis: Blunt wedges rive hard knots: the seeded pride That hath to this maturity blown up In rank Achilles must or now be cropp'd, Or, shedding, breed a nursery of like evil, To overhulk us all.

Well, and how? · Nest. sends. Ulyss. This challenge that the gallant Hector However it is spread in general name, Relates in purpose only to Achilles. Istance, Nest. The purpose is perspicuous even as sub-Whose grossness little characters sum up: And, in the publication, make no strain But that Achilles, were his hrain as harren As banks of Lihya —though, Apollo knows, 'Tis dry enough,-will, with great speed of judgment, Ay, with celerity, find Hector's purpose Pointing on him.

Ulyss. And wake him to the answer, think you? (else oppose

Nest. Yes, 'tis most meet: whom may you That can from Hector bring his honcur off, If not Achilles? Though't be a sportful comhat, Yet in the trial much opinion dwells; For here the Trojans taste our dear'st repute With their fin'st palate: and trust to me, Ulysses, Our imputation shall be oddly pois'd In this wild action; for the success, Although particular, shall give a scantling

Of good or had unto the general; And in such indexes, although small pricks To their subsequent volumes, there is seen The baby figure of the giant mass Of things to come at large. It is suppos'd He that meets Hector issues from our choice: And choice being mutual act of all our souls, Makes merit her election; and doth boil, As 'twere from forth us all, a man distill'd Out of our virtues; who miscarrying, part, What heart receives from hence the conquering To steal a strong opinion to themselves? Which entertain'd, limbs are his instruments. In no less working than are swords and bows Directive by the limbs.

Ulyss. Give pardon to my speech; Therefore 'tis meet Achilles meet not Hector. Let us, like merchants, show our foulest wares, And think perchance they'll sell; if not, The lastre of the hetter shall exceed, By showing the worst first. Do not consent That ever Hector and Achilles meet; For both our honour and our shame in this

Are dogg'd with two strange followers. Nest. I see them not with my old eyes: what are they?

Ulyss. What glory our Achilles shares from Hector, (him: Were he not proud, we all should share with But he already is too insolent; And we were better parch in Afric sun

Than in the pride and salt scorn of his eyes, Should he 'scape Hector fair: if he were foil'd, Why, then we did our main opinion crush In taint of our best man. No, make a lottery; And, by device, let blockish Ajax draw The sort to fight with Hector: among ourselves, Give him allowance for the better man; For that will physic the great Myrmidon Who hroils in loud applause, and make him fall His crest that prouder than hlue Iris hends. If the dull brainless Ajax come safe off, We'll dress him up in voices: if he fail, Yet go we under our opinion still That we have hetter men. But, hit or miss, Our project's life this shape of sense assumes,-

Ajax employ'd plucks down Achilles' plumes. Nest. Now, Ulysses, I hegin to relish thy advice;

And I will give a teste of it forthwith To Agamemnon: go we to him straight. Two curs shall tame each other: pride alone Must tarre the mastiffs on, as 'twere their bone. Exeunt.

ACT II.

Scene I .- Another part of the Grecian Camp.

Enter AJAX and THERSITES.

Ajax. Thersites,-

Ther. Agamemnon,-how if he had boils,full, all over, generally?—

Ajax. Thersites,-

Ther. And those boils did run?-Say so,did not the general run then? were not that a botchy core?-

Ajax. Dog,-

Ther. Then would come some matter from him; I see none now.

The providence that's in a watchful state Knows almost every grain of Pluto's gold; Finds bottom in the uncomprehensive deeps; Keeps place with thought, and almost, like the

Does thoughts unveil in their dumb cradles. There is a mystery—with whom relation Durst never meddle—in the soul of state: Which hath an operation more divine Than breath or pen can give expressure to: All the commerce that you have had with Troy As perfectly is ours as yours, my lord; And better would it fit Achilles much To throw down Hector than Polyxena: But it must grieve young Pyrrhus now at home. When fame shall in our island sound her trump; And all the Greekish girls shall tripping sing, Great Hector's sister did Achilles win; But our brave Ajax bravely beat down him. Farewell, my lord: I as your lover speak; The fool slides o'er the ice that you should

Patr. To this effect, Achilles, have I moved

A woman impudent and mannish grown Is not more loath'd than an effeminate man In time of action. I stand condemn'd for this; They think my little stomach to the war, And your great love to me, restrains you thus: Sweet, rouse yourself; and the weak wanton Cupid Shall from your neck unloose his amorous fold, And, like a dew-drop from the lion's mane, Be shook to air.

Achil.Shall Ajax fight with Hector? Patr. Ay, and perhaps receive much honour | Hector to his tent,by him.

Achil. I see my reputation is at stake; My fame is shrewdly gor'd.

Patr.), then, beware; Those wounds heal ill that men do give themselves;

Omission to do what is necessary Seals a commission to a blank of danger; And danger, like an ague, subtly taints Even then when we sit idly in the sun.

Achil. Go call Thersites hither, sweet

Patroclus: I'll send the fool to Ajax, and desire him To invite the Trojan lords, after the combat, To see us here unarm'd: I have a woman's longing, An appetite that I am sick withal, To see great Hector in his weeds of peace; To talk with him, and to behold his visage, Even to my full of view. A labour sav'd!

Enter THERSITES.

Ther. A wonder!

Achil. What?

Ther. Ajax goes up and down the field asking for himself.

Achil. How so?

Ther. He must fight singly to-morrow with Hector; and is so prophetically proud of an heroical cudgelling that he raves in saying nothing.

Achil. How can that be? Ther. Why, he stalks up and down like a peacock, -a stride and a stand: ruminates like!

an hostess that hath no arithmetic but her brain to set down her reckoning: bites his lip with a politic regard, as who should say, There were wit in this head, an 'twould out; and so there is; but it lies as coldly in him as fire in a flint. which will not show without knocking. The man's undone for ever; for if Hector break not his neck i' the combat, he'll break it himself in vain-glory. He knows not me: I said Goodmorrow, Ajax; and he replies, Thanks, Agamemnon. What think you of this man, that takes me for the general? He is grown a very land fish, languageless, a monster. A plague of opinion! a man may wear it on both sides, like a leather jerkin.

Achil. Thou must be my ambassador to him,

Thersites.

Ther. Who, I? why, he'll answer nobody; he professes not answering: speaking is for beggars; he wears his tongue in's arms. I will put on his presence: let Patroclus make demands to me, you shall see the pageant of Ajax.

Achil. To him, Patroclus: tell him, I humbly desire the valiant Ajax to invite the most valorous Hector to come unarmed to my tent; and to procure safe conduct for his person of the magnanimous and most illustrious six-orseven-times-honoured captain-general of the Grecian army, Agamemnon. Do this.

Patr. Jove bless great Ajaxl
Ther. Hum!
Patr. I come from the worthy Achilles,—

Ther. Ha!

Patr. Who most humbly desires you to invite

Ther. Hum!

Patr. And to procure safe conduct from Agamemnon.

Ther. Agamemnon!

Patr. Ay, my lord.

Ther. Hal

Patr. What say you to't?

Ther. God be wi' you, with all my heart.

Patr. Your answer, sir.

Ther. If to-morrow be a fair day, by eleven o'clock it will go one way or other: howsoever, he shall pay for me ere he has me.

Patr. Your answer, sir.

Ther. Fare you well, with all my heart.

Achil. Why, but he is not in this tune, is he?

Ther. No, but he's out o' tune thus. What music will be in him when Hector has knocked out his brains I-know not: but, I am sure, none; unless the fiddler Apollo get his sinews to make catlings on.

Achil. Come, thou shalt bear a letter to him straight.

Ther. Let me bear another to his horse; for that's the more capable creature.

Achil. My mind is troubl'd, like a fountain stirr'd;

And I myself see not the bottom of it.

(Exeunt ACHIL. and PATROCLUS.

Ther. Would the fountain of your mind were clear again, that I might water an ass at it! had rather be a tick in a sheep than such a valiant ignorance.

Exit.

Ajax. O, meaning you.—I'll go learn more of it. [Exeunt.

Scene II.—TROY. A Room in PRIAM'S Paloce.

Enter Priam, Hector, Troilus, Paris, and Helenus.

Pri. After so many hours, lives, speeches spent.

Thus once again says Nestor from the Greeks:—
Deliver Helen, and all damage else,—
As honour, loss of time, travail, expense, Wounds, friends, and what else dear that is consum'd

In hot digestion of this cormorant war,— Shall be struck off.—Hector, what say you to't? Hect. Though no manlesser fears the Greeks than I.

As far as toucheth my particular,
Yet, dread Priam,
There is no lady of more softer bowels,
More spongy to suck in the sense of fear,
More ready to cryout, Who knows what follows?
Than Hector is: the wound of peace is surety,
Surety secure; but modest doubt is call'd
The beacon of the wise, the tent that senches
To the bottom of the worst. Let Helen go:
Since the first sword was drawn about this question,

Every tithe soul, 'mongst many thousand dismes, Hath heen as dear as Helen,—I mean, of ours: If we have lost so many tenths of ours, To guard a thing not ours, nor worth to us, Had it our name, the value of one ten,—What merit's in that reason which denies

The yielding of her up?

Tro. Fie, fie, my brother!
Weigh you the worth and honour of n king,
So great as our dread father, in a scale
Of common ounces? will you with counters sum
The past-proportion of his infinite?
And buckle-in a waist most fathomless
With spans and inches so diminutive

As fears and reasons? fie, for godly shame!

Hel. No marvel though you bite so sharp at reasons:

You are so empty of them. Should not our
Bear the great sway of his affairs with reasons,
Because your speech hath none that tells him

'so?

Tro. You are for dreams and slumbers, brother priest; [reasons: You fur your gloves with reason. Here are your You know an enemy intends you harm; You know a sword employ'd is perilons, And reason flies the object of all harm: Who marvels, then, when Helenus beholds A Grecian and his sword, if he do set The very wings of reason to his heels, And fly like chidden Mercury from Jove, Or like a star disrob'd?—Nay if we talk of the pool of reason [honour Let's shut our gates and sleep: manhood and Should have hearts would they but fat their thoughts

With this cramm'd reason: reason and respect
Mako livers pale and lustihood deject.

Hect. Brother, she is not worth what she doth cost

The holding.

Tro. What is aught but as 'tis valued? Hect. But value dwells not in particular will; It holds his estimate and dignity. As well wherein 'tis precious of itself As in the prizer: 'tis mad idolatry. To make the service greater than the god; And the will dotes, that is attributive. To what infectiously itself affects,

Without some image of the affected merit.

Tro. I take to-day a wife, and my election
Is led on in the conduct of my will;
My will enkindled by mine eyes and ears,
Two traded pilots 'twirt the dangerous shores
Of will and judgment: how may I avoid,
Although my will distaste what it elected,
The wife I chose? there can be no evasion
To blench from this, and to stand firm by honour:

We turn not back the silks upon the merchant When we have soil'd them; nor the remainderviands

We do not throw in unrespective sieve, Because we now are full. It was thought meet Paris should do some vengeance on the Greeks: Your breath of full consent bellied his sails; The seas and winds,—old wranglers,—took.a

And did him service: he touch'd the ports
And for an old aunt, whom the Greeks held captive, [freshness He brought a Grecian queen, whose youth and Wrinkles Apollo's, and makes stale the morning.

Why keep we her? the Grecians keep our aunt:
Is she worth keeping? why, she is a pearl,
Whose price hath launch'd above a thonsand ships,

And turn'd crown'd kings to merchants.
If you'll avouch 'twas wisdom Paris went,—
As you must needs, for you all cried, Go, go,—
If you'll confess he brought home noble prize,—
As you must needs, for you all clapp'd your hands.

And cried, Inestimable!—why do you now The issue of your proper wisdoms rate, And do a deed that fortune never did,—Beggar the estimation which you priz'd Richer than sea and land? O their most base, That we have stol'n what we do fear to keep! But thieves, unworthy of a thing so stol'n, That in their country did them that disgrace, We fear to warrant in our native place!

We fear to warrant in our native place?

Cas. [Within.] Cry, Trojans, cry!

Pri. What noise? what shriek is this?

Pro. 'Tis our mad sister, I do know her voice.

Cas. [Within.] Cry, Trojans!

Hect. It is Cassandra.

Enter Cassandra, raving.

Cas. Cry, Trojans, cry!lend me ten thousand eyes,

And I will fill them with prophetic tears.

Hecl. Peace, sister, peace. [old, Cas. Virgins and boys, mid-age and wrinkled Soft infancy, that nothing canst but cry, Add to my clamours! let us pay hetimes A moiety of that mass of moan to come. Cry, Trojans, cry! practise your eyes with tears! Troy must not be, nor goodly Ilion stand;

Enter PANDARUS.

Pan. How now, how now? how go maidenheads?

-Here you maid! where's my cousin Cressid? Cres. Go hang yourself, you naughty mocking uncle!

You hring me to do, and then you flout me too. Pan. To do what? to do what?—let her say what: what have I brought you to do?

Cres. Come, come, beshrew your heart!
you'll ne'er be good,

Nor suffer others.

Pan. Ha, ha! Alas, poor wretch! ah, poor capocchial hast not slept to-night? would he not, a naughty man, let it sleep? a bugbear take him!

Cres. Did not I tell you?—would he were knock'd i' the head!— [Knocking. Who's that at door? good uncle, go and see. My lord, come you again into my chamber: You smile, and mock me, as if I meant naughtily.

Tro. Hal hal

Cres. Come, you are deceiv'd, I think of no Knocking. such thing .-

How earnestly they knock!-Pray you, come in: I would not for half Troy have you seen here. Exerni TROILDS and CRESSIDA

Pan. [Going to the door.] Who's there? what's the matter? will you heat down the door? How now? what's the matter?

Enter Eners.

Ene. Good-morrow, lord, good-morrow.
Pan. Who's there? my lord Eneas? By my troth, I knew you not: what news with you so early?

Enc. Is not Prince Troilus here? Pan. Here! what should he do here? Ene. Come, he is here, my lord; do not deny him:

It doth import him much to speak with me. Pan. Is he here, say you? 'tis more than I know, I'll be sworn.—For my own part, I came in late. What should he do here?

then:-come, Ene. Who!-nay, you'll do him wrong ere you are ware: you'll be so true to him to be false to him: do not you know of him, but yet go fetch him hither; .go. .

As PANDARUS is going out, re-enter TROILUS

Tro. How now! what s the matter? Ene. My lord, I scarce have leisure to salute you, My matter is so rash. There is at hand Paris your brother, and Deiphohus, . The Grecian Diomed, and our Antenor Deliver'd to us; and for him forthwith, Ere the first sacrifice, within this hour, We must give up to Diomedes' hand The Lady Cressida.

Aene. Good, good, my lord; the secrets of nature

Have not more gift in taciturnity.

Exeunt Troilus and Eneas. Pan. Is't possible? no sooner got but lost?. The devil take Antenor! the young prince will go mad: a plague upon Antenor! I would they had proke's neck!

Re-enter-CRESSIDA:

Cres. How now! what is the matter? who was here?

Pan. An, ah! Cres. Why sigh you so profoundly? where's my lord? gone! tell me, sweet uncle, what's the matter?

Pan. Would I were as deep under the earth as I am above!

Cres. O the gods! what's the matter? Pan. Prythree, get thee in. Would thou hadst ne'er been born? I knew thou wouldst be his death!-O, poor gentleman!-A plague upon Antenor!

Cres. Good uncle, I heseech you, on my knees I beseech you, what's the matter?

Pan. Thou must be gone, wench, thou must be gone; thou art changed for Antenor: thou must to thy father, and he gone from Troilus: 'twill be his death; 'twill be his bane; he cannot bear it.

Cres. O you immortal gods!—I will not go.

Cres. I will not, uncle: I have forgot my father; I know no touch of consanguinity;

No kin, no love, no blood, no soul so near me As the sweet Troilus .- O you gods divine! Make Cressid's name the very crown of falsehood

If ever she leave Troilus! Time, force, and Do to this body what extremes you can; But the strong base and building of my love Is as the very centre of the earth,

Drawing all things to it.—I'll go in and weep.—

Pan. Do, do. Cres. Tear my bright hair, and scratch my praised cheeks;

Crack my clear voice with sobs, and break my With sounding Troilus. I will not go from Troy.

Street before PANDARUS' SCENE III.-TROY. House.

Enter Paris, Troilus, ENEAS, DEIPHOBUS, ANTEHOR, and DIOMEDES.

Par. It is great morning; and the hour prefix'd

Of her delivery to this valiant Greek Comes fast upon:-good my brother Troilus, Tell you the lady what she is to do, the whole campl or, rather, the bone-achel for that, methinks, is the curse dependent on those that war for a placket. I have said my prayers; and devil envy say Amen.-What, hol my Lord Achilles !

Enter PATROCLUS.

Patr. Who's there? Thersites! Good Ther-sites, come in and rail.

Ther. If I could have remembered a gilt counterfeit, thou wouldst not have slipped out of my contemplation: but is is no matter; thyself upon thyself! The common curse of mankind, folly and ignorance, be thine in great revenuel heaven bless thee from a tutor, and discipline come not near thee! Let thy blood be thy direction till thy death! then if she that lays thee out says thou art a fair corse, I'll be sworn and sworn upon't she never shrouded any but lazars. Amen.-Where's Achilles?

Patr. What, art thou devout? wast thou in prayer?

Ther. Ay, the heavens hear mel

Enter ACHILLES.

Achil. Who's there?
Patr. Thersites, my lord.
Achil. Where, where?—Art thou come? Why, my cheese, my digestion, why hast thou not served thyself in to my table so many Come, -what's Agamemnon?

Ther. Thy commander, Achilles:-then tell me, Patroclus, wbat's Achilles?

Patr. Thy lord, Thersites: then tell me, I pray thee, what's thyself?

Ther. Thy knower, Patroclus: then tell me,

Patroclus, what art thou?

Patr. Thou mayst tell that knowest.
Achil. O, tell, tell.

Ther. I'll decline the whole question. Agamemnon commands Achilles; Achilles is my lord; I am Patroclus' knower; and Patroclus is a fool.

Patroclus is a fool.

Patr. Yon rascal!
Ther. Peace, fool! I have not done.

Achil. He is a privileged man .- Proceed,

Thersites. Ther. Agamemnon is a fool; Achilles is a fool; Thersites is a fool; and, as aforesaid, Achil. Derive this; come.

Ther. Agamemnon is a fool to offer to command Achilles; Achilles is a fool to be commanded of Agamemnon; Thersites is a fool to serve such a fool; and Patroclus is a fool positive.

Patr. Why am I a fool?

Ther. Make that demand of the prover. suffices me thou art .- Look you, who comes here?

Achil. Patroclus, I'll speak with nobody-Come in with me, Thersites. [Exi [Exit.

Ther. Here is such patchery, such juggling, and such knavery! all the argument is a cuckold; And underwrite in an observing kind and a whore; a good quarrel to draw emulous. His humorous predominance; yea, watch factions and bleed to death upon. Now the His pettish lunes, his ebbs, his flows, as dry serpigo on the subject! and war and lechery: The passege and whole carriage of this action confound all!

[Exit. | Rode on his tide. Go tell him this; and add,

Enter AGAMEMNON, ULYSSES, NESTOR, DIOMEDES, and AJAX.

Agam. Where is Achilles? [lord. Patr. Within his tent; but ill-dispos'd, my Agam. Let it be known to him that we are here.

He shent our messengers; and we lay by Our appertainments, visiting of him: Let him be told so; lest, perchance, he think We dare not move the question of our place, Or know not what we are.

Patr. I shall say so to him. [Exit. Ulyss. We saw him at the opening of his tent:

He is not sick.

Ajax. Yes, lion-sick, sick of proud heart: you may call it melancholy, if you will favour the man; but, by my head, 'tis pride: but why, why? let him show us the cause. - A word, my lord. Takes AGAMEMNON aside.

Nest. What moves Ajax thus to bay at him? Ulyss. Achilles bath inveigled his fool from him

Nest. Who, Thersites? Ulyss. He.

Nest. Then will Ajax lack matter, if he have lost his argument.

Myss. No; you see, he is his argument that has his argument,-Achilles.

Nest. All the better; their fraction is more our wish than their faction. But it was a strong composure a fool could disunite.

Ulyss. The amity that wisdom knits not, folly may easily untie. Here comes Patroclus. Nest. No Achilles with him.

Uluss. The elephant hath joints, but none for courtesy: his legs are legs for necessity, not for flexure.

Re-enter PATROCLUS.

Patr. Achilles bids me say, he is much sorry If anything more than your sport and pleasure Did move your greatness and this noble state To call upon him; he hopes it is no other But for your health and your digestion sake,-

An after-dinner's breath. Agam. Hear you, Patroclus:~ We are too well acquainted with these answers: But his evasion, wing'd thus swift with scorn, Cannot outfly our apprehensions.

Much attribute he hath; and much the reason Why we ascribe it to him: yet all his virtues,-Not virtuously on his own part beheld,-Do in our eyes begin to lose their gloss; Yea, like fair fruit in an unwholesome dish,

Are like to rot untasted. Go and tell bim We come to speak with him; and you shall not sin

If you do say we think him over-proud And under-honest; in self-assumption greater Than in the note of judgment; and worthier

tban himself Here tend the savage strangeness he puts on, Disguise the holy strength of their command, And underwrite in an observing kind His pettish lunes, his ebbs, his flows, as if

Enter ENEAS, PARIS, ANTENOR, DEIPHOBUS and DIOMEDES.

Welcome, Sir Diomed! here is the lady Which for Antenor we deliver you: At the port, lord, I'll give her to thy hand; And by the way possess thee what she is. Entreat her fair; and, by my soul, fair Greek, If e'er thou stand at mercy of my sword, Name Cressid, and thy life shall be as safe As Priam is in Ilion.

Fair Lady Cressid, Dio.So please you, save the thanks this prince expects:

The lustre in your eye, heaven in your cheek, Pleads your fair usage; and to Diomed You shall be mistress, and command him wholly.

Tro. Grecian, thou dost not use me courteously, To shame the zeal of my petition to thee In praising her: I tell thee, lord of Greece, She is as far high-soaring o'er thy praises As thou unworthy to be call'd her servant. I charge thee use her well, even for my charge; For, by the dreadful Pluto, if thou dost not, Though the great bulk Achilles be thy guard, I'll cut thy throat.

Dio.O, be not mov'd, Prince Troilus: Let me be privileg'd by my place and message To be a speaker free; when I am hence I'll answer to my lust: and know you, lord, I'll nothing do on charge: to her own worth She shall be priz'd; but that you say, be't so, I'll speak it in my spirit and honour, no.

Tro. Come, to the port.—I'll tell thee, Diomed, head. This brave shall oft make thee to hide thy Lady, give me your hand; and, as we walk, To our own selves bend we our needful talk.

Exeunt TRO., CRES., and DIOMEDES [Trumpet within.

Par. Hark! Hector's trumpet. How have we spent this morning? The prince must think me tardy and remiss, That swore to ride before him to the field. Par. 'Tis Troilus' fault. Come, come, to field with him. Dio. Let us make ready straight. Æne. Yea, with a bridegroom's fresh alacrity Let us address to tend on Hector's heels: The glory of our Troy doth this day lie On his fair worth and single chivalry.

Exeunt.

Scene V .- The Grecian Camp. Lists set out.

Enter AJAX, armed; AGAMEMNON, ACHILLES, PATROCLUS, MENELAUS, ULYSSES, NESTOR and others.

Agam. Here art thou in appointment fresh and fair, With starting courage Anticipating time.

Give with thy trumpet a loud note to Troy, Thou dreadful Ajax; that the appalled air May pierce the head of the great combatant, And hale him hither.

Thou, trumpet, there's my purse, Now crack thy lungs and split thy brazen pipe: Blow, villain, till thy sphered bias cheek Out-swell the colic of puff'd Aquilon:

Come, stretch thy chest, and let thy eyes spout blood:

Thou blow'st for Hector. [Trumpel sounds. Ulyss. No trumpet answers. Achil. 'Tis but early day.

Agam. Is not you Diomed, with Calchas' daughter?

Ulyss. 'Tis he, I ken the manner of his gait; He rises on the toe: that spirit of his In aspiration lifts him from the earth.

Enter DIOMEDES, with CRESSIDA.

Agam. Is this the lady Cressid?

Dio. Even she? Agam. Most dearly welcome to the Greeks. sweet lady.

Nest. Our general doth salute you with a kiss. Uluss. Yet is the kindness but particular; 'Twere better she were kiss'd in general. Nest. And very courtly counsel: I'll begin.

So much for Nestor. Itair lady, Achil. I'll take that winter from your lips, Achilles bids you welcome.

Men. I had good argument for kissing once. Patr. But that's no argument for kissing

For thus popp'd Paris in his hardiment, And parted thus you and your argument. Ulyss. O deadly gall, and theme of all our scorns! For which we lose our heads to gild his horns.

Patr. The first was Menelaus' kiss; -this, mine; Patroclus kisses you.

Men. O. this is trim!

Patr. Paris and I kiss evermore for him. Men. I'll have my kiss, sir.—Lady, by your leave. Cres. In kissing, do you render or receive? Patr. Both take and give.

Cres. I'll make my match to live, The kiss you take is better than you give;

Therefore no kiss. Men. I'll give you boot, I'll give you three for one.

Cres. You're an odd man; give even or give Men. An odd man, lady? every man is odd. Cres. No, Paris is not; for, you know, 'tis true,

That you are odd, and he is even with you. Men. You fillip me o' the head.

No, I'll be sworn. Ulyss. It were no match, your nail against his horn.

May I, sweet lady, beg a kiss of you?

Cres. You may I do desire it. Ulyss.

Cres. Why, beg then, do. Ulyss. Why then, for Venus' sake, give me a kiss

When Helen is a maid again, and his. Cres. I am your debtor, claim it when 'tis Ulyss. Never's my day, and then a kiss of Dio. Lady, a word .- I'll bring you to your . father.

[DIOMEDES leads out CRESSIDA. Nest. A woman of quick sense.

- Fie, fie upon her! Ulyss.

As green as Ajax', and your brain so temper'd. You should not have the eminence of him. But be as Ajax.

Ajox. Shall I call Nest. Ay, my good son. Shall I call you father?

Be rul'd by him, Lord Ajax. Dio.

Uluss. There is no tarrying here; the hart Achilles Please it our great general Keeps thicket.

To call together all his state of war: Fresh kings are come to Troy. To-morrow We must with all our main of power stand fast: And here's a lord, -come knights from east to west,

And cull their flower, Ajax shall cope the best. Agom. Go we to council. Let Achilles sleep: Light boats sail swift, though greater hulks draw deep. [Exeunt.

ACT III.

SCENE I .- TROY. A Room in PRIAM'S Polace.

Enter Pandarus and o Servant.

Pon. Friend, you,—pray you, a word: do not you follow the young Lord Paris?
Serv. Ay, sir, when he goes before me.
Pon. You depend upon him, I mean?

Serv. Sir, I do depend upon the lord. Pon. You depend upon a noble gentleman, I must needs praise him.

Serv. The lord be praised!
Pon. You know me, do you not?
Serv. Faith, sir, superficially.
Pan. Friend, know me better; I am the Lord Pandarus.

Serv. I hope I shall know your honour better. Pan. I do desire it.

Serv. You are in the state of grace.

Music within. . Pon. Gracel not so, friend; honour and lordship are my titles.—What music is this?

Serv. I do but partly know, sir: it is music in parts.

Pon. Know you the musicians?

Serv. Wholly, sir. Pon. Who play they to?

Serv. To the hearers, sir. Pon. At whose pleasure, friend?

Serv. At mine, sir, and theirs that love music. Pon. Command, I mean, friend. Serv. Who shall I command, sir? Pan. Friend, we understand not one another:

I am too courtly, and thou art too cunning. At whose request do these men play?

Serv. That's to't, indeed, sir. Marry, sir, at the request of Paris my lord, who is there in person; with him, the mortal Venus, the heart-blood of beauty, love's invisible soul,-

Pan. Who, my cousin Cressida?

Serv. No, sir, Helen: could you not find out that by her attributes?

Pan. It should seem, fellow, that thou hast not seen the Lady Cressida. I come to speak with Paris from the Prince Troilus: I will make a complimental assault upon him, for my business seethes.

Serv. Sodden business! there's a stewed phrase indeed!

Enter Paris and Helen, ottended.

Pon. Fair be to you, my lord, and to all this fair companyl fair desires, in all fair measure, fairly guide them!-especially to you. fair queen! fair thoughts be your fair pillowf

Helen. Dear lord, you are full of fair words. Pon. You speak your fair pleasure, sweet -Fair prince, here is good broken music.

queen.—Fair prince, here is good broken music.

Por. You have broke it, cousin: and by my life, you shall make it whole again; you shall piece it out with a piece of your performance. Nell, he is full of harmony.

Pan. Truly, lady, no.

Helen. O, sir,-

Pan. Rude, in sooth; in good sooth, very

Por. Well said, my lord! well, you say so in Pan. I have business to my lord, dear queen. My lord, will you vouchsafe me a word?

Helen. Nay, this shall not hedge us out:

we'll hear you sing, certainly.

Pan. Well, sweet queen, you are pleasant with me.—But, marry, thus, my lord,—My dear lord, and most esteemed friend, your brother Troilus,— Helen. My Lord Pandarus; honey-sweet lord.-

Pon. Go to, sweet queen, go to:-commends himself most affectionately to you,-

Helen. You shall not bob us out of our melody: if you do. our melancholy upon your head! Pon. Sweet queen, sweet queen; that's a sweet queen, i' faith.

Helen. And to make a sweet lady sad is a sour offence. Pon. Nay, that shall not serve your turn; that shall it not, in truth, la. Nay, I care not for such words; no, no.—And, my lord, he desires you that, if the king call for him at supper, you will make his excuse.

Helen. My Lord Pandarus,-Pan. What says my sweet queen,-my very very sweet queen?

Par. What exploit's in hand? where sups he to-night?

Helen. Nay, but, my lord,-

Pan. What says my sweet queen?—My cousin will fall out with you. You must not know where he sups.

Por. I'll lay my life, with my disposer Cressida.

Pan. No, no, no such matter; you are wide:

come, your disposer is sick.

Par. Well, I'll make excuse

Pon. Ay, good my lord. Why should you say Cressida? no, your poor disposer's sick. Por. I spy.

Pan. You spy! what do you spy?-Come, give me an instrument .- Now, sweet queen.

Helen. Why, this is kindly done. Pon. My niece is horribly in love with a thing you have, sweet queen. Helen. She shall have it, my lord, if it be not my Lord Paris. Pon. He! no, she'll none of him; they two are twain. Helen. Falling in, after falling out, may make them three.

Hect. The worthiest of them tell me name by name;

But for Achilles, mine own searching eyes Shall find him by his large and portly size.

Agam. Worthy of arms! as welcome as to one That would be rid of such an enemy; But that's no welcome: understand more clear, What's past and what's to come is strew'd with husks And formless ruin of oblivion; But in this extant moment, faith and troth, Strain'd purely from all hollow bias-drawing,

Bids thee, with most divine integrity, From heart of very heart, great Hector, welcome.

Hect. I thank thee, most imperious Aga-memnon. Ito you. Agam. My well-fam'd lord of Troy, no less To TROILUS.

Men. Let me confirm my princely brother's greeting;

You brace of warlike brothers, welcome hither. Hect. Who must we answer?

Æne. The noble Menelaus. Hect. O you, my lord? by Mars his gauntlet, thanks! Mock not, that I affect the untraded oath; Your quondam wife swears still by Venus' glove: She's well, but bade me not commend her to Itheme.

Men. Name her not now, sir; she's a deadly Hect. O, pardon; I offend. loft, Nest. I have, thou gallant Trojan, seen thee

Labouring for destiny, make cruel way Through ranks of Greekish youth; and I have seen thee,

As hot as Perseus, spur thy Phrygian steed, Despising many forfeits and subduements, When thou hast hung thy advanced sword i' the air.

Not letting it decline on the declin'd, That I have said to some my standers-by, Lo, Jupiter is yander, dealing life! And I have seen thee pause, and take thy breath, When that a ring of Greeks have hemm'd thee Like an Olympian wrestling: this have I seen; But this thy countenance, still lock'd in steel, I never saw till now. I knew thy grandsire, And once fought with him: he was a soldier good; But, by great Mars, the captain of us all, Never like thee. Let an old man embrace thee;

And, worthy warrior, welcome to our tents.

Ene. 'Tis the old Nestor.

Hect. Let me embrace thee, good old chronicle, That hast so long walk'd hand in hand with Most reverend Nestor, I am glad to clasp thee. Nest. I would my arms could match thee in contention As they contend with thee in courtesy.

Hect. I would they could. Nest. Hal morrow: By this white beard, I'd fight with thee to-Well, welcome, welcome! I have seen the time. Ulyss. I wonder now how yonder city stands, When we have here her base and pillar by us. The Grecians' cause.

Hect. Iknow your favour, Lord Ulysses, well. Ah, sir, there's many a Greek and Trojan dead, Since first I saw yourself and Diomed In Ilion, on your Greekish embassy. Jensue:

Ulyss. Sir, I foretold you then what would My prophecy is but half his journey yet; For yonder walls, that pertly front your town, Youd towers, whose wanton tops do buss the clouds.

Must kiss their own feet.

Hect. I must not believe you: There they stand yet; and modestly I think The fall of every Phrygian stone will cost A drop of Grecian blood: the end crowns all: And that old common arbitrator, time, Will one day end it.

Uluss. So to him we leave it. Most gentle and most valiant Hector, welcome: After the general, I beseech you next To feast with me, and see me at my tent.

Achil. I shall forestall thee, Lord Ulysses, thou!-

Now, Hector, I have fed mine eyes on thee; I have with exact view perus'd thee, Hector, And quoted joint by joint.

Is this Achilles? Hect Achil. I am Achilles.

[thee. Hect. Stand fair, I pray thee: let me look on Achil. Behold thy fill.

Hect. Nay, I have done already. Achil. Thou art too brief: I will the second

As I would buy thee, view thee limb by limb. Hect. O. like a book of sport thou'lt read me o'er:

But there's more in me than thou understand'st-Why dost thou so oppress me with thine eye? Achil. Tell me, you heavens, in which part of his body Shall I destroy him? whither there, or there, or That I may give the local wound a name, And make distinct the very breach whereout Hector's great spirit flew: answer me, heavens! Hect. It would discredit the bless'd gods.

proud man, To answer such a question: stand again: Think'st thou to catch my life so pleasantly. As to prenominate in nice conjecture

Where thou wilt hit me dead? Achil. I tell thee, yea.

Hect. Wert thou an oracle to tell me so, I'd not believe thee. Henceforth guard thee well; For I'll not kill thee there, nor there; nor there; But, by the forge that stithied Mars his helm, I'll kill thee everywhere, yea, o'er and o'er .-You wisest Grecians, pardon me this brag, His insolence draws folly from my lips; But I'll endeavour deeds to match these words, Or may I never,

Do not chafe thee, cousin:-Ajax. And you, Achilles, let these threats alone, Till accident or purpose bring you to't: You may have every day enough of Hector, If you have stomach; the general state, I fear, Can scarce entreat you to be odd with him. Hect. I pray you, let us see you in the field:

We have had pelting wars since you refus'd interchangeably-Come in, come in: I'll go get a fire. Exit.

Cres. Will you walk in, my lord?

me thus! Cres. Wished, my lord!-The gods grant,-

O my lord!

Tro. What should they grant? what makes this pretty abruption? What too curious dreg espies my sweet lady in the fountain of our love? Cres. More dregs than water, if my fears have eyes. Tro. Fears make devils of cherubims; they never see truly.

Cres. Blind fear, that seeing reason leads, finds safer footing than blind reason stumbling without fear: to fear the worst oft cures the Worse.

Tro. O, let my lady apprehend no fear: in all Cupid's pageant there is presented no monster.

Cres. Nor nothing monstrous neither?

Tro. Nothing, but our undertakings; when we vow to weep seas, live in fire, eat rocks, tame tigers; thinking it harder for our mistress to devise imposition enough than for us to undergo any difficulty imposed. This is the monstruosity in love, lady,—that the will is infinite, and the execution confined; that the This is the desire is houndless, and the act a slave to limit.

Cres. They say, all lovers swear more performance than they are able, and yet reserve an ability that they never perform; vowing more than the perfection of ten, and discharging less than the tenth part of one. They that have the voice of lions and the act of hares, are they not monsters?

Tro. Are they such? such are not we: praise us as we are tasted, allow us as we prove; our head shall go bare till merit crown it: no perfection in reversion shall have a praise in present: we will not name desert hefore his birth; and, being born, his addirion shall he humble. Few words to fair faith: Troilus shall he such to Cressid as what envy can say worst shall he a mock for his truth; and what truth can speak truest not truer than Troilus.

Cres. Will you walk in, my lord?

Re-enter PANDARUS.

Pan. What, hlushing still? have you not done talking yet?

Cres. Well, uncle, what folly I commit, I dedicate to you.

Pan. I thank you for that: if my lord get a hoy of you, you'll give him me. Be true to my lord: if he flinch, chide me for it.

Tro. You know now your hostages; your uncle's word and my firm faith.

Pan. Nay, I'll give my word for her too: our kindred, though they he long ere they are wooed, they are constant being won: they are hurs, I can tell you; they'll stick where they are thrown.

Cres. Boldness comes to me now, and brings me heart:-

Prince Troilus, I have lov'd you night and day

For many weary months. Tro. Why was my Cressid, then, so hard to win?.

Cres. Hard to seem won; but I was won, my lord

With the first glance that ever-Pardon me,-Tro. O Cressida, how often have I wished If I confess much, you will play the tyrant. I love you now; but not, till now, so much But I might master it: -in faith, I lie; My thoughts were like unbridl'd children, grown Too headstrong for their mother: -- see, we fools! Why have I blabb'd? who shall be true to us, When we are so unsecret to ourselves?-But, though I lov'd you well, I woo'd you not; And yet, good faith, I wish'd myself a man,

Or that we women had men's privilege Of speaking first. Sweet, bid me hold my tongue;

For, in this rapture, I shall surely speak The thing I shall repent. See, see, your silence, Cunning in dumbness, from my weakness draws My very soul of conscience!-Stop my mouth.

Tro. And shall, albeit sweet music issues thence.

Pan. Pretty, i' faith.

Cres. My lord, I do beseech you, pardon me; 'Twas not my purpose thus to beg a kiss: I am asham'd;—O heavens! what have I done? For this time will I take my leave, my lord.

Tro. Your leave, sweet Cressid!

Pan. Leave! an you take leave till to-morrow morning,—

Cres. Pray you, content you. Tro. What offends you, lady? Cres. Sir, mine own company.

You cannot shun . Tro.

Yourself.

Cres. Let me go and try: I have a kind of self resides with you: But an unkind self, that itself will leave To be another's fool. I would be gone:-Where is my wit? I know not what I speak.

Tro. Well know they what they speak that speak so wisely.

Cres. Perchance, my lord. I show more craft than love;

And fell so roundly to a large confession, To angle for your thoughts: hut you are wise; Or else you love not; for to he wise and love Exceeds man's might; that dwells with gods ahove.

Tro. Othat I thought it could be in a woman,-As if it can, I will presume in you,-To feed for aye her lamp and flames of love; To keep her constancy in plight and youth, Outliving heauty's outward, with a mind That doth renew swifter than blood decays! Or, that persuasion could but thus convince me,-That my integrity and truth to you Might he affronted with the match and weight Of such a winnow'd purity in love; How were I then uplifted! hut, alas! I am as true as truth's simplicity, And simpler than the infancy of truth.

Cres. In that I'll war with you. Tro. O virtuous fight, When right with right wars who shall be most right! True swains in love shall, in the world to come, Approve their truths by Troilus: when their rhymes,

Full of protest, of oath, and hig compare,

Hect. Good-night, sweet Lord Menelaus. Ther. Sweet draught: sweet, quoth 'al sweet sink, sweet sewer.

Achil. Good-night. [or tarry. And welcome, both at once, to those that go Agam. Good-night.

[Exeunt AGAM. and MEN.
Achil. Old Nestor tarries; and you too,
Diomed,

Keep Hector company an hour or two.

Dio. I cannot, lord; I have important business, [Hector.

The tide whereof is now.—Good-night, great

Hect. Give me your hand. [tent.

Ulyss. Follow his torch; he goes to Calchas'
I'll keep you company. [Aside to TROILUS.

Tro. Sweet sir, you honour me.

Hect. And so good-night.

[Exit Dio.; ULYSS. and Tro. following.
Achil. Come. come. enter my tent.

Achiil. Come, come, enter my tent.
[Exeunt ACHIL., HECT., AJAX, nnd NEST. Ther. That same Diomed's a false-hearted rogue, a most unjust knave; I will no more trust him when he leers than I will a serpent when he hisses: he will spend his mouth and promise, like Brabbler the hound; but when he performs astronomers foretell it; it is prodigious, there will come some change; the sun borrows of the moon when Diomed keeps his word. I will rather leave to see Hector than not to dog him: they say he keeps a Trojan drab, and uses the traitor Calchas' tent: I'll after.—Nothing but lechery! all incontinent varlets! [Exil.

Scene II.—The Grecian Camp. Before Calchas' Tent.

Enter DIOMEDES.

Dio. What, are you up here, ho? speak.
Cal. [Within.] Who calls?
Dio. Diomed.—Calchas, I think.—Where's your daughter?
Cal. [Within.] She comes to you.

Enter TROILUS and ULYSSES, at n distance;

Ulyss. Stand where the torch may not discover us.

Enter CRESSIDA.

Tro. Cressid comes forth to him.

Dio. How now, my charge!

Cres. Now, my sweet guardianl—Hark, a word with you. [Whispers.]

Tro. Yea, so familiar!

Ulyss. She will sing any man at first sight.

Ther. And any man may sing her, if he can take her cliff; she's noted.

Dio. Will you remember?

Cres. Remember? yes.

Dio. Nay, but do, then;
And let your mind be coupled with your words.

Tro. What should she remember?

Ulyss. List! [to folly Greek, tempt meno more

Cres. Sweet honey Greek, tempt me no more Ther. Rogueryl Dio. Nay, then,— Crec. I'll tell you what,—

Dio. Pho! pho! come, tell a pin: you are forsworn. have me do? Cres. In faith, I cannot: what would you Ther. A juggling trick, to be secretly open. Dio. What did you swear you would bestow on me?

Cres. I prythee, do not hold me to mine oath:
Bid me do anything but that, sweet Greek.
Dio. Good-night.

Tro. Hold, patience!
Ulyss. How now, Trojan!

Cres. Diomed,— Dio. No, no, good-night: I'll be your fool no more.

Tro. Thy better must.

Cres. Hark! one word in your ezr.
Tro. O plague and madness! [I pray you,
Ulyss. You are mov'd, prince; let us depart.
Lest your displeasure should enlarge itself.
To wrathful terms: this place is dangerous;
The time sight deadly. I have not have

The time right deadly; I beseech you, go.

Tro. Behold, I pray you!

Ulyss. Nay, good my lord, go off:

You flow to great destruction; come, my lord.

Tro. I pray thee, stay.

Ulyss. You have not patience; come:
Tro. I pray you, stay; by hell and all hell's torments,

I will not speak a word.

Dio. And so, good-night.
Cres. Nay, but you part in anger.
Tro. Doth that grieve thee?

O wither'd truth!

Ulyss. Why, how now, lord?

Tro. By Jove,
I will be patient.

Cros. Guardian!—why, Greek!
Dio. Pho, pho! adieu; you palter.
Cros. In faith, 1 do not: come hither once again. [will you go?

Ulyss. You shake, my lord, at something:
You will break out.

Tro. She strokes his cheek!

Ulyss. Come, come.

Tro. Nay, stay; by Jove, I will not speak a

word:
There is between my will and all offences
A guard of patience:—stay a little while

A guard of patience:—stay a little while.

Ther. How the devil luxury, with his fat rump and potato finger, tickles these together!

Fry, lechery, fry!

Dio. But will you, then?

Cres. In faith, I will, la; never trust me else.

Dio. Give me some token for the surety of it.

Cres. I'll fetch you one. [Exil. Ulyss. You have sworn patience.

Tro. Fear me not, sweet lord:

I will not be myself, nor have cognition
Of what I feel: I am all patience.

Re-enter CRESSIDA.

Ther. Now the pledge; now, now, now!
Cres. Here, Diomed, keep this sleeve.
Tro. O, beauty! where's thy faith?
Ulyss.
Tro. I will be patient; outward!y I will.
Cres. You look upon that sleeve; behold it
well.—
He lov'd me—O false wench!—Give't me again.

Must fall out with men too. What the declin'd While pride is fasting in his wantonness!

He shall as soon read in the eyes of others As feel on his own fall: for men, like butterflies, Show not their mealy wings but to the summer; And not a man, for being simply man, Hath any honour; but honour for those honours That are without him, as place, riches, and favour,

Prizes of accident as oft as merit:
Which when they fall, as being slippery standers,
The love that lean'd on them as slippery too,
Do one pluck down another, and together
Die in the fall. But 'tis not so with me:
Fortune and I are friends; I do enjoy
At ample point all that I did possess [out
Save these men's looks; who do, methinks, find Something not worth in me such rich beholding
As they have often given. Here is Ulysses:
I'll interrupt his reading.—
How now, Ulysses!

Ulyss. Now, great Thetis' son! Achil. What are you reading?

Ulyss. A strange fellow here Writes me, That man,—how dearly ever parted, How much in having, or without or in,—Cannot make boast to have that which he hath, Nor feels not what he owes, but by reflection; As when his virtues shining upon others Heat them, and they retort that heat again To the first giver.

Achil. This is not strange, Ulysses. The beauty that is borne here in the face the bearer knows not, hut commends itself to others' eyes: nor doth the eye itself,—
That most pure spirit of sense,—behold itself, Not going from itself; but eye to eye oppos'd: Salutes each other with each other's form:
For speculation turns not to itself
Till it hath travell'd, and is mirror'd there
Where it may see itself. This is not strange at all.

Ulyss. I do not strain at the position,—
It is familiar,—but at the author's drift;
Who, in his circumstance, expressly proves
That no man is the lord of anything,—
Though in and of him there be much consisting,— Till he communicates his parts to others;
Nor doth he of himself know them for aught
Till he behold them form'd in the applause
Where they're extended; who, like an arch, reverberates

The voice again; or, like a gate of steel Fronting the sun, receives and renders back His figure and his heat. I was much rapt in this;

And apprehended here immediately
The unknown Ajax.

Heavens, what a man is there! a very horse; That has he knows not what. Nature, what things there are

Most abject in regard and dear in use!
What things again most dear in the esteem
And poor in worth! Now shall we see to-morrow
An act that very chance doth throw upon him.
Ajax renown'd. O heavens, what some men do,
While some men leave to do!
How some men creep in skittish fortune's hall,
Whiles others play the idiots in her eyes!
How one man eats into another's pride,

While pride is fasting in his wantonness!
To see these Grecian lords!—why, even already
They clap the lubber Ajax on the shoulder
As if his foot were on brave Hector's breast,
And great Troy shrinking.

And great Troy shrinking.

Achil. I do believe it; for they pass'd by me
As misers do by beggars,—neither gave to me
Good word nor look. What, are my deeds forgot?

Ulyss Time hath, my lord, a wallet at his Wherein he puts alms for oblivion, A great-siz'd monster of ingratitudes:
Those scraps are good deeds past: which are devour'd

As fast as they are made, forgot as soon As done: perseverance, dear my lord, Keeps honour bright: to have done is to hang Quite out of fashion, like a rusty mail [way; In monumental mockery. Take the instant For honour travels in a strait so narrow [path; Where one but goes abreast: keep, then, the For emulation hath a thousand sons That one by one pursue: if you give way,

Or hedge aside from the direct forthright, Like to an enter'd tide they all rush by. And leave you hinomost; Or, like a gallent horse fall'n in first rank,

Lie there for pavement to the abject rear,
O'er-run and trampl'd on: then what they do in present,
Though less than yours in past, must o'ertop
For time is like a fashionable bost.
For time is like a fashionable bost.

For time is like a fashionable host, [hand; That slightly shakes his parting guest by the And with his arms out-stretch'd, as he would fly.

Grasps in the comer: welcome ever smiles, And farewell goes out sighing. O, let not virtue seek Remuneration for the thing it was; For heauty, wit, High birth, vigour of bone, desert in service,

Love, friendship, charity, are subjects all To envious and calumniating time. [kin,—One touch of nature makes the whole world That all, with one consent, praise new-born gawds. [past:

Though they are made and moulded of things. And give to dust that is a little gilt leye More laud that gilt o'er-dusted. The present Praises the present object:

Then marvel not, thou great and complete man, That all the Greeks begin to worship Ajax; Since things in motion sooner catch the eye Than what not sturs. The cry went once on

And still it might; and yet it may again,

thee.

And drave great blars to faction.

Achil. Of this my privacy

I have strong reasons.

Ulyss.

But 'gainst your privacy
The reasons are more potent and heroical:
'Tis known, Achilles, that you are in love
With one of Priam's daughters.

Achil. Ha! known!
Ulyss. Is that a wonder?

Enter ENEAS.

Enc. I have been seeking you this hour, my lord:

Hector, by this, is arming him in Troy;
Ajax, your guard, stays to conduct you home.

Tro. Have with you, prince.—My courteous lord, adieu.— Farewell, revolted fairl—and, Diomed, Stand fast, and wear a castle on thy head!

Ulyss. I'll bring you to the gates. Tro. Accept distracted thanks.

Ther. Would I could meet that rogue Diomed! I would croak like a raven; I would bode, I would bode. Patroclus will give me anything for the intelligence of this whore: the parrot will not do more for an almond than he for a commodious drab. Lechery, lechery; still wars and lechery; nothing else holds fashion: a burning devil take them! [Exit.

Scene III .- Troy. Before PRIAM'S Palace.

Enter HECTOR and ANDROMACHE.

And. When was my lord so much ungently temper'd
To stop his ears against admonishment?

Unarm, unarm, and do not fight to-day.

Hect. You train me to offend you; get you in:

By all the everlasting gods, I'll go!

And. My dreams will, sure, prove ominous

And. My dreams will, sure, prove ominous to the day.

Hect. No more, I say.

Enter CASSANDRA.

Cas. Where is my brother Hector?

And. Here, sister; arm'd, and bloody in intent.

Consort with me in loud and dear petition,
Pursue we him on knees; for I have dream'd
Of bloody turbulence, and this whole night Hath nothing been but shapes and forms of slaughter.

Cas. O, 'tis true.

Hect. Hol bid my trumpet sound!
Cas. No notes of sally, for the heavens, sweet brother. [me swear.

Hect. Begone, I say: the gods have heard Cas. The gods are deaf to hot and peevish yows:

They are polluted offerings, more abhorr'd Than spotted livers in the sacrifice.

And. O, be persuaded! do not count it holy To hurt by being just: it is as lawful, For we would give much, to use violent thefts, And rob in the behalf of charity. [vows;

Cas. It is the purpose that makes strong the But vows to every purpose must not hold:

Unarm, sweet Hector.

Hect. Hold you still, I say; Mine honour keeps the weather of my fate: Life every man holds dear; but the dear man Holds honour far more precious dear than life.

Enter TROILUS.

How now, young man! mean'st thou to fight to-day?

And. Cassandra, call my father to persuade. [Exil CASSANDRA

Hect. No, faith, young Troilus; doff thy harness, youth;

I am to-day i'the vein of chivairy: Let grow thy sinews till their knots be strong, And tempt not yet the brushes of the war. Unarm thee, go; and doubt thou not, brave boy.

I'll stand to-day for thee, and me, and Troy,
Tro. Brother, you have a vice of mercy in you,
Which better fits a lim then a more

Which better fits a lion than a man.

Hect. What vice is that, good Troilus? chide me for it.

[fall.]

Too. When many times the captive Grecians
Even in the fan and wind of your fair sword,
You bid them rise and live.

Heci. O, 'tis fair play.

Tro. Fool's play, by Heaven, Hector.

Hect. How now! how now!

Tro. For the love of all the gods,
Let's leave the hermit pity with our mothers;
And when we have our armours buckled on,
The venom'd vengeance ride upon our swords;
Spur them to ruthful work, rein them from ruth.

Hect. Fie, savage, fie!

Tro. Hector, then 'tis wars. Hect. Troilus, I would not have you fight to-day.

Tro. Who should withhold me?

Not fate, obedience, nor the hand of Mars

Beckoning with fiery truncheon my retire;

Not Priamus and Hecuba on knees,

Their eyes o'ergalled with recourse of tears;

Nor you, my brother, with your true sword drawn.

Oppos'd to hinder me, should stop my way, But by my ruin.

Re-enter Cassandra, with Priam.

Cas. Lay hold upon him, Priam, hold him fast: He is thy crutch; now if thou lose thy stay, Thou on him leaning and all Troy on thee, Fall all together

Fall all together.

Pri. Come, Hector, come, go back:
Thy wife hath dream'd; thy mother hath had visions; Cassandra doth foresee; and I myself Am like a prophet suddenly enrapt, To tell thee that this day is ominous: Therefore, come back.

Hect.
Aeneas is a-field;
And I do stand engag'd to many Greeks,
Even in the faith of valour, to appear
This morning to them.

Pri. Ay, but thou shalt not go.

Hect. I must not break my faith.
You know me dutiful; therefore, dear sir,
Let me not shame respect; but give me leave
To take that course by your consent and voice
Which you do here forbid me, royal Priam.

Cas. O Priam, yield not to him!
And.
Do not, dear father.
Hect. Andromache, I am offended with you:

Upon the love you bear me, get you in.

[Exit. ANDROMACHE.

Tro. This foolish, dreaming, superstitious girl

Makes all these bodements.

Cas.
O, farewell, dear Hector!
Look, how thou diest! look, how thy eye turns pale!

ACT IV.

SCENE I .- TROY. A Street

Enter, at one side, ENEAS, and Servant with a torch; at the other, PARIS, DEIPHOBUS, ANTENOR, DIOMEDES, and others, with torches.

Par. See, hol who's that there?

'Tis the Lord Æneas. Æne. Is the prince there in person?-Had I so good occasion to lie long [business As you, Prince Paris, nothing but heavenly

Should roh my hed-mate of my company. Dio. That's my mind too.—Good-morrow, Lord Æneas. [hand,—

Par. A valiant Greek, Eneas,-take his Witness the process of your speech, wherein You told how Diomed, a whole week hy days, Did haunt you in the field.

Æne. Health to you, valiant sir, During all question of the gentle fruce; But when I meet you arm'd, as black defiance As heart can think or courage execute.

Dio. The one and other Diomed embraces. Our bloods are now in calm; and, so long.

health:

But when contention and occasion meet, By Jove, I'll play the hunter for thy life With all my force, pursuit, and policy.

Ene. And thou shalt hunt a lion, that will Iness,

With his face backward.—In humane gentle-Welcome to Troyl now, by Anchises' life, Welcome indeed! By Venus' hand I swear No man alive can love, in such a sort, The thing he means to kill, more excellently.

Dio. We sympathise.—Jove, let Eneas live If to my sword his fate be not the glory, A thousand complete courses of the sunl But, in mine emulous honour, let him die, With every joint a wound, and that to-morrow!

Enc. We know each other well.

Dio. We do; and long to know each other worse.

Par. This is the most despiteful gentle greet-

The noblest hateful love, that e'er I heard of.-

What business, lord, so early? Enc. I was sent for to the king; but why, (this Greek I know not.

Par. His purpose meets you: 'twas to hring To Calchas' house; and there to render him, For the enfreed Antenor, the fair Cressid. Let's have your company; or, if you please, Haste there before us: I constantly do think, Or, rather, call my thought a certain knowledge,— My hrother Troilus lodges there to-night: Rouse him, and give him note of our approach, With the whole quality wherefore: I fear

We shall be much unwelcome. That I assure you: Troilus had rather Troy were home to Greece

Than Cressid borne from Troy. There is no help; Par. The bitter disposition of the time

Will have it so. On, lord; we'll follow you.

Ene. Good-morrow, all.

Par. And tell me, noble Diomed,-faith. tell me true.

Even in the soul of sound good-fellowship,-Who, in your thoughts, merits fair Helen hest, Myself or Menelaus?

Dio. Both alike:

He merits well to have her, that doth seek her,— Not making any scruple of her soilure, With such a hell of pain and world of charge; And you as well to keep her, that defend her,-Not palating the taste of her dishonour, With such a costly loss of wealth and friends: He, like a puling cuckold, would drink no The lees and dregs of a flat tamed piece; You, like a lecher, out of whorish loins Are pleas'd to breed out your inheritors: Both merits pois'd, each weighs nor less nor more:

But he as he, each heavier for a whore. Par. You are too hitter to your countrywoman.

Dio. She's hitter to her country. Hear me, Paris:-

For every false drop in her bawdy veins A Grecian's life hath sunk; for every scruple Of her contaminated carrion weight speak. Trojan hath been slain: since she could She hath not given so many good words hreath As for her Greeks and Trojans suffer'd death. Par. Fair Diomed, you do as chapmen do, Dispraise the thing that you desire to buy: But we in silence hold this virtue well.—

We'll not commend what we intend to sell. Here lies our way. Exeunt.

Scene II .- Troy. Court of Pandarus' House.

Enter TROILUS and CRESSIDA.

Tro. Dear, trouble not yourself: the morn is cold. luncle down; Cres. Then, sweet my lord, I'll call mine

He shall unholt the gatas. Trouble him not; To bed, to bed: sleep kill those pretty eyes, And give as soft attachment to thy senses

As infants empty of all thoughtl Good-morrow, then.

Cres. Tro. I pr'ythee now, to bed. Are you Cres. Are you aweary of tro. O Cressidal but that the hnsy day, Are you aweary of me?

Wak'd hy the lark, hath rous'd the ribald crows, And dreaming night will hide our joys no longer I would not from thee.

Cres. Night hath been too brief. Tro. Beshrew the witch! with venemous wights she stays

As tedionsly as hell; hut flies the grasps of love With wings more momentary-swift than thought. You will catch cold, and curse me.

Pr'ythee, tarry;-

You men will never tarry.— O foolish Cressid!—I might have still held off, And then you would have tarried. Hark!

there's one up. [here? Pan. [Within.] What, 's all the doors open [mocking: Tro. It is your uncle. Cres. A pestilence on himl now will he be

[Exit, with Servant. | I shall have such a life!-

Exeunt.

Enter ULYSSES.

Ulyss. O, courage, courage, princes! great

Is arming, weeping, cursing, vowing vengeance:
Patroclus' wounds have rous'd his drowsy blood,

Together with his mangl'd Myrmidons, That noiseless, handless, hack'd and chipp'd, come to him,

Crying on Hector. Ajax hath lost a friend, And foams at mouth, and he is arm'd and at it, Roaring for Troilus; who hath done to-day Mad and fantastic execution; Engaging and redeeming of himself With such a careless force and forceless care As if that luck, in very spite of cunning,

Enter AJAX.

Bade him win all.

Ajax. Troilus! thou coward Troilus! [Exit. Dio. Ay, there, there. Nest. So, so, we draw together.

Enter ACHILLES.

Achil. Where is this Hector? Come, come, thou boy-queller, show thy face; Know what it is to meet Achilles angry:—Hector! where's Hector? I will none but Hector. [Exeunt.

Scene VI.—Another Part of the Plains.

Enter AJAX.

Ajax. Troilus, thou coward Troilus, show thy head!

Enter DIOMEDES.

Dio. Troilus, I say! where's Troilus?

Ajax. What wouldst thou?

Dio. I would correct him.

Ajax. Were I the general, thou shouldst have my office [Troilus! Ere that correction.—Troilus, I say! what,

Enter TROILUS.

Tro. O traitor Diomed!—turn thy false face, thou traitor,

And pay thy life thou owest me for my horse!

Dio. Ha! art thou there?

Ajax. I'll fight with him alone: stand, Diomed.

Dio. He is my prize. I will not look upon.

Tro. Come, both, you cogging Greeks; have at you both.

[Execut fighting.

Enter HECTOR.

Hect. Yea, Troilus? O, well fought, my youngest brother!

Enter ACHILLES.

Achil. Now do I see thee, hal have at thee, Hector!

Hector!

Hect. Pause, if thou wilt. [Trojan:
Achil. I do disdain thy courtesy, proud
Be happy that my arms are out of use:

My rest and negligence befriend thee now, But thou anon shalt hear of me again;

Till when, go seek thy fortune. [Exit. Hect. Fare thet well: I would have been much more a fresher man Had I expected thee.—How now, my brother!

Re-enter TROILUS.

To. Ajax hath ta'en Aeneas: shall it be?
No, by the flame of yonder glorious heaven,
He shall not carry him; I'll be ta'en too,
Or bring him off:—fate, hear me what I say!
I reck not though I end my life to-day. [Exit.

Enter one in sumptuous armour.

Hect. Stand, stand, thou Greek; thou art a goodly mark:—
No? wilt thou not?—I like thy armour well;
Pil frush it, and unlock the rivets all. [abide?
But I'll be master of it.—Wilt thou not, beast,
Why then, fly on, I'll hunt thee for thy hide.

SCENE VII.—Another Part of the Plains.

Enter Achilles, with Myrmidons.

Achil. Come here about me, you my Myrmidons;

Mark what I say.—Attend me where I wheel: Strike not a stroke, but keep yourselves in breath:

And when I have the bloody Hector found, Empale him with your weapons round about; In fellest manner execute your aims. Follow me, sirs, and my proceedings eye:—
It is decreed Hector the great must die.

[Exeunt.

Enter Menelaus and Paris, fighting; then Thersites.

Ther. The cuckoid and the cuckoid-maker are at it. Now, bulli now, dog! 'Loo, Paris, 'loo! now my double-henned sparrow! 'loo, Paris, 'loo! The bull has the game:-'ware horns, hol [Exeunt Paris and Menelaus.

Enter MARGARELON.

Mar. Turn, slave, and fight. Ther. What art thou? Mar. A bastard son of Priam's.

Ther. I am a bastard too; I love bastards:
I am a bastard begot, bastard instructed,
bastard in mind, bastard in valour, in everything illegitimate. One bear will not bite another, and wherefore should one bastard? Take heed, the quarrel's most ominous to us: if the son of a whore fight for a whore he tempts judgment:
farewell, bastard.

Exit.

Mar. The devil take thee, coward! [Exit.

Scene VIII.—Another Part of the Plains.

Enter HECTOR.

Hect. Most putrified core, so fair without, Thy goodly armour thus hath cost thy life.\ Now is my day's work done: I'll take good breath:

Par. I know what 'tis to love: And would, as I shall pity, I could help!-

Please you walk in, my lords. Exeunt. Scene IV.—Troy. A Ro House. A Room in PANDARUS'

Enter PANDARUS and CRESSIDA.

Pan. Be moderate, be moderate. Cres. Why tell you me of moderation? The grief is fine, full, perfect, that I taste, And violenteth in a sense as strong As that which causeth it: how can I moderate If I could temporize with my affection, Or hrew it to a weak and colder palate, The like allayment could I give my grief: My love admits no qualifying dross; No more my grief, in such n precious loss. Pan. Here, here, here he comes.

Enter TROILUS.

Ah, sweet ducks!

Cres. O Troilus! Troilus! [Embracing him. Pan. What a pair of spectacles is here! Let me embrace too. O heart, as the goodly saying

O heart, heavy heart, Why sigh'st thou without breaking?

where he answers again.

Because thou canst not ease thy smart By silence nor by speaking.

There was nover a truer rhyme. Let us cast away nothing, for we may live to have need of such a verse: we see it, we see it.-How now, lambs! purity

Tro. Cressid, I lovo thee in so strain'd a That the bless'd gods,—as angry with my fancy, More hright in zeal than the devotion which Cold lips blow to their deities,—take thee from me. Cres. Have the gods envy? Pan. Ay, ay, ny, ay; 'tis too plain a case. Cres. And is it true that I must go from Troy?

Tro. A hateful truth. Cres.

Cres. What, and from Troilus too?
Tro. From Troy and Troilus. Cres. Is it possible?

Tro. And suddenly; where injury of chance Puts back leave-taking, justles roughly by All time of pause, rudely beguiles our lips Of all rejoindure, forcibly prevents Our lock'd embrasures, strangles our dear vows Even in the birth of our own lah'ring breath: We too, that with so many thousand sighs Did buy each other, must poorly sell ourselves With the rude hrevity and discharge of one. Injurious time now, with a robber's haste, Crams his rich thievery up, he knows not how: As many farewells as be stars in heaven, With distinct breath and consign'd kisses to them,

He fumbles up into a loose adieu; And scants us with a single famish'd kiss,

Distasted with the salt of hroken tears.

Aene. [Within.] My lord, is the lady ready?

Tro. Hark! you are call'd. Some say the Genius so Cries, Come! to him that instantly must die.-Bid them have patience; she shall come anon. Is-plain and true; there's all the reach of it.

Pan. Where are my tears? rain, to lay this wind, or my heart will be blown up hy the root?

Cres. I must, then, to the Grecians? Tro. No remedy. Cres. A woeful Cressid 'mongst the merry Greeksl When shall we see again?

Tro. Hear me, my love. Be thou hut true of heart,fis this? Cres. I truel how now! what wicked deem

Tro. Nay, we must use expostulation kindly, For it is parting from us: I speak not be thou true, as fearing thee;

For I will throw my glove to death himself That there's no maculation in thy heart: But be thou true, say I, to fashion in My sequent protestation; be thou true And I will see thee. dangers Cres. O, you shall be expos'd, my lord, to As infinite as imminent! hut I'll be true. Tro. And I'll grow friend with danger.

Wear this sleeve. Cres. And you this glove. When shall I see you?

Tro. I will corrupt the Grecian sentinels, To give thee nightly visitation. But yet he true.

Cres. O heavens!—be Tro. Hear why I speak it, love: O heavens!—be true, again! The Grecian youths are full of quality; They're loving, well compos'd, with gifts of nature flowing, And swelling o'er with arts and exercise: How novelty may move, and parts with person, Alas, a kind of godly jealousy,

Which, I heseech you, call a virtuous sin,-Makes me afeard. Cres.

O heavens! you love me not. Tro. Die I a villain, then! In this I do not call your faith in question So mainly as my merit; I cannot sing, Nor heel the high lavolt, nor sweeten talk, Nor play at subtle games; fair virtues all. To which the Grecians are most prompt and pregnant: But I can tell, that in each grace of these There lurks a still and dumb-discoursive devil That tempts most cunningly: but be not tempted.

Cres. Do you think I will? Tro. No.

But something may be done that we will not: And sometimes we are devils to ourselves, When we will tempt the frailty of our powers, Presuming on their changeful potency.

Aene. [Within.] Nay, good my lord,-Tro. Come, kiss; and let us part.

Par. [Within.] Brother Troilns!

Tro. Good brother, come you hither; And bring Aeneas and the Grecian with you. Cres. My lord, will you be true?

Tro. Who, I? alas, it is my vice, my fault: While others fish with craft for great opinion, I with great truth catch mere simplicity; Whilst some with cunning gild their copper crowns,

With truth and plainness I do wear mine hare. Fear not my truth: the moral of my wit

ACT I.

Scene I.—Athers. A Hall in Timon's House.

Lucius,

HORTENSIUS,

Two Servants of VARRO.

Enter Poet, Painter, Jeweller, Merchant, and others, at several doors.

Poet. Good-day, sir.

Pain.

I am glad you are well.

Poet. I have not seen you long: how goes the world?

Pain. It wears, sir, as it grows.

Poet.

Ay, that's well known:

Which manifold record not matches? See,
Magic of bounty! all these spirits thy power
Hath conjur'd to attend. I know the merchant.

Pain. Iknowthem both; the other's a jeweller.
Mer. O, 'tis a worthy lord!
Jew.
Nay, that's most fix'd.
Mer. A most incomparable man; breath'd, as it were,
To an untirable and continuate goodness:

Thieves, and Attendants.

Officers, Soldiers,

To an untirable and continuate goodless.

He passes.

Jew. I have a jewel here.

Mer. O. pray, let's see't: for the Lord Timon, sir? [that— Jew. If he will touch the estimate: but, for Poet. [Reciting to himself.] When we for recompense have praised the vile, It stains the glory in that happy verse

Which apply sings the good.

'Tis a good form.

Looking at the jewel.

There's language in her eye, her cheeks, her lip,

Nay, her foot speaks: her wanton spirits look out

At every joint and motive of her body.
O, these encounterers, so glib of tongue,
That give a coasting welcome ere it comes,
And wide unclasp the tables of their thoughts
To every ticklish reader! set them down
For sluttish spoils of opportunity,

And daughters of the game. [Trumpet within. -All. The Trojans' trumpet.

Agam. Yonder comes the troop.

Enter HECTOR, armed; ENEAS, TROILUS, and other Trojans, with Attendants.

Enc. Hail, all you state of Greecel what shall be done [purpose To him that victory commands? Or do you A victor shall be known? will you the knights Shall to the edge of all extremity Pursue each other: or shall be divided By any voice or order of the field? Hector bade ask.

Agam. Which way would Hector have it?
Anne. He cares not; he'll obey conditions.
Achil. 'Tis done like Hector; but securely done,

A little proudly, and great deal misprizing The knight oppos'd.

Ænc: If not Achilles, sir, What is your name?

Achil. If not Achilles, nothing.

Enc. Therefore Achilles. But, whate'er, know this:—

In the extremity of great and little Valour and pride excel themselves in Hector; The one almost as infinite as all, The other blank as nothing. Weigh him well, And that which looks like pride is courtesy. This A jax is half made of Hector's blood: In love whereof, half Hector stays at home; Half heart, half hand, half Hector comes to seek [Greek.

This blended knight, half Trojan and half Achil. A maiden battle then?—O, I perceive

you.

Re-enter DIOMEDES.

Agam. Here is Sir Diomed.—Go, gentle knight,

Stand by our Ajax; as you and Lord Eneas Consent upon the order of their fight So be it; either to the uttermost, Or else a breath: the combatants being kin Half stints their strife before their strokes berin.

[AJAX and HECTOR enter the lists.

Uluss. They are oppos'd already.

Agam. What Trojan is that same that looks so heavy? [kmight; Ulyss. The youngest son of Priam, a true Not yet mature, yet matchless: firm of word; Speaking in deeds, and deedless in his tongue; Not soon provok'd, nor, being provok'd, soon calm'd:

His heart and hand both open and both free; For what he has he gives, what thinks he shows;

Yet gives he not till judgment guide his bounty. Nor dignifies an impure thought with breath: Manly as Hector, but more oangerous; For Hector, in his blaze of wrath, subscribes To tender objects; but he, in heat of action, Is more vindicative than jealous love: They call him Troilus; and on him erect A second hope, as fairly built as Hector. Thus says Aeneas; one that knows the youth Even to his inches, and, with private soul, Did in great Hion thus translate him to me.

[Alarum. HECTOR and AJAX fight. Agam. They are in action.
Nest. Now, Ajax, hold thine own!

Tro. Hector, thou sleep'st;
Awake theel

Agam. His blows are well dispos'd:—there; Ajax!

Dio. You must no more. [Trumpets cease. Enc. Princes, enough, so please yon. Ajax. I am not warm yet, let us fight again. Dio. As Hector pleases.

Dio. As Hector pleases.

Hect. Why, then will I no more:—
Thou art, great lord, my father's sister's son,
A cousin-german to great Priam's seed;
The obligation of our blood forbids
A gory emulation 'twixt us twain;
Were thy commixtion Greek and Trojan so,
That thou could'st say This hond is Grecian all,
And this is Trojon; the sineus of this leg
All Greek, and this all Troy; my mother's blood
Runs in the dexter cheek, ond this sinister
Bounds-in my father's; by Jove multipotent, Thou shoulds not bear from me a Greekish member

Wherein my sword had not impressure made Of our rank feud: but the just gods gainsay That any drop thon borrow'dst from thy mother, My sacred aunt, should by my mortal sword Be drain'd! Let me embrace thee, Ajax: By him that thunders, thou hast lusty arms; Hector would have them fall upon him thus: Cousin, all honour to thee!

Ajax. I thank thee, Hector: Thou art too gentle and too free a man: I came to kill thee, cousin, and bear hence A great addition earned in thy death,

Hect. Not Neoptolemus so mirable,—
On whose bright crest Fame with her loud'st
Ores

Cries, This is he,—could promise to himself A thought of added honour torn from Hector.

Enc. There is expectance here from both the sides

What further you will do.

Hect. We'll answer it; The issue is embracement:—Ajax, farewell.

Ajax. If I might in entreaties find success,-As seld' I have the chance.—I would desire My famous cousin to our Grecian tents.

Dio. 'Tis Agamemnon's wish; and great Achilles

Doth long to see unarm'd the valiant Hector.

Hect. Aeneas, call my brother Troilus to me:
And signify this loving interview

To the expecters of our Trojan part; [cousin; Desire them home.—Give me thy hand, my I will go eat with thee, and see your knights.

Ajax. Great Agamemnon comes to meet us here.

That from my first have been inclin'd to thrift; And my estate deserves an heir more rais'd Than one which holds a trencher.

Tim. Well; what further? Old Ath. One only daughter have I, no kin else,

On whom I may confer what I have got: The maid is fair, o' the youngest for a bride. And I have bred her at my dearest cost This man of thine In qualities of the best. Attempts her love: I pr'ythee, noble lord, Join with me to forbid him her resort: Myself have spoke in vain.

Tim. The man is honest. Old Ath. Therefore he will be, Timon: His honesty rewards him in itself;

It must not bear my daughter.

Tim. Does she love him? Old Ath. She is young and apt: Our own precedent passions do instruct us

What levity's in youth.

Tim. [To Lucilius.] Love you the maid? Luc. Ay, my good lord; and she accepts of (missing, Old Ath. If in her marriage my consent be I call the gods to witness, I will choose

Mine heir from forth the beggars of the world, And dispossess her all.

Tim.How shall she be endow'd,

If she be mated with an equal husband? Old Ath. Three talents on the present; in future all. Tim. This gentleman of mine hath serv'd me To build his fortune I will strain a little, For 'tis a bond in men. Give him thy daughter: What you bestow, in him I'll counterpoise,

And make him weigh with her.

Most noble lord. Pawn me to this your honour, she is his.

Tim. My hand to thee; mine honour on my promise.

Luc. Humbly I thank your lordship: never That state or fortune fall unto my keeping Which is not ow'd to you!

[Exeunt Lucilius and Old Athenian. Poet. Vouchsafe my labour, and long live your lordship! anon:

Tim. I thank you; you shall hear from me Go not away.—What have you there, my friend? Pain. A piece of painting, which I do beseech

Your lordship to accept.

Painting is welcome. The painting is almost the natural man; For since dishonour traffics with man's nature, He is but outside: these pencil'd figures are Even such as they give out. I like your work; And you shall find I like it: wait attendance Till you hear further from me.

The gods preserve youl . Pain. Tim. Well fare you, gentleman: give me your hand:

We must needs dine together.—Sir, your jewel

Hath suffer'd under praise. Jew.

What, my lord! dispraise? Tim. A mere satiety of commendations, If I should pay you for't as 'tis extoll'd

It would unclew me quite. My lord, 'tis rated Jew.As those which sell would give. But you well a lord! know, Things of light value, differing in the owners, Are prized by their masters: believe't, dear lord. You mend the jewel by the wearing it.

general. Men. Good-night, my lord. I wonder men dare trust themselves with men: Methinks they should invite them without knives:

Good for their meat and safer for their lives. There's much example for't; the fellow that sits next him now, parts bread with him, pledges the breath of him in a divided draught, is the readiest man to kill him: 't has been prov'd. If I were a huge man I should fear to drink at meals,

Honest water, which ne'er left man i' the mire: This and my food are equals; there's no odds: Feasts are too proud to give thanks to the gods.

APEMANTUS' GRACE.

Immortal gods, I crave no pelf; I pray for no man but myself: Grant I may never prove so fond To trust man on his oath or bond; Or a harlot for her weeping, Or a dog that seems a-sleeping; Or a keeper with my freedom; Or my friends, if I should need 'em. enemies than a dinner of friends. Alcib. So they were bleeding-new, my lord, there's no meat like them; I could wish my best friend at such a feast. Apem. Would all those flatterers were thine enemies, then; that then thou might'st kill em, and bid me to 'em.

1 Lord. Might we but have that happiness, my lord, that you would once use our hearts, whereby we might express some part of our zeals, we should think ourselves forever perfect.

Tim. O, no doubt, my good friends, but the gods themselves have provided that I shall have much help from you: how had you been my friends else?why have you that charitable title from thousands, did not you chiefly belong to my heart? I have told more of you to myself than you can with modesty speak in your own behalf; and thus far I confirm you. O you gods, think, I what need we have any friends if we should ne'er have need of 'em? they were the most needless creatures living, should we ne'er have use for 'em; and would most resemble sweet instruments hung up in cases, that keep their sounds to themselves. Why, I have often wished myself poorer, that I might come nearer to you. We are born to do benefits: and what better or properer can we call our own than the riches of our friends?

O, what a precious comfort 'tis to have so

Cup. Hail to thee, worthy Timon;—and to all That of his bounties taste!—The five best senses

Acknowledge thee their patron; and come freely: To gratulate thy plenteous bosom: The ear, taste, touch, smell, pleas'd from thy table rise;

They only now come but to feast thine eyes. Tim. They are welcome all; let 'em have kind admittance. Music, make their welcome! Exit CUPID. 1 Lord. You see, my lord, how ample you're belov'd.

Music. Re-enter CUPID, with a mask of Ladies as Amazons, with lutes in their hands, dancing and playing.

Apem. Hoy-day, what a sweep of vanity comes this way!

They dance! they are mad women. Like madness is the glory of this life, As this pomp shows to a little oil and root. We make ourselves fools to disport ourselves, And spend our flatteries to drink those men Upon whose age we void it up again, With poisonous spite and envy.

Who lives that's not deprayed or deprayes? Who dies that bears not one spurn to their graves

Of their friends' gift? I should fear those that dance before me now Would one day stamp upon me: 't has been done;

Men shut their doors against a setting sun.

The Lords rise from table, with much adoring of TIMON; and, to show their loves, each singles out an Amazon, and all dance, men with women, a lofty strain or two to the hautboys, and cease.

Tim. You have done our pleasures much grace, fair ladies,

Set a fair fashion on our entertainment, Which was not half so beautiful and kind; You have added worth unto't and lustre,

Bi-fold authority! where reason can revolt Without perdition, and loss assume all reason Without revolt: this is, and is not, Cressid! Within my soul there doth conduce a fight Of this strange nature, that a thing inseparate Divides more wider than the sky and earth; And yet the spacious breadth of this division Admits no ordex for a point, as subtle As Ariachne's broken woof, to enter.

Instance, O instance! strong as Pluto's gates; Cressid is mine, tied with the bonds of heaven: Instance, O instance! strong as heaven itself; The bonds of heaven are slipp'd, dissolv'd, and loos'd;

And with another note, five-finger-tied, The fractions of her faith, orts of her love, The fragments, scraps, the hits, and greasy relics

Of her o'er-eaten faith, are hound to Diomed.

Ulyss. May worthy Troilus be but halfnttach'd

With that which here his passion doth express? Tro. Ay, Greek; and that shall he divulged well In characters as red as Mars his heart |fancy Inflam'd with Venus: never did young man With so eternal and so fix'd a soul. Hark, Greek: as much as I do Cressid love, So much by weight hate I her Diomed: That sleeve is mine that he'll hear on his helm; Were it a casque compos'd hy Vulcan's skill My sword should hite it: not the dreadful spout Which shipmen do the hurricano call. Constring'd in mass by the almighty sun, Shall dizzy with more clamour Neptune's ear In his descent, than shall my prompted sword.

Ther. He'll tickle it for his concupy ... Tro. O Cressid! O false Cressid! false, false, false!

Falling on Diomed.

Let all untruths stand by thy stained name, And they'll seem glorious.

O, contain yourself: Ulyss. Your passion draws ears hither.

ACT, II.

SCENE I .- ATHENS. A Room in a Senator's House.

Enter a Senator, with papers in his hand.

Sen. And late, five thousand;-to Varro and to Isidore sum. He owes nine thousand; besides my former Which makes it five-and twenty.-Still in notion

Of raging waste? It cannot hold; it will not. If I want gold, steal but a beggar's dog. And give it Timon, why, the dog coins gold: If I would sell my horse and buy twenty more Better than he, why, give my horse to Timon, Ask nothing, give it him, it foals me, straight, And able horses: no porter at his gate; But rather one that smiles, and still invites" All that pass by. It cannot hold; no reason Can found his state in safety. Caphis, ho! Caphis, I sayl

Enter CAPHIS.

Cabh. Here, sir; what is your pleasure? Sen. Get on your cloak and haste you to Lord Timon;

Importune him for my moneys; be not ceas'd With slight denial; nor then silenc'd, when-Commend me to your master-and the cap Plays in the right hand, thus: but tell him My uses cry to me, I must serve my turn Out of mine own; his days and times are past, And my reliances on his fracted dates Have smit my credit: I love and honour him; But must not break my back to heal his finger: Immediate are my needs; and my relief Must not be toss'd and turn'd to me in words, But find supply immediate. Get you gone: Put on a most importunate aspect, I visage of demand; for, I do fear, When every feather sticks in his own wing Lord Timon will be left a naked gull, Which flashes now a phoenix. Get you gone. Caph. I go, sir.

Sen. Take the bonds along with you, And have the dates in compt. I will, sir.

Caph. Sen.

Go. Exeunt.

Scene II.—Athens. A Hall in TIMON'S House.

Enter FLAVIUS, with many bills in his hand.

Flav. No care, no stop! so senseless of expense

That he will neither know how to maintain it Nor cease his flow of riot: takes no account How things go from him; nor resumes no care Of what is to continue: never mind Was to be so unwise to be so kind. What shall be done? he will not hear, till feel: I must be round with him now he comes from hunting.

Fie, fie, fie, fie!

Enter Caphis, and the Servants of ISIDORE hangs on your back already. and VARRO,

Good-even, Varro: what, Caph. You come for money?

Var. Serv. Is't not your business too? Caph. It is: - and yours too, Isidore? Isid. Serv. Caph. Would we were all discharg'dl Var. Serv. I fear it. Cath. Here comes the lord, Enter Timon, Alcibiades, and Lords, &c.

Tim. So soon as dinner's done we'll forth again,

My Alcibiades.—With me? what is your will? Caph. My lord, here is a note of certain dues. Tim. Dues! whence are you? Cabh.

Of Athens here, my lord. Tim. Go to my steward. Caph. Please it your lordship, he hath put To the succession of new days this month: My master is awak'd by great occasion

To call upon his own; and humbly prays you That, with your other noble parts, you'll suit In giving him his right. $\bar{T}im$. Mine honest friend,

I pr'ythee but repair to me next morning. Caph. Nay, good my lord,

Tim. Contain thyself, good friend. Var. Serv. One Varro's servant, my good lord,-

Isid. Serv. From Isidore; He humbly prays your speedy payment,-Caph. If you did know, my lord, my master's wants. six weeks Var. Serv. 'Twas due on forfeiture, my lord,

And past,-Isid. Serv. Your steward puts me off, my lord: And I am sent expressly to your lordship.

Tim. Give me breath. I do beseech you, good my lords, keep on; I'll wait upon you instantly.

Exeunt ALCIBIADES and Lords. Come hither: pray you, To FLAVIUS. How goes the world, that I am thus encounter'd With clamorous demands of date-broke bonds,

And the detention of long-since-due debts, Against my honour? Flav. Please you, gentlemen, The time is unagreeable to this business: Your importunacy cease till after dinner;

That I may make his lordship understand Wherefore you are not paid. 🕫 Do so, my friends.-Exit. See them well entertained. Pray, draw near. [Exit.

Flav.

Enter Apemantus and Fool. Caph. Stay, stay, here comes the fool with Apemantus: let's ha' some sport with 'em. Var. Serv. Hang him, he'll abuse us. Isid. Serv. A plague upon him, dog! Var. Serv. How dost, fool?

Apem. Dost dialogue with thy shadow? Var. Serv. I speak not to thee. Apem. No, 'tis to thyself.—Come away. [To the Fool.

Isid. Serv. [To Var. Serv.] There's the fool Apem. No, thou stand'st single, thou art not on him yet. Caph. Where's the fool now? Look, how thy wounds do bleed at many vents! Hark, how Troy roars! how Hecuha cries ont! How poor Andromache shrills her dolours forth! Behold, destruction, frenzy, and amazement, Like witless antics, one another meet, And all cry, Hector! Hector's dead! O

Hectori

Tro. Away! away! [my leave: Cas. Farewell:--yet, soft!--Hector I take Thou dost thyself and all our Troy deceive. Exit.

Hect. You are amaz'd, my liege, at her exclaim: [fight: Go in, and theer the town: we'll forth, and Do deeds worth praise, and tell you them at [about thee! night.

Pri. Farewell: the gods with safety stand Exeunt severally PRIAM and HECTOR. Alarums.

Trq. They are at it, hark! Proud Diomed, helieve, I come to lose my arm, or win my sleeve.

As TROILUS is going out, enter from the other side PANDARUS.

Pan. Do yon hear, my lord? do you hear?
Tro. What now? [girl.
Pan. Here's a letter come from yond poor

Tro. Let me read.

Pan. A whoreson phtisick, a whoreson rascally phtisick so troubles me, and the foolish fortune of this girl; and what one thing, what another, that I shall leave you one o' these days: and I have a rheum in mine eyes too; and such an ache in my boues, that unless a man were cursed I cannot tell what to think on't .- What says she there?

Tro. Words, words, mere words, no matter from the heart;

The effect doth operate another way. [Tearing the letter. Go, wind, to wind, there turn and change together .-My love with words and errors still she feeds;

Rut edifies another with her deeds. Exeunt severally.

Scene IV .- Plains between Troy and the Grecian Camp.

Alarums: excursions. Enter THERSITES.

Ther. Now they are clapper-chawing one another; I'll go look on. That dissembling ahominable varlet, Diomed, has got that same scurvy doting foolish young knave's sleeve of Troy there in his helm: I would fain see them meet; that that same young Trojan ass, that loves the whore there, might send that Greekish whoremasterly villain, with the sleeve, back to the dissembling luxurions drah, of a sleeve-less errand. O' the t'other side, the policy of those crafty swearing rascals,—that stale old mouse eaten dry cheese, Nestor, and that same dog-fox, Ulysses,—is not proved worth a blackberry:-they set me up, in policy, that mongrel cur, Ajax, against that dog of as had a kind, Achilles: and now is the cur Ajax prouder That what he will he does; and do than the cur Achilles, and will not arm to-day; That proof is call'd impossibility.

whereupon the Grecians begin to proclaim barbarism, and policy grows into an ill opinion. Soft! here come sleeve, and t'other.

Enter DIOMEDES, TROILUS following.

Tro. Fly not; for shouldst thou take the river Styx I would swim after.

Dio. Thou dost miscall retire: I do not fly; but advantageous care Withdrew me from the odds of multitude: Have at thee!

Ther. Hold thy whore, Grecian! now for thy whore, Trojan!—now the sleeve, now the sleeve! [Exeunt Tro. and Dio., fighting.

Enter HECTOR.

Hect. What art thou, Greekl art thou for Hector's match?

Art thou of blood and honour?

Ther. No, no,-I am a rascal: a scurvy railing knave; a very filthy rogue.

Hect. I do helieve thee;-live Exit. Ther. God-a-mercy, that thou wilt helieve me; hut a plague break thy neck for frighting me!—What's become of the wenching rogues? I think they have swallowed one another: I would laugh at that miracle. Yet, in a sort, lechery eats itself. I'll seek them.

Scene V .- Another part of the Plains.

Enter DIOMEDES and a Servant.

Dio. Go, go, my servent, take thou Troilus' horse; Present the fair steed to my lady Cressid: Fellow, commend my service to her heauty; Tell her I have chastis'd the amorous Trojan. And am her knight by proof.

Setv. I go, my lord. Exit.

Enter Agamemnon.

Agan. Renew, renew! The fierce Polydamus Hath heat down Menon: bastard Margarelon Hath Doreus prisouer. And stands colossus-wise, waving his heam, Upon the pashed corses of the kings Epistrophus and Cedius: Polixenes is slain; Amphimacus and Thoas deadly hurt; Patroclus ta'en, or slain; and Palamedes Sore hurt and bruis'd: the dreadful Sagittary Appals our numbers:-haste we, Diomed, To reinforcement, or we perish all.

Enter NESTOR.

Nest. Go, bear Patroclus' hody to Achilles; And hid the snail-pac'd Ajax arm for shame.-There is a thousand Hectors in the field: . Now here he fights on Galathe his horse, And there lacks work; anou he's there afoot, And there they fly or die, like scaled skulls Before the helching whale; then is he yonder, And there the strawy Greeks, ripe for his edge, Fall down hefore him like the mower's swath: Here, there, and everywhere he leaves and takes;

Ahl when the means are gone that buy this praise

The breath is gone whereof this praise is made: Feast-won, fast-lost; one cloud of winter showers,

These flies are couch'd.

TimCome, sermon me no further: No villainous bounty yet hath passed my heart; Unwisely, not ignobly, have I given. Why dost thou weep? Canst thou the conscience lack

To think I shall lack friends? Secure thy heart:

If I would broach the vessels of my love, And try the argument of hearts by borrowing, Men and men's fortunes could I frankly use As I can bid thee speak.

Flav. Assurance bless your thoughts! Tim. And, in some sort, these wants of mine are crown'd

That I account them blessings; for by these Shall I try friends: you shall perceive how you Mistake myfortunes; I am wealthyin myfriends. Within there! Flaminius! Servilius!

Enter Flaminius, Servilius, and other Servants.

Serv. My lord? my lord?—

Tim. I will despatch you severally:—you to Lord Lucius;—to Lord Lucullus you; I hunted with his honour to-day;—you to Sempronius: commend me to their loves; and I am proud, say, that my occasions have found time to use 'em toward a supply of money: let the request be fifty talents.

Flam. As you have said, my lord.

Flav. Lord Lucius and Luculius? hum!

Aside. Tim. Go you, sir, [to another Serv.] to the senators.

Of whom, even to the state's best health, I have Deserv'd this hearing, bid 'em send o' the instant

A thousand talents to me.

I have been bold .-Flav. For that I knew it the most general way,-To them to use your signet and your name; But they do shake their heads, and I am here No richer in return.

Is't true? can't be? Tim.

Flav. They answer, in a joint and corporate voice,

That now they are at fall, want treasure, cannot Do what they would; are sorry-you are not--- honourable, But yet they could have wish'd-they know Something hath been amiss—a noble nature May catch a wrench-would all were well-

'tis pity;-And so, intending other serious matters,

After distasteful looks, and these hard fractions, With certain half-caps and cold-moving nods, They froze me into silence.

You gods, reward them? Pr'ythee, man, look cheerly. These old fellows Have their ingratitude in them hereditary: Their blood is cak'd, 'tis cold,' it seldom flows; 'Tis lack of kindly warmth they are not kind; And nature, as it grows again toward earth,

Is fashion'd for the journey dull and heavy.-Go to Ventidius [to a Serv.]; pr'ythee, [to FLAVIUS] be not sad,

Thou art true and honest; ingeniously I speak, No blame belongs to thee:-[To Serv.] Ventidius lately

Buried his father; by whose death he's stepp'd Into a great estate: when he was poor, Imprison'd, and in scarcity of friends, I clear'd him with five talents: greet him from Bid him suppose some good necessity [ber'd

Being free itself it thinks all others so. [Exeunt.

ACT III.

Scene I .- Athens. A Room in Lucullus' House.

FLAMINIUS waiting. Enter a Servant to him.

Serv. I have told my lord of you; he is coming down to you. Flam. I thank you, sir.

Enter LUCULLUS.

Serv. Here's my lord. Lucul. [Aside.] One of Lord Timon's men? a gift, I warrant. Why, this hits right; I dreamt of a silver basin and ower to-night.-Flaminius, honest Flaminius; you are very respectively welcome, sir.—Fill me some wine. [Exit Servant.]—And how does that honourable, complete, free-hearted gentleman of Athens, thy very bountiful good lord and master?

Flam. His health is well, sir, Lucul. I am right glad that his health is well, sir: and what hast thou there under thy cloak, pretty Flaminius?

Flam. Faith, nothing but an empty box, sir; which, in my lord's behalf, I come to entreat your honour to supply; who, having great and instant occasion to use fifty talents, hath sent to your lordship to furnish him, nothing doubting your present assistance therein.

Lucul. La, la, la, la,—nothing doubting, says he? Alas, good lord! a noble gentleman 'tis, if he would not keep so good a house. Many a time and often I ha'e dined with him and told him on't; and come again to supper to him of purpose to have him spend less; and yet he would embrace no counsel, take no 6 warning by my coming. Every man has his fault, and honesty is his: I ha'e told him on't, but I could ne'er get him from 't.

Re-enter Servant, with wine.

Serv. Please your lordship, here is the wine. Lucul. Flaminius, I have noted thee always wise. Here's to thee.

Rest, sword; thou hast thy fill of blood and death!

[Puts off his helmet and hangs his shield behind him.

Enter ACHILLES and Myrmidons.

Achil. Look, Hector, how the sun hegins to How ugly night comes hreathing at his heels;

Even with the vail and dark'ning of the sun, To close the day up, Hector's life is done. Hect. I am unarm'd; forego this vantage, Greek. I seek. Achil. Strike, fellows, strike; this is the man HECTOR falls.

So, Ilion, fall thou next! now, Troy, sink down! Here lies thy heart, thy sinews, and thy hone .-On, Myrmidons; and cry you all amain, Achilles hath the mighty Hector slain.

[A retreat sounded. Harkl a retire upon our Grecian part. [my lord. Myr. The Trojan trumpets sound the like, Achil. The dragon wing of night o'erspreads the earth,

And, stickler-like, the armies separate. My half-supp'd sword, that frankly would have fed. [bed.-Pleas'd with this dainty bait, thus goes to [Sheathes his sword. Come, tie his body to my horse's tail; Along the field I will the Trojan trail. [Exeunt.

Scene IX.—Another Part of the Plains.

Enter AGAMEMNON, AJAX, MENELAUS, NESTOR

DIOMEDES, and others, marching. Shouts within.

Agam. Hark! hark! what shout is that? Nest. Prace, drums! [Ac] [Achilles] [Within.] Achilles! Achilles! Hector's slain, Dio. The bruit is, Hector's slain, and hy Achilles.

Ajax. If it be so, yet bragless let it be; Great Hector was a man as good as he. sent Agam. March patiently along.-Let one he To pray Achilles see us at our tent .-If in his death the gods have us befriended; Great Troy is ours, and our sharp wars are ended. Exeunt, marching.

SCENE X .- Another Part of the Plains

Enter ENEAS and Trojans.

Æne. Stand, hol yet are we masters of the field:

Never go home; here starve we out the night.

Enter TROILUS.

Tro. Hector is slain.

All. Hector!-the gods forhid! Tro. He's dead; and at the murderer's horse's tail, field.

In beastly sort, dragg'd, through the shameful

Frown on, you heavens, effect your rage with speed1 Troyl Sit, gods, upon your thrones, and smile at I say, at once let your brief plagues be mercy. And linger not our sure destructions only

Æne. My lord, you do discomfort all the host. Tro. You understand me not that tell me

I do not speak of flight, of fear, of death; But dare all imminence that gods and men Address their dangers in. Hector is gone: Who shall tell Priam so, or Hecuha? Let him that will a screech-owl aye be call'd Go in to Troy, and say there, Hector's dead: There is a word will Priam turn to stone; Make wells and Niohes of the maids and wives. Cold statues of the youth; and, in a word, Scare Troy out of itself. But, march away: Hector is dead; there is no more to say. Stay yet. - You vile ahominable tents, Thus proudly pight upon our Phrygian plains, Let Titan rise as early as he dare, I'll through and through you!-And, thou

No space of earth shall sunder our two hates: I'll haunt thee like a wicked conscience still, That mouldeth gohlins swift as frenzy's thoughts.

great-siz'd coward,

Strike a free march to Troyl—with comfort go: Hope of revenge shall hide our inward woe. (Exeunt ENEAS and Trojans.

As TROILUS is going out, enter, from the other side, PANDAR JS.

Pan. But hear you, hear youl Tro. Hence, broker lackeyl ignomy and shame pursue thy life, and live aye with thy Exit.

Pan. A goodly medicine for my aching bones!—O world! world! world! thus is the poor agent despised! O traitors and hawds, how earnestly are you set at work, and how ill requited! Why should our endeavour he so loved, and the performance so loathed? what verse for it? what instance for it?-Let me see:-

Full merrily the humble-bee doth sing Till he hath lost his honey and his sting; And being once subdued in armed tail, Sweet honey and sweet notes together fail-

Good traders in the flesh, set this in your painted cloths.

As many as he here of pander's hall, Your eyes, half out, weep out at Pandar's fall; Or, if you cannot weep, yet give some groans, Though not for me, yet for your aching hones. Brethren and sisters of the old-door trade, Some two months hence my will shall here he made:

It should he now, but that my fear is this, Some galled goose of Winchester would hiss: Till then I'll sweat, and seek about for eases; And, at that time, bequeath you my diseases.

Men must learn now with pity to dispense: For policy sits above conscience. Exeunt.

> SCENE III .- ATHENS. A Room in SEMPRONIUS' House.

Enter SEMPRORIUS and a Servant of Timon's.

Sem. Must be needs trouble me in't.—hum! -'bove all others?

He might have tried Lord Lucius or Luculius: And now Ventidius is wealthy too, Whom he redeem'd from prison: all these Owe their estates unto him.

Serv. My lord. They have all been touch'd and found base metal; for

They have all denied him.

Sem.How! have they denied him? Has Ventidius and Lucullus denied him? And does he send to me? Three? hum!-It shows but little love or judgment in him: Must I be his last refuge! His friends, like physicians,

Thrive, give him over: must I take the cure upon me? [him,

Has ruch disgrac'd me in't; I am angry at That might have known my place: I see no sense for't,

But his occasions might have woo'd me first; For, in my conscience, I was the first man That e'er received gift from him: And does he think so backwardly of me now That I'll requite it last? No: So it may prove an argument of laughter To the rest, and 'mongst the lords I be thought a fool.

I had rather than the worth of thrice the sum Had sent to me first, but for my mind's sake; I had such a courage to do him good. But now return,

And with their faint reply this answer join; Who bates mine honour shall not know my Exit. coin.

Serv. Excellent! Your lordship's a goodly villain. The devil knew not what he did when he made man politic,—he cross'd himself by't: and I cannot think but, in the end, the villainies of man will set him clear. How fairly this lord strives to appear foul! takes virtuous copies to be wicked; like those that under hot ardent zeal would set whole realms on fire:

Of such a nature is his politic love. This was my lord's best hope; now all are fied, Save only the gods: now his friends are dead, Doors, that were ne'er acquainted with their wards Many a bounteous year, must be employ'd Now to guard sure their master. And this is all a liberal course allows; Who cannot keep his wealth must keep his Exit. house.

Scene IV .- Athens. A Hall in Timon's House.

Enter two Servants of VARRO and the Servant of Lucius, meeting Titus, Hortensius, and other Servants of Timon's creditors, waiting his coming out.

I Var. Serv. Well met; good-morrow, Titus and Hortensius.

337

Tit. The like to you, kind Varro. Hor. LuciusI What, do we meet together? Luc. Serv. Ay, and I think One business does command us all; for mine

Is money. Tit. So is theirs and ours.

Enter PHILOTUS.

Luc. Serv. Phi. Good-day at once. And Sir Philotus tool Luc. Serv.

Welcome, good brother. What do you think the hour? Phi. Labouring for nine.

Luc. Serv. So much?

Phi. Is not my lord seen yet? Luc. Serv. Not yet. Phi. I wonder on't: he was wont to shine at seven.

Lus. Serv. Ay, but the days are waxed shorter with him:

You must consider that a prodigal course. Is like the sun's; but not, like his, recoverable.

'Tis deepest winter in Lord Timon's purse; That is, one may reach deep enough and yet Find little.

Phi. I am of your fear for that. Tit. I'll show you how to observe a strange Your lord sends now for money.

Hor. Most true, he does.
Tit. And he wears jewels now of Timon's

For which I wait for money.

Hor. It is against my heart. Luc. Serv. Mark how strange it shows, Timon in this should pay more than he owes: And e'en as if your lord should wear rich jewels And send for money for 'em.

Hor. I am weary of this charge, the gods can witness:

I know my lord hath spent of Timon's wealth, And now ingratitude makes it worse than stealth.

1 Var. Serv. Yes, mine's three thousand crowns: what's yours?

Luc. Serv. Five thousand mine.

I Var. Serv. 'Tis much deep: and it should , seem by the sum

Your master's confidence was above mine; Else, surely, his had equall'd.

Enfer FLAMINIUS.

Tit. One of Lord Timon's men. Luc. Serv. Flaminius! sir, a word: pray, is my lord ready to come forth?

Flam. No, indeed, he is not.
Til. We attend his lordship; pray, signify so much. Flam. I need not tell him that; he knows [Exit. you are too diligent.

Enter FLAVIUS, in a cloak, muffled.

Luc. Serv. Ha! is not that his steward muffled so? He goes away in a cloud: call him, call him. Tit. Do you hear, sir?

Both Var. Serv. By your leave, sir,-

Jew. And rich: here is a water, look ye. Pain. You are rapt, sir, in some work, some dedication

To the great lord.

Poet. A thing slipp'd idly from me. Our poesy is as a gum, which cozes From whence 'tis nourish'd: the fire i' the flint Shows not till it he struck; our gentle flame Provokes itself, and, like the current, flies Each hound it chafes. What have you there?

Pain. A picture, sir.—And, when comes your hook forth? Isir,-Poet. Upon the heels of my presentment, Poet. So 'tis: this comes off well and excellent. Pain. Indifferent.

Poet. Admirable: how this grace Speaks his own standing! what a mental power This eye shoots forth! how hig imagination Moves in this lip! to the dumhness of the gesture

One might interpret.

Pain. It is a pretty mocking of the life. Here is a touch; is't good?

will say of it It tutors nature: artificial strife Lives in these touches, livelier than life.

Enter certain Senators, and pass over. Pain. How this lord is follow'd!
Poet. The senators of Athens:—happy man!

Pain. Look, more! for visitors. Poet. You see this confinence, this great flood I have, in this rough work, shap'd out a man, Whom this beneath world doth embrace and

With amplest entertainment: my free drift Halts not particularly, but moves itself In a wide sea of wax: no levell'd malice Infects one comma in the course I hold; But flies an eagle flight, bold, and forth on, Leaving no track behind.

Pain. How shall I understand you?

Poet. I will unbolt to yon. You see how all conditions, how all minds, As well of glib and slippery creatures as Of grave and austere quality,—tender down. Their services to Lord Timon: his large fortune, Upon his good and gracious nature hanging,

Subdues and properties to his love and tendance All sorts of hearts; yea, from the glass-fac'd flatterer

To Apemantus, that few things loves better Than to ahhor himself: even he drops down The knee hefore him, and returns in peace Most rich in Timon's nod.

Paîn. I saw them speak together. Poet. Sir, I have upon a high and pleasant hill [mount

Feign'd Fortune to be thron'd: the base o' the Is rank'd with all deserts, all kinds of natures, That labour on the hosom of this sphere To propagate their states: amongst them all, Whose eyes are on this sovereign lady fix'd, One do I personate of Lord Timon's frame, Whom Fortune with her ivory hand wafts to [servants Whose present grace to present sisves and Translates his rivals.

Pain. 'Tis conceiv'd to scope. This throne, this Fortune, and this hill, methinks,

With one man heckon'd from the rest helow, Bowing his head against the steepy mount To climh his happiness, would be well express'd In our condition

Poet. Nay, sir, but hear me on-All those which were his fellows hut of late, Some hetter than his value, - on the moment Follow his strides, his lobbies fill with tendance, Rain sacrificial whisperings in his ear,

Make sacred even his stirrup, and through him Drink the free air. Pain.

Ay, marry, what of these? Poet. When Fortune, in her shift and change of mood.

Spurns down her late belov'd, all his dependents, Which lahour'd after him to the mountain's top,

Even on their knees and hands, let him slip down,

Not one accompanying his declining foot. Pain. 'Tis common:

A thousand moral paintings I can show That shall demonstrate these quick hlows of Fortune's More pregnantly than words. Yet you do well To show Lord Timon that mean eyes have seen The foot above the head.

Trumbets sound. Enter TIMON, attended, the Servant of VERTIDIUS talking with him.

Imprison'd is he, say you? Ven. Serv. Ay, my good lord: five talents is his debt;

His means most short, his creditors most strait: Your honourable letter he desires To those have shut him up; which failing him, Periods his comfort.

Noble Ventidius! Well; I am not of that feather to shake off My friend when he most needs me-I do know A gentleman that well deserves a help, Which he shall have: I'll pay the debt, and free

Ven. Serv. Your lordship ever binds him. Tim. Commend me to him: I will send his ransom; And, being enfranchis'd, bid him come to me:--'Tis not enough to help the feeble up, But to support him after .- Fare you well.

Ven. Serv. All happiness to your honour! Exit.

Enfer on Old Athenian.

Old Ath. Lord Timon, hear me speak. Freely, good father. Old Ath. Thou hast a servant nam'd Lucilius Tim. I have so: what of him? Old Ath. Most noble Timon, call the man before thee. Tim. Attends he here, or no?-Lucilius!

LUCILIUS comes forward from among the Attendants.

Luc. Here, at your lordship's service. Old Ath. This fellow here, Lord Timon, this thy creature,

By night frequents my house. I am a man

To bring it into danger. If wrongs be evils, and enforce us kill, What folly 'tis to hazard life for ill!

Alcib. My lord, clear: 1 Sen. You cannot make gross sins look To revenge is no valour, but to bear.

Alcib. My lords, then, under favour, pardon If I speak like a captain:-Why do fond men expose themselves to battle, And not endure all threats? sleep upon 't, And let the foes quietly cut their throats, Without repugnancy? but if there be Such valour in the bearing, what make me Abroad? why, then, women are more valiant, That stay at home, if bearing carry it; And th' ass more captain than the lion; the fellow Loaden with irons wiser than the judge, If wisdom be in suffering. O my lords, As you are great, be pitifully good: Who cannot condemn rashness in cold blood? To kill, I grant, is sin's extremest gust; But, in defence, by mercy, 'tis most just, To be in anger is impiety; But who is man that is not angry? Weigh but the crime with this.

2 Sen. You breathe in vain.

Alcib. In vaint his service done At Lacedaemon and Byzantium Were a sufficient briber for his life.

1 Sen. What's that? Alcib. Why, I say, my lords, h'as done fair service,

And slain in fight many of your enemies: How full of valour did he bear himself In the last conflict, and made plenteous wounds! 2 Sen. He has made too much plenty with

'em, he Is a sworn rioter: he has a sin that often Drowns him, and takes his valour prisoner: If there were no foes, that were enough To overcome him: in that beastly fury He has been known to commit outrages And cherish factions: 'tis inferr'd to us His days are foul and his drink dangerous. I Sen. He dies.

Alcib. Hard fete! he might have died in war. My lords, if not for any parts in him, Though his right arm might purchase his own time, And be in debt to none,—yet, more to move

You. Take my deserts to his, and join them both: And, for I know your reverend ages love Security, I'll pawn my victories, all My honours to you, upon his good returns. If by this crime he owes the law his life, Why, let the war receiv't in valiant gore;

For law is strict, and war is nothing more.

On height of our displeasure: friend or brother, He forfeits his own blood that spills another. Alcib. Must it be so? it must not be. Mylords, I do beseech you, know me.

2 Sen. How! Alcib. Call me to your remembrances. Whatl з Sen. Alcib. I cannot think but your age has forgot me;

It could not else be I should prove so base To sue, and be denied such common grace: My wounds ache at you.

ı Sen. Do you dare our anger? 'Tis in few words, but spacious in effect; We banish thee forever.

Alçib. Banish mel. Banish your dotage; banish usury, That makes the senate ugly.

I Sen. If, after two days' shine, Athens contain thee, Attend our weightier judgment. And, not to swell our spirit,

He shall be executed presently.

Exeunt Senators. Alcib. Now the gods keep you old enough; that you may live Only in bone, that none may look on youl

I am worse than mad: I have kept back their foes,

While they have told their money, and let out Their coin upon large interest; I myself Rich only in large hurts;—all those for this? Is this the balsam that the usuring senate Pours into captain's wounds? Ha! banishment? It comes not ill; I hate not to be banish'd; It is a cause worthy my spleen and fury, That I may strike at Athens. I'll cheer up My discontented troops, and lay for hearts. 'Tis honour with most lands to be at odds; Soldiers should brook as little wrongs as gods. Exit.

Scene VI.—Athens. A magnificent Room in TIMON'S House.

Music. Tables set out: Servants attending. Enter divers Lords at several doors.

I Lord. The good time of day to you, sir. 2 Lord. I also wish it to you. I think this honourable lord did but try us this other day.

1 Lord. Upon that were my thoughts tiring when we encountered: I hope it is not so low with him as he made it seem in the trial of his several friends.

2 Lord. It should not be by the persuasion of his new feasting.

I Lord. I should think so: he hath sent me an earnest inviting, which many my near occasions did urge me to put off; but he bath conjured me beyond them, and I must needs appear.

2 Lord. In like manner was I in debt to my importunate business, but he would not hear my excuse. I am sorry, when he sent to borrow of me, that my provision was out.

I Lord. I am sick of that grief too, as I understand how all things go.

z Lord. Every man here's so. he have borrowed of you?

I Lord. A thousand pieces.

2 Lord. A thousand pieces! 1 Lord. What of you? 3 Lord. He sent to me, sir,—Here he comes.

Enter TIMON and Attendants.

Tim. With all my heart, gentlemen both-And how fare you? I Lord. Ever at the best, hearing well of your lordship.

Afem. Even as Apemantus does now, bate a lord with my heart.

Tim. What, thyself?

Apem. Ay.
Tim. Wherefore?
Apem. That I had no angry wit to he a lord.-Art not thou a merchant?

Mer. Ay, Apemantus. Apem. Traffic confound thee, if the gods will not!

Mer. If traffic do it, the gods do it.

Apem. Traffic's thy god, and thy god confound thee!

Trumbet sounds. Enter o Servant.

Tim. What trumpet's that? Serv. 'Tis Alcibiades, and some twenty borse, All of companionship.

Tim. Pray, entertain them; give them guide to us. --

You must needs dine with me:-go not you! hence Till I have thank'd you:-when dinner's done

Show me this piece. - I am joyful of your sights. Enter ALCIBIADES, with his company,

In different pleasures. Pray you, let us in. Exeunt all but APEMANTUS.

Enter Two Lords.

1 Lord. What time o' day is't, Apemantus? Apem. Time to be honest.

1 Lord. That time serves still. [omitt'st it. Apem. The more accursed thou, that still 2 Lord. Thou art going to Lord Timon's feast. Apem. Ay; to see meat fill knaves, and wine heat fools.

2 Lord. Fare thee well, fare thee well.

Apem. Thou art a fool to bid me farewell twice.

2 Lord. Why, Apemantus?

Apem. Shouldst have kept one to thyself, for I mean to give thee none.

I Lord. Hang thyself.

Apem. No, I will do nothing at thy bidding: make thy requests to thy friend.

2 Lord. Away, unpeaceable dog, or I'll spurn thee bence.

Apem. I will fly, like a dog, the heels o' the Exit.

Houtboys playing loud music. A greet banquel served in; FLAVIUS and others attending; then enter TIMON, ALCIBLADES, LUCIUS, LUCULLUS, SEMPRONIUS, and other Athenian Senators, with VENTIDIUS, and Attendants. Then comes, dropping after oll, APEMANTUS, discontentediu.

Ven. Most bonour'd Timon, [father'a age, It hath pleas'd the gods to remember my And call him to long peace. Excunt some Attendants. He is gone bappy, and bas left me rich:

Then, as in grateful virtue I am bound To your free heart, I do return those talents,-Doubled with thanks and service, from whese belp

I deriv'd liberty.

Tim.O, by no means, Honest Ventidius; you mistake my love: I gave it freely ever; and there's none Can truly say he gives if he receives: If our betters play at that game, we must not To imitate them; faults that are rich are fair. Ven. A noble spirit!

[They oll stand ceremoniously looking on ...

TIMON. Tim. Nay, my lords, ceremony was but devis'd at first

To set a gloss on faint deeds, hollow welcomes, Recanting goodness, sorry ere 'tis shown; But where there is true friendship there needs none. Pray, sit; more welcome are ye to my fortunes Than my fortunes to me. They sit.

I Lord. My lord, we always have confess'd it. Apem. Ho, bo, confess'd itl bang'd it, have you not? Tim. O, Apemantus!—you are welcome. No; Apem.

You shall not make me welcome. I come to have thee thrust me out of doors.

Tim. Fie, thou art a churl; you have got a humour there

Does not become a man, 'tis much to blame.-They say, my lords, iro furor brevis est;

But youd man is ever angry Go, let him have a table by himself; For be does neither affect company

Nor is he fit for't indeed. Apem. Let me stay at thine apparel, Timon:

I come to observe; I give thee warning on t.

Tim. I take no beed of thee; thou art an Athenian, therefore welcome: I myself would have no power; pr'ythee, let my meat make thee silent.

Apem. I scorn thy meat; 'twould choke me, for I should ne'er flatter thee.—O you gods, what a number of men eat Timon, and he sees 'em not! it grieves me to see

So many dip their meat in one man's blood; And all the madness is, he cheers them up too. And let confusion live!-Plagues incident to men, Your potent and infectious fevers heap On Athens, ripe for stroke! thou cold sciatica, Cripple our senators, that their limbs may halt As lamely as their manners! lust and liberty Creep in the minds and marrows of our youth, That 'gainst the stream of virtue they may strive And drown themselves in riot! itches, blains, Sow all the Athenian bosoms; and their crop Be general leprosy! breath infect breath; That their society, as their friendship, may Be merely poison! Nothing I'll bear from thee But nakedness, thou detestable town! Take thou that too, with multiplying banns! Timon will to the woods; where he shall find The unkindest beast more kinder than mankind. The gods confound,—hear me, ye good gods

The Athenians both within and out that wall!
And grant, as Timon grows, his hate may grow
To the whole race of mankind, high and low!
Amen. [Exit.

Scene II.—Athens. A Room in Timon's House.

Enter FLAVIUS, with two or Three Servants.

1 Serv. Here you, master steward, where's our master?

Are we undone? cast off? nothing remaining? Flav. Alack, my fellows, what should I say to you?

Let me be recorded by the righteous gods,

I am as poor as you.

I Serv. Such a house broke!

So noble a master fall'n! All gone! and not One friend to take his fortune by the arm And go along with him!

2 Serv. As we do turn our backs
To our companion thrown into his grave,
So his familiars from his buried fortunes
Slink all away; leave their false vows with him,
Like empty purses pick'd; and his poor self,
A dedicated beggar to the air,
With his disease of all-shunn'd poverty,
Walks, like contempt, alone.—More of our fellows.

Enter other Servants.

Flav. All broken implements of a rund house. (livery,

3 Serv. Yet do our hearts wear Timon's That see I by our faces; we are fellows still, Serving alike in sorrow: leak'd is our bark; _And we, poor mates, stand on the dying deck Hearing the surges threat: we must all part Into this sea of air.

Flav. Good fellows all,
The latest of my wealth I'll share amongst you.
Wherever we shall meet, for Timon's sake,
Let's yet be fellows; let's shake our heads, and say, As 'twere a knell unto cur master's fortune, We have seen better days. Let each take some. [Giving them money.

Nay, put out all your hands. Not one word more:

Thus part we rich in sorrow, parting poor. [Servants embrace, and part several ways.

O, the fierce wretchedness that glory brings us! Who would not wish to be from wealth exempt Since riches point to misery and contempt? Who would be so mock'd with glory? or to live But in a dream of friendship? [pounds, To have his pomp, and all what state com-But only painted, like his varnish'd friends? Poor honest lord, brought low by his own heart, Undone by goodness! strange, unusual blood, When man's worst sin is, he does too much good!

men.
My dearest lord,—bless'd to be most accurs'd, Rich only to be wretched,—thy great fortunes Are made thy chief afflictions. Alas, kind lord! He's flung in rage from this ingrateful seat Of monstrous friends; nor bas he with him to Supply his life, or that which can command it. I'll follow and enquire him out:

L'il ever serve his mind with my best will;

I'll ever serve his mind with my best will;
Whilst I have gold, I'll be his steward still.
[Exil.

SCENE III.—The Woods. Before TIMON'S Cave.

Enter TIMON.

Tim. O blessed breeding sun, draw from the earth

Rotten humidity; below thy sister's orb Infect the air! Twinn'd brothers of one womb,— Whose procreation, residence, and birth Scarce is dividant,—touch them with several fortunes:

The greater scorns the lesser: not nature, To whom all sores lay siege, can bear great fortune

But by contempt of nature. Raise me this beggar and deny't that lord; The senator shall bear contempt hereditary The beggar native honour.

It is the pasture lards the other's sides, The want that makes him lean. Who dares, who dares.

In purity of menhood stand upright, And say, This man's a flatterer? if one be, So are they all; for every grise of fortune Is smooth'd by that below: the learned pate Ducks to the golden fool: all is oblique; There's nothing level in our cursed natures But direct villainy. Therefore, be abborr'd All feasts, societies, and throngs of men! His semblable, yea, himself Timon disdains: Destruction fang mankindl—Earth, yield me

Tim. Flavins. Flav. My lord?

Tim. The little casket bring me hither. Flav. Yes, my lord .- [Aside.] More jewels | Here, my lord, a triffe of our love.

There is no crossing him in his humour, Else I should tell him,—well, i'faith, I should, When all's spent, he'd be cross'd then, an he could.

'Tis pity bounty had not eyes behind,

That man might ne'er be wretched for his mind. Exit, and returns with the casket. 1 Lord. Where be our men?

Serv. Here, my lord, in readiness. 2 Lord. Our horses!

Tim. O my friends.

I have one word to say to you. Look you, my good lord.

I must entreat you, honour me so much As to advance this jewel; accept it, and wear it. Kind my lord.

1 Lord. I am so far already in your gifts,-All. So are we all.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. My lord, there are certain nobles of the senate

Rewly alighted, and come to visit you. Tim. They are fairly welcome.

Flav. I beseech your honour,

Vouchsafe me a word; it does concern you near. Tim. Near; why, then, another time I'll [entertainment. hear thee:

I prythee, let's be provided to show 'em Flav. I scarce know how. [Aside.

Enter another Servant.

2 Serv. May it please you honour, Lord Lucins,

Ont of his free love, hath presented to you Four milk-white horses, trapp'd in silver.

Tim. I shall accept them fairly: let the presents

Be worthily entertained.

Enter a third Servent.

How now! what news? 3 Serv. Please you, my lord, that honourable gentleman, Lord Lucullus, entreats your company to-morrow to hunt with him; and has upon thee; and then thou wouldst sin the faster. sent your honour two brace of greyhounds.

Tim. I'll hunt with him; and let them be receiv'd.

Not without fair reward

Flav. [Aside.] What will this come to? He commands us to provide, and give great gifts,

And all out of an empty coffer: Nor will he know his purse; or yield me this, To show him what a beggar his heart is, Being of no power to make his wishes good:

His promises fly so beyond his state That what he speaks is all in debt, he owes For every word: he is so kind that he now Pays interest for't; his land's put to their books. Well, would I were gently put out of office Before I were forc'd ont Happier is he that has no friend to feed

Than such that do e'en enemies exceed. I bleed inwardly for my lord. Exil. Tim. You do yourselves

Much wrong, you bate too much of your own merits:

2 Lord. With more than common thanks I will receive it.

3 Lord. O, he is the very soul of bounty! Tim. And now I remember, my lord, you 5783

I'll tell you true. I'll call to you. All Loids. O, none so welcome. Tim. I take all and your several visitations So kind to heart, 'tis not enough to give;

Methinks I could deal hingdoms to my friends And ne'er be weary. - Alcibiades.

Thou art a soldier, therefore seldom rich: It comes in charity to thee: for all thy living Is 'mongst the dead; and all the lands thou hast Lie in a pitch'd field.

Alcib. Ar, defil'd land, my lord. I Lord. We are so virtuously bound,

Tim. Am I to you.

2 Lord. So infinitely endear'd.

Tim. All to you.—Lights, more lights.

I Lord. The vest of happiness. Honour, and fortunes keep with you, Lord Timon!

Tim. Ready for his friends.

Exeun! Alcibiades, Lords, &c. Abem. What a coil's here! Serving of becks and jutting-out of bums!

I doubt whether their legs be worth the sums That are given for 'em. Friendship's full of dregs: llegs. Methinks false hearts should never have sound .

Thus honest fools lay out their wealth on court'sies.

Tim. Now, Apementus, if thon wert not I would be good to thee.

apem. No. I'll nothing: for if I should be bribed too, there would be none left to rail Thou gives: so long, Timon, I fear me thou wilt give away thyself in paper shortly: what need these feasts, pomps, and vain glories?

Fool. Are you three usurers' men?

All Serv. Ay, fool.

Fool. I think no usurer but has a fool to his servant; my mistress is one, and I am her fool. When men come to borrow of your masters they approach sadly and go away merry; but they enter my mistress' house merrily and go away sadly: the reason of this?

Var. Serv. I could render one.

Apem. Do it, then, that we may account thee a whoremaster and a knave; which, notwithstanding, thou shalt be no less esteemed.

Var. Serv. What is a whoremaster, fool?

Fool. A fool in good clothes, and something like thee. 'Tis a spirit: sometime it appears like a lord; sometime like a lawyer; sometime like a philosopher, with two stones more than's artificial one. He is very often like a knight; and, generally, in all shapes that man goes up and down in from fourscore to thirteen this spirit walks in.

Var. Serv. Thou art not altogether a fool.

Fool. Nor thou altogether a wise man: as much foolery as I have, so much wit thou lackest. Apem. That answer might have become [Timon Apemantus.

Pr'ythee, no more. Tim. Flav. Heavens, have I said, the bounty of this lord! How many prodigal bits have slaves and peas-This night englutted! Who is not Timon's? What heart, head, sword, force, means, but is Lord Timon's? Var. Serv. Aside, aside; here comes Lord Great Timon, noble, worthy, royal Timon1 subject to a beast? and what a beast art thou already, that seest not thy loss in transforma-

Apem. If thou couldst please me with speaking to me, thou migh'st have hit upon it here: the commonwealth of Athens is become a forest of beasts.

Tim. How has the ass broke the wall, that thou art out of the city?

Apem. Yonder comes a poet and a painter: the plague of company light upon thee! I will fear to catch it, and give way: when I know not what else to do, I'll see thee again.

Tim. When there is nothing living but thee, thou shalt be welcome. I had rather be a beggar's dog than Apemantus.

Apem. Thou art the cap of all the fools alive. Tim. Would thou wert clean enough to spit upon!

Apem. A plague on thee, thou art too bad to curse.

Tim. All villains that do stand by thee are

Tim. If I name thee .-

I'll beat thee, but I should infect my hands. Apem. I would my tongue could rot them off! Tim.. Away, thou issue of a mangy dogl Apem. Toad!

Rogue, rogue, rogue! Tim. [APEM. retreats backward, as going.

I am sick of this false world; and will love naught But even the mere necessities upon't.

Then, Timon, presently prepare thy grave; Lie where the light foam of the sea may beat Thy grave-stone daily: make thine epitaph, That death in me at others' lives may laugh. O thou sweet king-killer and dear divorce

[Looking on the gold. 'Twixt natural son and sire! thou bright defiler

Of Hymen's purest bed! thou valiant Mars! Thou ever young, fresh, lov'd and delicate wooer, Whose blush doth thaw the consecrated snow That lies on Dian's lap! thou visible god, That solder'st close impossibilities,

And mak'st them kiss! that speak'st with every tongue

Tim.

Apem. Live, and love thy misery! Tim. Long live so, and so diel [Exit Ape-MANTUS.] I am quit.

More things like men?-Eat, Timon, and abhor them.

Enter Thieves.

I Thief. Where should he have this gold? It is some poor fragment, some slender ort of his remainder: the mere want of gold and the falling-from of his friends drove him into this melancholy.

2 Thief. It is noised he hath a mass of treasnre

3 Thief. Let us make the assay upon him: if he care not for't, he will supply us easily; if he covetously reserve it, how shall's get it? 2 Thief. True; for he bears it not about him.

'tis hid. I Thief. Is not this he?

Thieves. Where?
2 Thief. 'Tis his description.
3 Thief. He; I know him.

3 Thief. He; I muon Thieves. Save thee, Timon. Tim. Now, thieves? Thieves. Soldiers, not thieves.

Tim. Both too; and women's sons.

Thieves. We are not thieves, but men that much do want.

Tim. Your greatest want is, you want much of meat.

Why should you want? Behold, the earth bath roots:

Within this mile break forth a hundred springs: The oaks bear mast, the briars scarlet hips! The bounteous housewife, nature, on each bush Lays her full mess before you. Want! why want?

I Thief. We cannot live on grass, on berries, As beasts and birds and fishes.

Tim. Nor on the beasts themselves, the birds, and fishes; You must eat men. Yet thanks I must yon con, That you are thieves profess'd; that you work

In holier shapes: for there is boundless theft In limited professions. Rascal thieves, Here's gold. Go, suck the subtle blood o' the grape Till the high fever seethe your blood to froth, And so 'scape hanging: trust not the physician; His antidotes are poison, and he slays More than you rob: take wealth and lives.

together; Do villainy, do, since you protest to do't, Like workmen. I'll example you with thievery: The sun's a thief, and with his great attraction Robs the vast sea: the moon's an arrant thief, And her pale fire she snatches from the sun: The sea's a thief, whose liquid surge resolves The moon into salt tears: the earth's a thief, That feeds and breeds by a composture stolen From general excrement: each thing's a thief: The laws, your curb and whip, in their rough power Have uncheck'd theft. Love not yourselves; Rob one another;-there's more gold;-cut throats: All that you meet are thieves. To Athens go,

Flam. Your lordship speaks your pleasure. Lucul. I have observed thee always for a towardly prompt spirit,—give thee thy due,—and one that knows what belongs to reason; and canst use the time well, if the time use thee well: good parts in thee.—Get you gone, sirrah fo the Servant, who goes out.—Draw nearer, honest Flaminius. Thy lord's a bountiful gentleman: but thou art wise; and thou knowest well enough, although thon comest to me, that this is no time to lend money; especially upon bare friendship, without security. Here's three solidares for thee: good boy, wink at me, and say thon saw'st me not. Fare thee well.

Flam. Is't possible the world should so much differ:

And we alive that liv'd! Fly, damned baseness, To him that worships thee [Throwing the money back.

Lucul. Hai now I see thou art a fool, and fit for thy master. Exit. Flam. May these add to the number that may scald theel

Let molten coin be thy damnation Thou disease of a friend and not himself! Has friendship such a faint and milky heart, It turns in less than two nights? O you gods, I feel my master's passion! This slave Unto his honour has my lord's meat in him: Why should it thrive and turn to nutriment When he is turn'd to poison?

O, may diseases only work upon't! [of nature And when he's sick to death, let not that part Which my lord paid for, be of any power To expel sickness, but prolong his hour!

SCENE II.—ATHENS. A public Place.

Enter Lucius, with three Strangers.

Luc. Who, the Lord Timon? he is my very good friend, and an honourable gentleman.

I Stran. We know him for no less, though we are but strangers to him. But I can tell yon one thing, my lord, and which I hear from common rumours,—now Lord Timon's happy hours are done and past, and his estate shrinks from him.

Luc. Fie, no, do not believe it; he cannot want for money.

2 Stran. But believe you this, my lord, that not long ago, one of his men was with the Lord Luculins to borrow so many talents; nay, urged extremely for't, and showed, what necessity belonged to't, and yet was denied.

Luc. How?

2 Stran. I tell yon, denied, my lord.

Luc. What a strange case was that! now, Denied before the gods, I am ashamed on't. that honourable man! there was very little honour showed in't. For my own part, I must needs confess I have received some small kindnesses from him, as money, plate, jewels, and such like trifles, nothing comparing to his; yet, had he mistook him and sent to me, I should ne'er have denied his occasion so many talents.

Enter SERVILIUS.

Ser. See, by good hap, yonder's my lord; I have sweat to see his honour.—My honoured To Lucius. lord,---

Luc. Servilins! you are kindly met, sir. Fare thee well: commend me to thy honourablevirtuous lord, my very exquisite friend.

Ser. May it please your honour, my lord hath sent.

Luc. Hal what has he sent? I am so much endeared to that Lord; he's ever sending: how shall I thank him, thinkest thon? And what has he sent now? Ser. Has only sent his present occasion now, my lord; requesting your lordship to supply his instant use with so many talents. Luc. I know his lordship is but merry with

He cannot want fifty-five hundred talents.

Ser. But in the meantime he wants less, my lord.

If his occasion were not virtuous I should not urge it half so faithfully.

Luc. Dost thou speak seriously, Servilius? Scr. Upon my soul, 'tis true, sir. Luc. What a wicked beast was I to disfurnish myself against such a good time, when I might ha' shown myself honourable! how unluckily it happened that I should purchase the day before for a little part, and undo a great deal of honour! —Servilius, now, before the gods, I am not able to do't,—the more beast, I say. I was sending to use Lord Timon myself, these gentlemen can witness; but I would not for the wealth of Athens I had done't now. Commend me bountifully to his good lordship; and I hope his honour will conceive the fairest of me, because I have no power to be kind: and tell him this from me, I count it one of my greatest afflictions, say, that I cannot pleasure such an honourable gentleman. Good Servilins, will you befriend me so far as to use mine own words to him?

Ser. Yes, sir, I shall.

Luc. I'll look you ont a good turn, Servilius. Exit SERVILIUS.

True, as you said, Timon is shrunk indeed And he that's once denied will hardly speed.

I Stran. Do yon observe this, Hostilius? 2 Stran. Ay, too well.

I Stran. Why, this is the world's soul; and just of the same piece Is every flatterer's spirit. Who can call him His friend that dips in the same dish? for, in My knowing, Timon has been this lord's father, And kept his credit with his purse; Supported his estate; nay, Timon's money

Has paid his men their wages: he ne'er drinks But Timon's silver treads upon his lip; And yet,-O see the monstrousness of man When he looks out in an ungrateful shape!-He does deny him, in respect of this,

What charitable men afford to beggars. 3 Stran. Religion grouns at it.

For mine own part, . i Stran. I never tasted Timon in my life,

Nor came any of his bounties over me To mark me for his friend; yet I protest, For his right noble mind, illustrious virtue, And honourable carriage,

Had his necessity made use of me. I would have put my wealth into donation, And the best half should have return'd to him, So much I love his heart: but, I perceive, him, in this supposed distress of his: it will show honestly in us; and is very likely to load our purposes with what they travail for, if it be a just and true report that goes of his having.

Poet. What have you now to present unto him?

Pain. Nothing at this time but my visitation: only I will promise him an excellent piece.

Poet. I must serve him so too,—tell him of an intent that's coming toward him.

Pain. Good as the best. Promising is the very air o' the time: it opens the eyes of expectation: performance is ever the duller for his act; and but in the plainer and simpler kind of people the deed of saying is quite out of use. To promise is most courtly and fashionable: performance is a kind of will or testament which argues a great sickness in his judgment that makes it.

Tim. Excellent workmanl thou canst not paint a man so bad as is thyself.

Poet. I am thinking what I shall say I have provided for him: it must be a personating of himself: a satire agamst the softness of prosperity, with a discovery of the infinite flatteries that follow youth and opulency.

Tim. Must thou needs stand for a villain in thine own work? wilt thou whip thine own faults in other men? Do so, I have gold for thee.

30

Poet. Nay, let's seek him:

Then do we sin against our own estate

When we may profit meet and come too late.

Pain. True; [night,
When the day serves, before black-corner'd
Find what thou want'st by free and offer'd light.

Come. [god's gold,
Tim. I'll meet you at the turn. What a

'Tis thou that rigg'st the bark, and plough'st

Settlest admired reverence in a slave:
To thee be worship! and thy saints for aye
Be crown'd with plagues, that thee alone obey!
Fit I meet them. [Advancing from his cave.

Poet. Hail, worthy Timon!

Pain. Our late noble master!

Tim. Have I once liv'd to see two honest men?

Poet, Sir, Having often of your open bounty tasted, Hearing you were retir'd, your friends fall'n off, Whose thankless natures,—O abhorred spirits!— Not all the whips of heaven are large enough:

What! to you, Whose star-like nobleness gave life and influence

To their whole being! I am wrapt, and cannot cover

The monstrous bulk of this ingratitude

With any size of words. [better: Tim. Let it go naked, men may see't, the You that are honest, by being what you are,

Make them best seen and known:

He and myself
Have travail'd in the great shower of your gifts,
And sweetly felt it.

Tim. Ay, you are honest men.

Pain. We are hither come to offer you our service. [requite you? Tim. Most honest men! Why, how shall I

Can you eat roots, and drink cold water? no.

Both. What we can do, we'll do, to do you service.

service. [have gold;

Tim. Ye're honest men: ye've heard that I
I am sure yon have: speak truth; ye're honest

Pain. So it is said, my noble lord: but therefore

Came not my friend nor I.

Tim. Good honest men!—Thou draw'st a counterfeit

Best in all Athens: thou'rt indeed the best; Thou counterfeit'st most lively.

Pain. So, so, my lord.

Tim. E'en so, sir, as I say.—And, for thy fiction, [To the Poet.]

Why, thy verse swells with stuff so fine and smooth

That thou art even natural in thine art.—
But for all this, my honest-natur'd friends,
I must needs say you have a little fault:
Marry, 'tis not monstrous in you; neither wish I
You take much pains to mend.

Both. Beseech your honour

To make it known to us.

Tim. You'll take it ill. Both. Most thankfully, my lord.

Tim. Will you indeed? Both. Doubt it not, worthy lord.

Tim. There's never a one of you but trusts a knave

That mightily deceives you.

Both. Do we, my lord?

Tim. Ay, and you hear him cog, see him dissemble,

Know his gross patchery, love him, feed him, Keep in your bosom: yet remain assur'd That he's a made-up villain.

Pain. I know not such, my lord.

Poet. Nor I.

Tim. Look you, I love you well; I'll give you gold,

Rid me these villains from your companies:
Hang them or stab them, drown them in a draught, [me,

Confound them by some course, and come to I'll give you gold enough.

Both. Name them, my lord; let's know them. Tim. You that way, you this,—but two in company:

Each manapart, all single and alone, Yet an arch-villain keeps him comapny. If where thou art two villains shall not be, [To the Painter.

Come not near him.—If thou wouldst not reside [To the Poet.

But where one villain is, then him abandon.— Hence! pack! there's gold,—ye came for gold, ye slaves: [hence!

You have done work for me, there's payment: You are an alchemist, make gold of that:— Out, rascal dogs!

[Exit, beating and driving them out.

Enter FLAVIUS and two Senators.

Flav. It is in vain that you would speak with Timon;

Flav. What do you ask of me, my friends? Tit. We wait for certain money here, sir. Flav.

If money were as certain as your waiting 'Twere sure enough.

Why then preferr'd you not your sums and bills When your false masters eat of my lord's meat? Theu they could smile, and fawn upon his debts, maws.

And take down th' interest into their gluttonous You do yourselves but wrong to stir me up;

Let me pass quietly: Believe't my lord and I have made an end; I have no more to reckon, he to spend.

Luc. Serv. Ay, but this answer will not serve. Flav. If 'twill not serve 'tis not so base as

For you serve knaves. Exit. I Var. Serv. How! What does his cashier'd worship mutter?

2 Var. Serv. No matter what; he's poor, and that's revenge enough. Who can speak broader than he that has no house to put his head in? such may rail against great buildings.

Enter SERVILIUS.

Tit. O, here's Servilius; now we shall know some answer.

Ser. If I might beseech you, gentlemen, to repair some other hour, I should much derive from 't; for, take't of my soul, my lord leans wondronsly to discoutent: his comfortable temper has forsook him; he is much out of bealth, and keeps his chamber. [not sick: Luc. Serv. Many do keep their chambers are And, if it be so far beyond his bealth, Methinks he should the sooner pay his debts, And make a clear way to the gods.

Ser. Good go Til. We cannot take this for answer, sir. Good gods! Flam. [Within.] Servilius, belp!—my lord! my lord!

Enter Timon, in a rage; Flaminius following.

Tim. What, are my doors oppos'd against my passage? Have I been ever free, and must my house Be my retentive enemy, my gaol?

The place which I have feasted, does it now, Like all mankind, show me an iron heart?

Luc. Serv. Put in now, Titus. Tit. My lord, here is my bill.

Luc. Serv. Here's mine.

Hor. Serv. And mine, my lord. Both. Var. Serv. And ours, my lord.

Phi. All our bills. to the girdle. Tim. Knock me down with 'em: cleave me

Luc. Serv. Alas, my lord,-

Tim. Cut my heart in sums. Tit. Mine, fifty talents.

Tim. Tell out my blood. Luc. Serv. Five thousand crowns, my lord.

Tim. Five thousand drops pays that. What yours?-and yours?-

1 Var. Serv. My lord,-2 Var. Serv. My lord,- upon you!

Hor. Faith, I perceive our masters may throw their caps at their money: these debts may well be called desperate ones, for a madman owes 'em. Exeunt.

Re-enter Timon and Flavius.

Tim. They have e'en put my breath from me, the slaves.

Creditors!—devils.

Flav. My dear lord,— Tim. What if it should be so?

Flam. My lord,— Tim. Pil have it so.—My steward!

Flor. Here, my lord.

Tim. So fitly? Go, bid all my friends again,
Lucins, Lucullus, and Sempronius; all: I'll once more feast the rascals.

Flav. O my lord, You only speak from your distracted soul; There is not so much left to furnish ont

A moderate table. Tim. Be't not in thy care; go I charge thee, invite them all: let in the tide

Of knaves once more; my cook and I'll pro-

SCENE V.—ATHENS. The Senate House. The Senate sitting.

z Sen. My lords, you have my voice to it; the fault's

Bloody; 'tis necessary he should die: Nothing emboldens sin so much as mercy. 2 Sen. Most true; the law shall bruise him.

Enter ALCIBIADES, attended.

Alcib. Honour, health, and compassion to the senate!

r Sen. Now, captain? Alcib. I am an burnble suitor to your virtues; For pity is the virtue of the law, And none but tyrants use it cruelly. It pleases time and fortune to lie heavy Upon a friend of mine, who, in hot blood, Hath stepp'd into the law, which is past depth To those that without heed do plunge into 't. He is a man, setting his fate aside, Of comely virtues:

Nor did he soil the fact with cowardice,-An bonour in him which buys out his fauit,-But with a noble fury and fair spirit, Seeing his reputation touch'd to death,

He did oppose his foe:

And with such sober and unnoted passion He did behove his anger ere 'twas spent, As if he had but prov'd an argument.

I Sen. You undergo too strict a paradox. Striving to make an ugly deed look fair:

Your words have took such pains, as if they labour'd [quarrelling

To bring manslanghter into form, and set Upon the head of valour; which, indeed, Is valour misbegot, and came into the world When sects and factions were newly born: He s truly valiant that can wisely suffer

The worst that man can breathe; and make his wrongs [carelessly;

Tim. Tear me, take me, and the gods fall His outsides,—to wear them like his raiment, upon you! [Exit. And ne'er prefer his injuries to his heart,

Graves only be men's works and death their Sun, hide thy beams! Timon hath done his Retires to his cave.

r Sen. His discontents are unremovably Coupled to nature.

2 Sen. Our hope in him is dead: let us return, And strain what other means is left unto us In our dear peril.

z Sen.

It requires swift foot.

Exeunt.

Scene II .- The Walls of Athens. Enter two Senators and a Messenger.

I Sen. Thou hast painfully discover'd: are his files

As full as thy report?

Mess. I have spoke the least: Besides, his expedition promises Present approach. Inot Timon.

2 Sen. We stand much hazard if they bring Mess. I met a courier, one mine ancient friend;

Whom, though in general part we were oppos'd, Yet our old love had a particular force, And made us speak like friends:—this man was riding

From Alcibiades to Timon's cave With letters of entreaty, which imported His fellowship i' the cause against your city, In part for his sake mov'd.

ı Sen.

Here come our brothers.

Enter Senators from TIMON.

3 Sen. No talk of Timon, nothing of him expect.-

The enemies' drum is heard, and fearful scour-

Doth choke the air with dust: in, and prepare: Ours is the fall, I fear; our foes the snare.

[Exeunt.

Woods. SCENE III.—The Timon's Cave, and a rude Tomb seen.

Enter a Soldier seeking TIMON.

Sold. By all description this should be the (is this? place. Who's here? speak, ho!-No answer?--What Timon is dead, who hath outstretch'd his span: Some beast rear'd this; there does not live a Dead, sure; and this his grave, - what's on this I cannot read; the character I'll take with wax: Our captain hath in eyery figure skill. An ag'd interpreter, though young in days: Before proud Athens he's set down by this, Whose fall the mark of his ambition is. [Exit.

Scene IV.—Before the Walls of Athens. Enter ALCIBIADES and Trumpets sound. Forces:

Alcib. Sound to this coward and lascivious Our terrible approach.

Enter Senators on the Walls,

Till now you have gone on, and fill'd the time With all licentious measure, making your wills The scope of justice; till now, myself, and such As slept within the shadow of your power, Have wander'd with our travers'd arms, and breath'd Our sufferance vainly. Now the time is flush, When crouching marrow, in the bearer strong, Cries, of itself, No more: now breathless wrong Shall sit and pant in your great chairs of ease; And pursy insolence shall break his wind With fear and horrid flight.

I Sen.

Noble and young, When thy first griefs were but a mere conceit. Ere thou hadst power or we had cause of fear. We sent to thee, to give thy rages balm, To wipe out our ingratitude with loves Above their quantity.

So did we woo

Transformed Timon to our city's love By humble message and by promis'd means: We were not all unkind, nor all deserve

The common stroke of war.

ı Sen. These walls of ours' Were not erected by their hands from whom You have receiv'd your griefs: nor are they such That these great towers, trophies, and schools should fall

For private faults in them. 2 Sen. Nor are they living Who were the motives that you first went out; Shame, that they wanted cunning, in excess, Hath broke their hearts. March, noble lord, Into our city with thy banners spread: By decimation and a tithed death,-If thy revenges hunger for that food Itenth: Which nature loathes,—take thou the destin'd And by the hazard of the spotted die Let die the spotted.

All have not offended; ı Sen. For those that were, it is not square to take, On those that are, revenges: crimes, like lands, Are not inherited. Then, dear countryman, Bring in thy ranks, but leave without thy rage: Spare thy Athenian cradle, and those kin Which, in the bluster of thy wrath, must fall With those that have offended: like a shepherd Approach the fold and cull the infected forth, But kill not altogether.

What thou wilt, z Sen. Thou rather shalt enforce it with thy smile

Than hew to't with thy sword. Set but thy foot. Against our rampir'd gates and they shall ope; So thou wilt send thy gentle heart before To say thou'lt enter friendly.

Throw thy glove, 2 Sen. Or any token of thine honour else, That thou wilt use the wars as thy redress, And not as our confusion, all thy powers Shall make their harbour in our town till we Have seal'd thy full desire.

Then there's my glove; Alcib. Descend, and open your uncharg'd ports; Those enemies of Timon's and mine own, Whom you yourselves shall set out for reproof, Fall, and no more: and,-to atone your fears [A parley sounded. With my more noble meaning,—not a man

2 Lord. The swallow follows not summer more willingly than we your lordship. Tim. No more willingly leaves such summer-birds are men. [Aside.]-Gentlemen, our dinner will not recompense this long stay: feast your ears with the music awhile, if they will fare so harshly o' the trumpet's sound; we shall to't presently.

I Lord. I hope it remains not unkindly with your lordship that I returned you an empty messenger.

Tim. O, sir, let it not trouble you. 2 Lord. My noble lord,—

Tim. Ah, my good friend! what cheer?

2 Lord. My most honourable lord, I am e'en sick of shame that, when your lordship this other day sent to me, I was so unfortunate a heggar.
Tim. Think not on't, sir.

2 Lord. If you had sent but two hours hefore,

Tim. Let it not cumber your hetter remembrance.-Come, bring in all together. The banquet brought in.

2 Lord. All covered dishes! r Lord. Royal cheer, I warrant yon. 3 Lord. Doubt not that, if money and the season can yield it.

r Lord. How do you? What's the news? 3 Lord. Alcihiades is banished: hear you of it?

r & 2 Lord. Alcibiades hanisbed!

3 Lord. 'Tis so, be sure of it.

I Lord. How! how!

2 Lord. I pray you, npon what?

Tim. My worthy friends, will you draw near? 3 Lord. I'll tell yon more anon. Here's a noble feast toward.

2 Lord. This is the old man still.
3 Lord. Will't hold? will't hold?
2 Lord. It does: hat time will—and so,-

3 Lord. I do conceive.

Tim. Each man to his stool with that spur as he would to the lip of his mistress: your diet shall he in all places alike. Make not a city feast of it, to let the meat cool ere we can agree upon the first place: sit, sit. The gods require our thanks.

You great benefactors, sprinkle our society with thankfulness. For your own gifts make yourselves praised: but reverse still to give, lest your deities be despised. Lend to each man enough, that one need not lend to another; for, were your godheads to bor-row of men, men would forsake the gods. Make the meat be loved more than the man that gives it. Let no assembly of twenty be without a score of villains: if there sit twelve women at the table, let a dozen of them be—as they are. The rest of your fees, O gods,—the senators of Athens, together, with the common tag of people,—what is amiss in them, you gods, make suitable for destruction. For these my present friends,—as they are to me nothing, so in nothing bless them, and to nothing are they welcome.

Uncover, dogs, and lap.

[The dishes, when uncovered, are seen to be full of warm water.

Some speak. What does his lordship mean? Some other. I know not.

Tim. May you a better feast never hehold, You knot of mouth-friends! smoke and lukewarm water

Is your perfection. This is Timon's last: Who, stuck and spangled with your flatteries, Washes it off, and sprinkles in your faces

Throwing the woter in their foces. Your reeking villainy. Live loath'd and long, Most smiling, smooth, detested parasites. Courteons destroyers, affable wolves, meek bears, You fools of fortune, trencher-friends, time's Cap and knee slaves, vapours, and minnte-jacks! Of man and beast the infinite malady

Crust you quite o'er!-What, dost you go? Soft, take thy physic first, -thou too, -and thon;

Stay, I will lend thee money, borrow none .-Throws the dishes at them, and drives them out.

What, all in motion? Henceforth be no feast Whereat a villain's not a welcome guest. Burn, bouse! sink, Athens! henceforth hated be Of Timon, man, and all humanity!

Re-enter the Lords.

I Lord. How now, my lords!

2 Lord. Know you the quality of Lord Timon's fury?

3 Lord. Pish! did you see my cap? 4 Lord. I have lost my gown. 1 Lord. He's but a mad lord, and naught but humonr sways him. He gave me a jewel the other day, and now he has beat it ont of my hat:—did you see my jewel?
3 Lord. Did you see my cap?
2 Lord. Here 'tis.
4 Lord. Here lies my gown.
1 Lord. Let's make no stay.

2 Lord. Lord Timon's mad. 3 Lord.

I feel't upon my bones. . 4 Lord. One day he gives ns diamonds, next day stones. Exeunt.

ACT IV.

Scene L-Without the Walls of Athens.

Enter TIMOR.

Tim. Let me look back upon thee, O thou

That girdlest in those wolves, dive in the earth And fence not Athens! Matrons, turn incontinent!

Obedience fail in children! slaves and fools. Pluck the grave wrinkled senate from the beach And minister in their steads! to general filths Convert, o' the instant, green virginity,-Do't in your parent's eyes! bankrupts, hold fast.

Rather than render back, out with your knives And cut your trusters' throats! bound servants steal! Large-handed robbers your grave masters are, And pill by law! maid, to thy master's bed,-Thy mistress is o' the brothel! son of sixteen, Pluck the lin'd crutch from thy old limping sire. ACT I.

Scene I .- Rome. A Street.

Enter a company of mutinous Citizens, with staves, clubs, and other weapons.

i Cit. Before we proceed any further, hear me speak.

Cifizens. Speak, speak.

Conspirators with Auridius.

I Cit. You are all resolved rather to die than to famish?

· Citizens. Resolved, resolved.

i Cit. First, you know Caius Marcius is chief enemy to the people.

Citizens. We know't, we know't.

I Cit. Let us kill him, and we'll have corn at our own price. Is't a verdict?

Citizens. No more talking on't; let it be done: away, away!

would relieve us: if they would yield us but the superfluity, while it were wholesome, we might guess they relieved us humanely; but they think we are too dear: the leanness that afflicts us, the object of our misery, is an inventory to particularize their abundance; our sufferance is a gain to them.—Let us revenge this with our pikes ere we become rakes: for the gods know I speak this in hunger for bread, not in thirst for revenge.

z Cit. Would you proceed especially against Caius Marcius? I Cit. Against him first: he's a very dog to the commonalty.

2 Cit. Consider you what services he has done for his country?

r Cit. Very well; and could be content to give him good report for't, but that he pays himself with being proud.

2 Cit. One word, good citizens.

I Cit. We are accounted poor citizens; the patricians good. What authority surfeits on famously he did it to that end: though soft-

This yellow slave Will knit and break religions; bless the accurs'd; Make the hoar leprosy ador'd; place thieves, And give them title, knee, and approbation. With senators on the bench: this is it That makes the wappen'd widow wed again; She whom the spital-house and ulcerous sores Would cast the gorge at, this embalms and spices

To the April day again. Come, damned earth, Thou common whore of mankind, that putt'st odds

Among the rout of nations, I will make thee Do thy right nature.-[March afar off.] Hal a drum?—Thou'rt quick, But yet I'll bury thee: thou'lt go, strong thief, When gouty keepers of thee cannot stand:-Nay, stay thou out for earnest.

Keeping some gold.

Enter Alcibiades, with drum and fife, in warlike manner; Phrynia and Timandra.

What art thou there? speak. Tim. A beast, as thou art. The canker gnaw thy heart

For showing me again the eyes of man! Alcib. What is thy name? Is man so hateful to thee,

That art thyself a man?

Tim. I am misanthropos, and hate mankind. For thy part, I do wish thou wert a dog,

That I might love thee something. Alcib. I know thee well; But in thy fortunes am unlearn'd and strange. Tim. I know thee too; and more than that

I know thee I not desire to know. Follow thy drum; With man's blood paint the ground, gules, gules: Religious canons, civil laws are cruel; Then what should war be? This fell whore of Hath in her more destruction than thy sword.

For all her cherubin look.

Phry.Thy lips rot off! Tim. I will not kiss thee; then the rot returns To thine own lips again. [change? Alcib. How came the noble Timon to this Tim. As the moon does, by wanting light to give:

But then renew I could not, like the moon; There were no suns to borrow of.

Alcib. Noble Timon, What friendship may I do thee?

None, but to Tim. Maintain my opinion.

Alcib. What is it, Timon?

Tim. Promise me friendship, but perform none: if thou wilt not promise, the gods plague thee, for thou art a man! if thou dost perform, confound thee, for thou art a man!

Alcib. I have heard in some sort of thy miseries. (perity.

Tim. Thou saw'st them when I had pros-Alcib. I see them now; then was a blessed harlots.

Tim. As thine is now, held with a brace of Timan. Is this the Athenian minion whom the world

Voic'd so regardfully?

Tim. Art thou Timandra? Timan. Yes. [that use thee; Tim. Be a whore still they love thee not Give them diseases, leaving with thee their lust Make use of thy salt hours: season the slaves For tubs and baths; bring down rose-cheek'd youth to

The tub-fast and the diet.

Timan. Hang thee, monster! Alcib. Pardon him, sweet Timandra; for his

Are drown'd and lost in his calamities.-I have but little gold of late, brave Timon, The want whereof doth daily make revolt In my penurious band: I have heard and griev'd,

How cursed Athens, mindless of thy worth, Forgetting thy great deeds, when neighbour states.

But for thy sword and fortune, trod upon them,-

Tim. I pr'ythee, beat thy drum, and get thee Timon. Alcib. $\tilde{\mathbf{I}}$ am thy friend, and pity thee, dear Tim. How dost thou pity him whom thou dost trouble?

I had rather be alone

Why, fare thee well: Alcib.

Here is some gold for thee. Tim.

Keep it, I cannot eat it. Alcib. When I have laid proud Athens on a heap,-

Tim. Warr'st thou 'gainst Athens?

Alcib. Ay, Timon, and have cause.

Tim. The gods confound them all in thy conquest;

And thee after, when thou hast conquer'd!

Alcib. Why me, Timon? Tim. That by killing of villains, Thou wast born to conquer my country. Put up thy gold: go on,-here's gold,-go on; Be as a planetary plague, when Jove Will o'er some high-vic'd city hang his poison In the sick air: let not thy sword skip one:

Pity not honour'd age for his white beard, He is an usurer: strike me the counterfeit matron:

It is her habit only that is honest, Herself's a bawd: let not the virgin's cheek Make soft thy trenchant sword; for those milk leyes, paps,

That through the window-bars bore at men's Are not within the leaf of pity writ, But set them down horrible traitors: spare not the babe. [mercy;

Whose dimpled smiles from fools exhaust their Think it a bastard, whom the oracle

Hath doubtfully pronounc'd thy throat shall cut, And mince it sans remorse: swear against objects;

Put armour on thine ears and on thine eyes; Whose proof nor yells of mothers, maids, nor babes,

Nor sight of priests in holy vestments bleeding, Shall pierce a jot. There's gold to pay thy soldiers:

Make large confusion; and, thy fury spent, Confounded be thyself! Speak not, be gone.

Alcib. Hast thou gold yet? I'll take the gold thou giv'st me, Not all thy counsel.

Mar.

Touching the weal o' the common; you shall

No public benefit which you receive But it proceeds or comes from them to you, Andnowayfrom yourselves. - Whatdo youthink. You, the great toe of this assembly?

r Cit. I the great toe? why the great toe? Men. For that, being one o' the lowest, basest, poorest,

Of this most wise rebellion, thou go'st foremost: Thou rascal, that art worst in blood to run, Lead'st first to win some vantage. But make you ready your stiff bats and clubs: Rome and her rats are at the point of battle; The one side must have bale.

Enter Caius Marcius.

Hail, noble Marcius! Mar. Thanks.—What's the matter, you dissentious rogues,

That, rubbing the poor itch of your opinion.

Make yourselves scabs?

We have ever your good word. Mar. He that will give good words to ye will flatter curs.

Beneath abhorring .- What would you have, you That like nor peace nor war? The one affrights

The other makes you proud. He that trusts to Where he should find you lions finds you hares; Where foxes, geese: you are no surer, no, Than is the coal of fire upon the ice, Your virtue is [him, Or hailstone in the sun. To make him worthy whose offence subdues

And curse that justice did it. Who deserves greatness

Deserves your hate; and your affections are A sick man's appetite, who desires most that Which would increase his evil. He that depends Upon your favours swims with fins of lead, And hews down oaks with rushes. Hang yel

Trust ye! With every minute you do change a mind; And call him noble that was now your hate, Him vile that was your garland. What's the matter, That in these several places of the city You cry against the noble senate, who, Under the gods, keep you in awe, which else Would feed on one another?-What's their

[they say, seeking? Men. For corn at thir own rates; whereof,

The city is well stor'd. Hang 'em!. They say! Mar.They'll sit by the fire and presume to know What's done i' the Capitol; who's like to rise, Who thrives and who declines; side factions, and give out. Conjectural marriages; making parties strong, And feebling such as stand not in their liking Below their cobbled shoes. They say there's grain enough! Would the nobility lay aside their ruth And let me use my sword, I'd make a quarry With thousands of these quarter'd slaves, as high As I could pick my lance.

Men. Nay, these are almost thoroughly persuaded;

For though abundantly they lack discretion,

Yet are they passing cowardly. But, I beseech you,

What says the other troop?

They are dissolved: hang 'em! They said they were an-hungry; sigh'd forth proverbs,-That hunger broke stone walls, that dogs must

That meat was made for mouths, that the gods sent not

Corn for the rich men only:—with these shreds They vented their complainings; which being answer'd.

And a petition granted them,—a strange one, To break the heart of generosity,

And make bold power look pale,—they threw their caps moon, As they would hang them on the homs o' the Shouting their emulation

Men.What is granted them? Mar. Five tribunes, to defend their vulgar wisdoms, Of their own choice: one's Junius Brutus, Sicinius Velutus, and I know not.—'Sdeath! The rabble should have first unroof'd the city Ere so prevail'd with me: it will in time. Win upon power, and throw forth greater themes

For insurrection's arguing Меп. This is strange. Mar. Go, get you home, you fragments!

Enter a Messenger, hastily.

Mess. Where's Caius Marcius? Mar. Here: what's the matter?

Mess. The news is, sir, that Volsces are in to vent

Mar. I am glad on't: then we shall ha' means Our musty superfluity.—See, our best elders.

Enter Cominius, Titus Lartius, and other Senators; JUNIUS BRUIGS and SICINICS VELUTUS.

I Sen. Marcius, 'tis true that you have lately told us,

The Volsces are in arms. They have a leader, Tullus Aufidius, that will put you to't.

I sin in envying his nobility; And were I anything but what I am,

I would wish me only he.

You have fought together.

Com. You have fought together.

Mar. Were half to half the world by the ears, and he

Upon my party, I'd revolt, to make Only my wars with him: he is a lion That I am proud to hunt.

Then, worthy Marcius, z Sen. Attend upon Cominius to these wars.

Com. It is your former promise. Sir, it is;

And I am constant.—Titus Lartius, thou Shalt see me once more strike at Tullus' face. What, art thou stiff? stand'st out? No, Caius Marcius;

Til. I'll lean upon one crutch and fight with the other

Ere stay behind this business. O, true bred! Men.

A fool of thee: depart. Tim. Apem. I love thee better now than e'er I did.
Tim. I hate thee worse.

Why?

Thou flatter'st misery. Tim. Apem. I flatter not; hut say thou art a caitiff.

Tim. Why dost thou seek me out?

To vex thee. Abem.Tim. Always a villain's office or a fool's. Dost pleaso thyself in't?

Apem.

Ay.
Whatla knave too? Tim. Apem. If thou didst put this sour-cold hahit

To castigate thy pride, 'twere well: hut thon Dost it enforcedly; thou'dst courtier he again Wert thon not heggar. Willing misery Outlives incertain pomp, is crown'd hefore: The one is filling still, never complete; The other, at high wish: hest state, contentless, Hath a distracted and most wretched heing.

Worse than the worst, content. Thou should'st desire to die, heing miserable. Tim. Not hy his hreath that is more miser-

Thon art a slave, whom Fortune's tender arm With favour never clasp'd; but hred a dog. Hadst thou, like us from our first swath, proceeded The sweet degrees that this brief world affords To such as may the passive drugs of it Freely command, thou wouldst have plung'd thyself In general riot: melted down thy youth In different heds of lust; and never learn'd The icy precepts of respect, hut follow'd The sugar'd game hefore thee. But myself, Who had the world as my confectionary; The mouths, the tongues, the eyes, and hearts of men

At duty, more than I could frame employment; That numberless upon me stuck, as leaves Do on the oak, have with one winter's hrush Fell from their houghs, and left me open, hare For every storm that hlows;—I, to hear this, That never knew hut hetter, is some hurden: Thy nature did commence in sufferance, time Hath made thee hard in't. Why shouldst thou hate men? They never flatter'd thee: what hast thou If thou wilt curse, thy father, that poor rag, Must he thy subject; who, in spite, put stuff To some she heggar, and compounded thee Poor rogue hereditary. Hence! he gone!-If thou hadst not been horn the worst of men, Thou hadst heen a knave and flatterer.

Apem. Art thou proud yet? Tim. Ay, that I am not thee.

I, that I was Apem.

No prodigal.

Tîm. I, that I am one now: Were all the wealth I have shut up in thee, I'd give thee leave to hang it. Get thee gone. That the whole life of Athens were in this! Thus would I eat it. Eating a root.

Here: I will mend thy feast. Apem. Offering him something. Tim. First mend my company, take away thyself.

Apem. So I shall mend mine own hy the lack of thine. [botch'd: Tim. 'Tis not well mended so, it is hut

If not, I would it were.

Apem. What wouldst thou bave to Atheus?

Tim. Thee thither in a whirlwind. If thou wilt.

Tell them there I have gold; look, so I have. Apem. Here is no use for gold. Tim.

The hest and truest: For here it sleeps, and does no hired harm.

Apem. Where ly'st o' nights, Timon? Tim. Under that's above me.

Where feed'st thou o' days, Apemantus?

Apem. Where my stomach finds meat; or, rather, where I eat it.

Tim. Would poison were ohedient, and knew my mindl

Apem. Where wouldst thou send it?

Tim. To sauce thy dishes.

Apem. The middle of humanity thou never knewest, but the extremity of hoth ends: when thou wast in thy gilt and thy perfume they mocked thee for too much curiosity; in thy rags thou knowest none, but art despised for the contrary. There's a mediar for thee, eat it.

Tim. On what I hate I feed not. Apem. Dost hate a mediar?

Tim. Ay, though it look like thee.

Apem. An thou hadst hated mediars sooner, thon shouldst have loved thyself hetter now. What man didst thou ever know unthrift that was heloved after his means?

Tim. Who without those means thou talkest.

of didst thou ever know heloved?

Apem. Myself.
Tim. I understand thee; thou hadst some means to keep a dog.

Apem. What things in the world canst thou nearest compare to thy flatterers? Tim. Women nearest; hut men, men are the things themselves. What wouldst thou do with the world, Apemantus, if it lay in thy power?

Apem. Give it the heasts, to he rid of the men.

Tim. Wouldst thon have thyself fall in the confusion of men, and remain a heast with the heasts?

Apem. Ay, Timon.

Tim. A heastly amhition, which the gods grant thee t' attain tol If thou wert the lion, the fox would heguile thee: if thou wert the lamb, the fox would eat thee: if thou wert the fox, the lion would suspect thee, when, peradventure, thou wert accused by the ass: if thou wert the ass, thy dulness would torment thee; and still thou livedst hut as a hreakfast to the wolf: if thou wert the wolf, thy greediness would afflict thee, and oft thon shouldst hazard thy life for thy dinner: wert thou the unicorn; pride and wrath would confound thee, and make thine own self the conquest of thy fury: wert thou a hear, thou wouldst he killed by the horse; wert thou a horse, thou wouldst be seized by the leopard; wert thou a leopard, thou wert german to the lion, and the spots of thy kindred were jurors on thy life: all thy safety were remotion; and thy defence absence. What heast couldst thou he, that were not had eleven die nobly for their country than one voluptuously surfeit out of action.

Enter a Gentlewoman.

Gent. Madam, the Lady Valeria is come to visit you. [myself.

Vir. Beseech you, give me leave to retire Vol. Indeed you shall not.

Methinks I hear hither your husband's drum;

See him pluck Aufidius down by the hair; As children from a bear, the Volsces shunning him:

Methinks I see him stamp thus, and call thus,-Come on, you cowards! you were got in fear Though you were born in Rome: his bloody brow With his mail'd hand then wiping, forth he goes, Like to a harvest-man that's task'd to mow Or all, or lose his hire.

Vir. His bloody brow! O Jupiter, no blood! Vol. Away, you fool! it more becomes a man

Than gilt his trophy: the breasts of Hecuba, When she did suckle Hector, look'd not lovelier Than Hector's forehead when it spit forth blood At Grecian swords contending.—Tell Valeria We are fit to bid her welcome. Exit Gent.

Vir. Heavens bless my lord from fell Aufidius! Vol. He'll beat Aufidius' head below his knee, And tread upon his neck.

Re-enter Gentlewoman, with VALERIA and her Usher.

Val. My ladies both, good-day to you.

Vol. Sweet madam. Vir. I am glad to see your ladyship.

Val. How do you both? you are manifest housekeepers. What are you sewing here? A fine spot, in good faith.—How does your little son?

Vír. I thank your ladyship; well, good madam. Vol. He had rather see the swords and hear a drum than look upon his schoolmaster.

Val. O' my word, the father's son: I'll swear 'tis a very pretty boy. O' my troth, I looked upon him o' Wednesday half an hour together: has such a confirmed countenance. I saw him run after a gilded butterfly; and when he caught it he let it go again; and after it again; and over and over he comes, and up again; catched it again; or whether his fall enraged him, or how 'twas, he did so set his teeth and tear it; O, I warrant, how he mammocked it!

Vol. One on's father's moods. Val. Indeed, la, 'tis a noble child.

Vir. A crack, madam.

Val. Come, lay aside your stitchery; I must have you play the idle housewife with me this afternoon.

Vir. No, good madam; I will not out of doors.

Val. Not out of doors!

Vol. She shall, she shall.

Vir. Indeed, no, by your patience; I'll not over the threshold till my lord return from the Wars.

Val. Fie, you confine yourself most unreasonably; come, you must go visit the good lady that lies in.

Vir. I will wish her speedy strength, and visit her with my prayers; but I cannot go thither. That's lesser than a little. Hark, our drums

Vol. Why, I pray you?

Vir. 'Tis not to save labour, nor that I want love.

Val. You would be another Penelope: Yet they say all the yarn she spun in Ulysses' absence did but fill Ithaca full of moths. Come: I would your cambric were sensible as your finger, that you might leave pricking it for pity.—Come, you shall go with us.

Vir. No, good madam, pardon me; indeed!

will not forth.

Val. In truth, la, go with me; and I'll tell you excellent news of your husband.

Vir. O, good madam, there can be none yet. Val. Verily, I do not jest with you; there came news from him last night.

Vir. Indeed, madam?

Val. In earnest, it's true; I heard a senator speak it. Thus it is:-The Volsces have an army forth; against whom Cominius the general is gone, with one part of our Roman power: your lord and Titus Lertius are set down before their city Corioli; they nothing doubt prevailing, and to make it brief wars. This is true, on and to make it brief wars. This is trumine honour; and so, I pray, go with us.

Vir. Give me excuse, good madam; I will obey you in everything hereafter.

Vol. Let her alone, lady; as she is now, she will but disease our better mirth.

Val. In troth, I think she would .- Fare you well, then.—Come, good sweet lady.—Pr'ythee, Virgilia, turn thy solemness out o' door, and go along with us.

Vir. No, at a word, madam; indeed I must not. I wish you much mirth. Val. Well, then, farewell. Exeunt.

Scene IV .- Before Corioli.

Enter, with drums and colours, MARCIUS, TITUS LARTIUS, Officers, and Soldiers.

Mar. Yonder comes news:—a wager they have met.

Lart. My horse to yours, no. 'Tis done. Mar.

. Agreed. Lart.

Enter a Messenger.

Mar. Say, has our general met the enemy? Mess. They lie in view; but have not spoke as yet.

Lart. So, the good horse is mine.

I'll buy him of you. Mor. Lart. No, I'll nor sell nor give him: lend. you him I will

For half a hundred years.—Summon the town. Mar. How far off lie these armies?

Within this mile and half. Mess.

Mar. Then shall we hear their 'larum, and they ours.

Now, Mars, I pr'ythee, make us quick in work, That we with smoking swords may march from hence

To help our fielded friends!—Come, blow thy

They sound a parley. Enter, on the Walls, some Senators and others.

Tullus Aufidius, is he within your walls? [he, r Sen. No, nor a man that fears you less than Break open shops; nothing can you steal
But thieves do lose it: steal not less for this
I give you; and gold confound you howsoe'er!
Amen. [TIMON retires to his care.
3 Thief. Has almost charmed me from my profession by persuading me to it.

I Thief. 'Tis in the malice of mankind that he thus advises us; not to have us thrive in our mystery.

2 Thief. I'll believe him as an enemy, and give over my trade.

1 Thief. Let us first see peace in Athens: there is no time so miserable but a man may be true.

[Exeunt Thieves.

Enter FLAVIUS.

Flav. O yon gods!
Is yon despis'd and ruinous man my lord?
Full of decay and failing? O monument
And wonder of good deeds evilly bestow'd!
What an alteration of honour
Has desperate want made!

What viler thing upon the earth than friends Who can bring noblest minds to basest ends! How rarely does it meet with this time's guise, When man was wish'd to love his enemies! Grant I may ever love, and rather woo

Those that would mischief me than those that do!— Has caught me in his eye: I will present My honest grief unto him; and, as my lord, Still serve him with my life.—My dearest master!

TIMON comes forward from his cave.

Tim. Away! what art thou?

Flav. Have you forgot me, sir?

Tim. Why dost ask that? I have forgot all

Then, if thou grant'st thou'rt a man, I have forgot thee.

Flav. An honest poor servant of yours.

Tim. Then I know thee not:
I ne'er had honest man about me, I; all

I kept were knaves, to serve in meat to villains.

Flav. The gods are witness,

Ne'er did poor steward wear a truer grief For his undone lord than mine eyes for you. Tim. What, dost thou weep?—come nearer;

—then I love thee
Becanse thou art a women, and disclaim'st
Flinty mankind; whose eyes do never give
But through lust and laughter. Pity's sleeping:
Strange times, that weep with langhing, not with weeping!

Flav. I beg of you to know me, good my lord, [wealth lasts, To accept my grief, and, whilst this poor

To entertain me as your steward still.

Tim. Had I a steward

So true. so just, and now so comfortable?

It almost turns my dangerous nature mild.

Let me behold thy face. Surely, this man

Was born of woman.—
Forgive my general and exceptless rashness,
Yon perpetual-sober gods! I do proclaim
One honest man,—mistake me not,—but one;
Ro more, I pray,—and he's a steward.—
How fain would I have hated all mankind!

And thou redeem'st thyself: but all, save thee, I fell with curses.

Methinks thou art more honest now than wise; For by oppressing and betraying me

Thou might'st have sooner got another service: For many so arrive at second masters true, Upon their first lord's neck. But tell me For I must ever doubt, though ne'er so sure, Is not thy kindness subtle, covetous,

If not a usuring kindness, and, as rich men deal gifts,

Expecting in return twenty for one? [breast Flav. No, my most worthy master; in whose Donbt and suspect, alas, are plac'd too late: You should have fear'd false times when you did feast:

Suspect still comes where an estate is least. That which I show, heaven knows, is merely love.

Duty, and zeal to your unmatched mind, Care of your food and living; and, believe it,

My most honour'd lord,
For any benefit that points to me,
Either in hope or present, I'd exchange
For this one wish,—that you had power and wealth

To requite me, by making rich yourself.

Tim. Look thee, 'tis so!—Thou singly honest man,

Here, take:—the gods, out of my misery,
Have sent thee treasure. Go, live rich and happy; [men; Bnt thus condition'd:—thou shalt build from Hate all, curse all; show charity to none; But let the famish'd fiesh slide from the bone Fre then relieve the happen since to down

Ere thon relieve the beggar: give to dogs
What thou deny'st to men; let prisons swallow
'em, [blasted woods,

Debts wither 'em to nothing; be men like And may diseases lick up their false bloods! And so, farewell and thrive.

Flav. O, let me stay, And comfort you, my master.

And comfort you, my master.

Tim. If thou hat'st curses,
Stay not; but fly whilst thou'rt bless'd and free:
Ne'er see thon man, and let me ne'er see thee.
[Exeunt severally.

ACT V.

Scene I.—The Woods. Before Timon's Cave.

Enter Poet and Painter; TIMON watching them from his cave.

Pain. As I took note of the place, it cannot be far where he abides.

Post. What's to be thought of him? Does the rumour hold for true that he's so full of gold?

Pain. Certain: Alcibiades reports it; Phrynia and Timandra had gold of him: he likewise enriched poor straggling soldiers with great quantity: 'tis said he gave unto his steward a mighty sum.

Poet. Then this breaking of his has been but a try for his friends.

Pain. Nothing else: you shall see him a palm in Athens again, and flourish with the highest. Therefore, 'tis not amiss we tender our loves to Scene VI.—Near the Camp of Cominius.

Enter COMINIUS and Forces, retreating.

Com. Breathe you, my friends: well fought; we are come off

Like Romans, neither foolish in our stands Nor cowardly in retire: believe me, sirs, We shall be charg'd again. Whiles we have struck.

By interims and conveying gusts we have heard The charges of our friends. Ye Roman gods, Lead their successes as we wish our own, That both our powers, with smiling fronts encountering.

May give you thankful sacrifice!-

. Enter a Messenger.

Mess. The citizens of Corioli have issued, And given to Lartius and to Marcius battle: I saw our party to their trenches driven, And then I came away.

Com. Though thou speak'st truth, Methinks thou speak'st not well. How long is't since?

Mess. Above an hour, my lord.

Com. 'Tis not a mile; briefly we heard their drums:

How couldst thou in a mile confound an hour,

And bring thy news so late?

Mess. Spies of the Volsces

Held me in chase, that I was forc'd to wheel Three or four miles about; else had I, sir, Half an hour since brought my report.

Com. Who's yonder, That does appear as he were flay'd? O gods! He has the stamp of Marcius; and I have Before-time seen him thus.

Mar. [Within.] Come I too late?

Com. The shepherd knows not thunder from a tabor

More than I know the sound of Marcius' tongue From every meaner man.

Enter MARCIUS.

Mar. Come I too late?

Com. Ay, if you come not in the blood of others,

But mantled in your own.

Mar. Ol let me clip you In arms as sound as when I woo'd; in heart As merry as when our nuptial day was done, And tapers burn'd to bedward!

Com. Flower of warriors,

How is't with Titus Lartius?

Mar. As with a man busied about decrees: Condemning some to death and some to exile; Ransoming him or pitying, threat'ning the other; Holding Corioli in the name of Rome, Even like a fawning greyhound in the leash, To let him slip at will.

Com. Where is that slave Which told me they had beat you to your trenches?

Where's he? call him hither.

Mar. Let him alone; did inform the truth: but for our gentlemen,

The common file,—a plaguel—tribunes for them!— budge
The mouse ne'er shunn'd the cat as they did
From rascals worse than they.

Com. But how prevail'd you?
Mar. Will the time serve to tell? I do not think.

Where is the enemy? are you lords o' the field?

If not, why cease you till you are so?

Com. Marcius, We have at disadvantage fought, and did

Retire, to win our purpose.

Mar. How lies their battle? know you on which side

They have placed their men of trust?

Com. As I guess, Marcius,

Their bands in the vaward are the Antiates, Of their best trust; o'er them Aufidius, Their very heart of hope.

Mar. I do beseech you,
By all the battles wherein we have fought,
By the blood we have shed together, by the Yows

We have made to endure friends, that you directly

Set me against Aufidius and his Antiates; And that you not delay the present, but, Filling the air with swords advanc'd and darts, We prove this very hour.

Com.

Though I could wish
You were conducted to a gentlo bath,
And balms applied to you, yet dare I never Deny your asking: take your choice of those
That best can aid your action.

Mar. Those are they That most are willing.—If any such be here,—As it were sin to doubt,—that love this painting Wherein you see me smear'd; if any fear Lesser his person than an ill report; If any think brave death outweighs bad life, And that his country's dearer than himself; Let him alone, or so many so minded, Wave thus [waving his hand], to express his disposition,

And follow Marcius.

[They all shout, and wave their swords; take him up in their arms, and cast up their caps.

O, me alone! make you a sword of me?

If these shows be not outward, which of you But is four Volsces? none of you but is Able to bear against the great Aufidius A shield as hard as his. A certain number, Though thanks to all, must I select from all:

the rest
Shall bear the business in some other fight,
As cause will be obey'd. Please you to march;
And four shall quickly draw out my command,
Which men are best inclin'd.

Com. March on, my fellows:
Make good this estentation, and you shall Divide in all with us. [Excunt.

Scene VII .- The Gates of Corioli.

Titus Lartius, having set a guard upon Corioli, going with drum and trumpet towards COMINIUS and CAIUS MARCIUS, enters with a Lieutenant, a party of Soldiers, and a Scout.

Lart. So, let the ports be guarded: keep your duties

For he is set so only to himself
That nothing but himself, which looks like man,
Is friendly with him.
I Sen.
Bring us to his cave:

It is our part and promise to the Athenians

To speak with Timon. 2 Sen.

2 Sen. At all times alike Men are not still the same: 'twas time and griefs [hand, That fram'd him thus: time, with his fairer

Offering the fortunes of his former days,

The former man may make him. Bring us to him, And chance it as it may.

Flav. Here is his cave.—
Peace and content be here! Lord Timon!

Look out, and speak to friends; the Athenians, By two of their most reverend senate, greet thee:

Speak to them, noble Timon.

TIMON comes from his care.

Tim. Thou sun, that comfort'st, burn!—
Speak and be hang'd:
For each true word a blister! and each false
Be as a cauterizing to the root o' the tongue,
Consuming it with speaking!

1 Sen. Worthy Timon,— Tim. Of none but such as you, and you of Timon. [Timon.

I Sen. The senators of Athens greet thee,
Tim. I thank them; and would send them back the plague,

Could I but catch it for them.

I Sen. O, forget
What we are sorry for ourselves in thee.
The senators with one consent of love
Entreat thee back to Athens; who have thought
On special dignities, which vacant lie
For thy best use and wearing.

2 Sen. . They confess Toward thee forgetfulness too general, gross: Which now the public body,—which doth seldom

Play the recanter,—feeling in itself
A lack of Timon's aid, hath sense withal
Of its own fail, restraining aid to Timon;
And send forth us to make their sorrow'd render.

Together with a recompense more fruitful Than their offence can weigh down by the dram; Ay, even such heaps and sums of love and wealth As shall to thee blot out what wrongs were theirs, And write in thee the figures of their love, Even to read them thine.

Tim. You witch me in it; Surprise me to the very brink of teers: Lend me a fool's heart and a woman's eyes, And I'll beweep these comforts, worthy senators.

r Sen. Therefore so please thee to return with us.

And of our Athens,—thine and ours,—to take The captainship, thon shalt be met with thanks, Allow'd with absolute power, and thy good name Live with authority:—so soon we shall drive back Of Alcibiades the approaches wild; Who, like a boar too savage, doth root up His country's peace.

2 Sen. And shakes his threat'ning sword Against the walls of Athens.

I Sen. Therefore, Timon,— Tim. Well, sir, I will; therefore, I will, sir; thus,—

If Alcibiades kill my countrymen, Let Alcibiades know this of Timon, [Athens, That Timon cares not. But if he sack fair And take our goodly aged men by the beards, Giving our holy virgins to the stain

Of Contumelious, beastly, mad-brain'd war; Then let him know,—and tell him Timon speaks it,

In rity of our aged and our youth,—
I cannot choose but tell him that I care not.
And let him tak't at worst; for their knives care not.

While you have throats to answer; for myself, There's not a whittle in the unruly camp But I do prize it at my love, before from the reverend st throat in Athens. So I leave To the protection of the prosperous gods, As thieres to keepers.

Flar. Stay not, all's in vain.
Tim. Why, I was writing of my epitaph;
It will be seen to-morrow: my long sickness
Of health and living now begins to mend,
And nothing brings me all things. Go, live still:

Be Alcibiades your plague, you his, And last so long enough!

I Sen. We speak in vain.

Tim. But yet I love my country; and am not
One that rejoices in the common wreck,
As common bruit doth put it.

r Sen. That's well spoke.

Tim. Commend me to my loving countrymen.—

1 Sen. These words become your lips as they pass through them. | triumphers 2 Sen. And enter in our ears like great

In their applauding gates.

Tim.

Commend me to them;
And tell them that, to ease them of their griefs,
Their fears of hostile strokes, their aches, losses,
Their pangs of love, with other incident throes

That nature's fragile vessel doth sustain
In life's uncertain voyage, I will some kindness do them,— wrath.

I'll teach them to prevent wild Alcibiades'
1 Sen. I like this well; he will return again.
Tim. I have a tree, which grows here in my close,

That mine own use invites me to cut down, And shortly must I fell it: tell my friends, Tell Athens, in the sequence of degree, From high to low throughout, that whoso please To stop affiiction, let him take his halter, Come hither, ere my tree hath felt the zae, And hang himself.—I pray you, do my greeting.

And hang himself.—I gray you, do my greeting.

Flav. Trouble him no further; thus you still shall find him. [Athens,

Tim. Come not to me again: but say to Timon hath made his everlasting measion Upon the beached verge of the salt flood; Who once a day with his embossed froth The turbulent surge shall cover: thither come, And let my grave-stone be your oracle.—Lips, let sour words go by and language end: What is amiss, plague and infection mend!

Bear the addition nobly ever!

Flourish. Trumpets sound, and drums. Caius Marcius Coriolenus!

Cor. I will go wash;

And when my face is fair you shall perceive Whether I blush or no: howbeit, I thank you. I mean to stride your steed; and at all times To undercrest your good addition

To the fairness of my power.

Com. So, to our tent; Where, ere we do repose us, we will write To Rome of our success.—You, Titus Lartius, Must to Corioli back: send us to Rome The best, with whom we may articulate, For their own good and ours.

Lart.

Cor. The gods begin to mock me. I, that now hound to beg Refus'd most princely gifts, am bound to beg

Of my lord general.

Com. Take't: 'tis yours .- What is't? Cor. I sometime lay here in Corioli At a poor man's house; he us'd me kindly: He cried to me; I saw him prisoner; But then Aufidius was within my view. And wrath o'erwhelm'd my pity: I request you To give my poor host freedom. Com. O, well begg'd!

Were he the butcher of my son he should Be free as is the wind. Deliver him, Titus.

Lort. Marcius, his name?

Cor. By Jupiter, forgot:-I am weary; yea, my memory is tir'd.-Have we no wine here?

Go we to our tent: The blood upon your visage dries; 'tis time It should be look'd to: come. Exeunt.

ACT II.

Scene I.—Rome. A public Place.

Enter Menerics, Sicinics, and Brutus.

Men. The augurer tells me we shall have news tonight.

Bru. Good or bad?

Men. Not according to the prayer of the people, for they love not Marcius.

Sic. Nature teaches beasts to know their friends.

Men. Pray you, who does the wolf love? Sic. The lamb.

Men. Ay, to devour him; as the hungry plebeisns would the noble Marcius.

Bru. He's a lamb indeed, that bass like a

Both Trib. Well, sir. Men. In what enormity is Marcius poor is, that you two have not in abundance? Bru. He's poor in no one fault, but stored with ell.

Sic. Especially in pride.

Bru. And topping all others in boasting. Men. This is strange now: do you two know how you are censured here in the city, I mean of us o' the right-hand file? Do you?

Both Trib. Why, how are we censured? Men. Because you talk of pride now, - will you not be engry?

Both Trib. Well, well, sir, well.

Men. Why, 'tis no great matter; for a very little thief of occasion will rob you of a great deal of patience: give your dispositions the reins, and be angry at your pleasures; at the least, if you take it as a pleasure to you in. You blame Marcius for being proud? being so.

Bru. We do it not alone, sir.

Men. I know you can do very little alone; for your helps are many, or else your zetions would grow wondrous single: your abilities are too infant-like for doing much alone. You talk of pride: O that you could turn you eyes toward the napes of your necks, and make but an interior survey of your good selves! O that von could!

Bru. What then, sir?

Men. Why, then you should discover a brace of unmeriting, proud, violent, testy magistrates, -alias, fools,—as any in Rome.

Sic. Menenius, you are known well enough too.

Shall pass his quarter or offend the stream Of regular justice in your city's bounds. But shall be render'd to your public laws But snan be asswer.
At heaviest answer.
Tis most nobly spoken.

Both. 'Tis most nobly spoken.
Alcib. Descend, and keep your words.
[The Senators descend and open the gates.

Enter a Soldier.

Sol. My noble general, Timon is dead: Entomb'd upon the very hem o' the sea; And on his grave-stone this insculpture, which With wax I brought away, whose soft impression Interprets for my poor ignorance.

Alcib. [Reads.] Here lies a wretched corse, of wretched soul bereft:

Seek not my name: a plague consume you wicked caitiffs left!

Here lie I, Timon; who, alive, all living men did hate:

Pass by, and curse thy fill; but pass, and stay not here thy gait.

These well express in thee thy latter spirits: Though thou abhorr'dst in us our human griefs, Scorn'dst our brain's flow, and those our droplets which

From niggard nature fall, yet rich conceit Taught thee to make vast Neptune weep for aye On thy low grave, on faults forgiven. Dead Is noble Timon: of whose memory Hereafter more.—Bring me into your city, And I will use the olive with my sword: Make war breed peace; make peace stint war; make each Prescribe to other, as each other's leech. Let our drums strike.

Exeunt.

Within Corioli gates: where he hath won. With fame, a name to Caius Marcius; these In honour follows Coriolanus: Welcome to Rome, renowned Coriolanus!

Cor. My gracious silence, hail! Wouldst thou have laugh'd had I come coffin'd home.

That weep'st to see me triumph? Ah, my dear, Such eves the widows in Corioli wear, And mothers that lack sons.

Men. Now the gods crown thee! Cor. And live you yet?-O my sweet lady, To VALERIA. Vol. I know not where to turn.—O, welcome home:all.

And welcome, general; and you are welcome Men. A hundred thousand welcomes .- I could weep Welcome: And I could laugh; I am light and heavy.-A curse begin at very root on's heart That is not glad to see thee!-You are three

We call a nettle but a nettle; and The faults of fools but folly. Com. Ever right.

·Cor. Menenius, ever, ever.

Vol.

Her. Give way there, and go on!
Cor.
Your hand, and yours:

(To his wife and mother.

Ere in our own house I do shade my head, The good patricians must be visited; From whom I have receiv'd not only greetings, But with them change of honours.

I have lived To see inherited my very wishes, And the buildings of my fancy: only There's one thing wanting, which I doubt not Our Rome will cast upon thee.

Cor. Know, good mother,

I had rather he their servant in my way Than sway with them in theirs.

On, to the Capitol. Com[Flourish. Cornels. Exeunt in state, as before. The Tribunes remain. Bru. All tongues speak of him, and the hleared sights Are spectacled to see him: your prattling nurse Into a rapture lets her bahy cry While she chats him: the kitchen malkin pins

Her richest lockram 'bout her reechy neck. Clambering the walls to eye him: stalls, bulks, windows,

Are smother'd up, leads fill'd, and ridges hors'd With variable complexions; all agreeing In earnestness to see him: seld-shown flamens Do press among the popular throngs, and puff To win a vulgar station: our veil'd dames Commit the war of white and damask, in Their nicely gawded cheeks, to the wanton spoil Of Phoebus' burning kisses: such a pother, As if that whatsoever god who leads him Were slily crept into his human powers, And gave him graceful posture.

Sic. On the sudden. I warrant him consul.

Bru.

Then our office may, During his power, go sleep. Sic. He cannot temperately transport his From where he should begin and end; but will Lose those that he hath won.

Bru. In that there's comfort. Sic. Doubt not the commoners, for whom we Stand.

But they, upon their ancient malice, will forget, With the least cause, these his new honours;

That he'll give them make as little question As he is proud to do't.

I heard him swear, Were he to stand for consul, never would he Appear i' the market-place, nor on him put The napless vesture of humility;

Nor, showing, as the manner is, his wounds To the people, heg their stinking breaths.

Sic. 'Tis right. Bru. It was his word: O, he would miss it rather him. Than carry it but by the suit of the gentry to

And the desire of the nobles. I wish no better Than have him hold that purpose, and to put it

In execution. Bru. 'Tis most like he will.

Sic. It shall be to him then, as our good wills, A sure destruction.

So it must fall out To him or our authorities. For an end, We must suggest the people in what hatred He still hath held them; that to's power he

Have made them mules, silenc'd their pleaders, Dispropertied their freedoms: holding them, In human action and capacity, Of no more soul nor fitness for the world

Than camels in their war; who have their provand

Only for bearing burdens, and sore blows For sinking under them.

This, as you say, suggested At some time when his soaring insolence Shall touch the people,—which time shall not want. If it be put upon't; and that's as easy As to set dogs on sheep,—will be his fire To kindle their dry stubble; and their blaze Shall darken him for ever.

Citizens. Come, come.

1 Cit. Soft! who comes here?

2 Cit. Worthy Menenius Agrippa; one that hath always loved the people.

I Cit. He's one honest enough; would all the rest were so!

Enter Menenius Agrippa.

Men. What work's, my countrymen, in hand? where go you
With hats and cluhs? the matter? speak, I

pray you.

1 Cit. Our husiness is not unknown to the senate; they have had inkling this fortnight what we intend to do, which now we'll show They say poor suitors have 'em in deeds. strong hreaths; they shall know we have strong arms too.

Men. Why, masters, my good friends, mine honest neighbours,

Will you undo yourselves?

r Cit. We cannot, sir, we are undone already. Men. I tell you, friends, most charitable care Have the patricians of you. For your wants, Your suffering in this dearth, you may as well Strike at the heaven with your staves as lift them Against the Roman state; whose course will on The way it takes, cracking ten thousand curhs Of more strong link asunder than can ever

Appear in your impediment: for the dearth, The gods, not the patricians, make it; and Your knees to them, not arms, must help.

Alack,

You are transported by calamity Slander Thither where more attends you; and you The helms o' the state, who care for you like fathers,

When you curse them as enemies.

i Cit. Care for us! True, indeed! They ne'er cared for us yet. Suffer us to famish, and their storehouses crammed with grain; make edicts for usury, to support usurers; repeal daily any wholesome act established against the rich; and provide more piercing statutes daily, to chain up and restrain the poor. If the wars eat us not up, they will; and there's all the love they bear us.

Men. Either yon must Confess yourselves wondrous malicious, Or he accus'd of folly. I shall tell you A pretty tale: it may he you have heard it; But, since it serves my purpose, I will venture

To stale't a little more.

1 Cit. Well, I'll hear it, sir: yet you must not think to fob-off our disgrace with a tale: but, an't please you, deliver.

Men. There was a time when all the body's memhers

Rehell'd against the helly; thus accus'd it:-That only like a gulf it did remain I' the midst o' the hody, idle and unactive, Still cupboarding the viand, never bearing Like labour with the rest; where the other instruments

Did see and hear, devise, instruct, walk, feel, And, mutually participate, did minister Unto the appetite and affection common of the whole body. The belly answered,—

I Cit. Well, sir, what answer made the helly?

Men. Sir, I shall tell you.—With a kind of smile, thus. Which ne'er came from the lungs, hut even For, look you, I may make the belly smile As well as speak, -- it tauntingly replied To the discontented members, the mutinous parts That envied his receipt; even so most fitly As you malign our senators for that

They are not such as you. Your helly's answer? What! I Cit. The kingly-crowned head, the vigilant eye, The counsellor heart, the arm our soldier, Our steed the leg, the tongue our trumpeter, With other muniments and petty helps In this other fabric, if that they,

What then?-Men. 'Fore me, this fellow speaks!-what then? (restrain'd what then?

I Cit. Should by the cormorant helly he Who is the sink o' the body,-Well, what then? Men.

I Cit. The former agents, if they did complain,

What could the belly answer?

I will tell you; Men. If you'll bestow a small, of what you have little,- Patience awhile, you'll hear the belly's answer

I Cit. You are long about it. Note me this, good friend; Men. Your most grave helly was deliberate, Not rash like his accusers, and thus answer'd: True is it, my incorporate friends, quoth he, That I receive the general food at first Which you do live upon; and fit it is, Becouse I am the storehouse and the shop Of the whole body: but, if you do remember, I send it through the rivers of your blood, Even to the court, the heart,-to the seat o' the brain: And, through the cranks and offices of man, The strongest nerves and small inferior veins From me receive that natural competency Whereby they live: and though that all at once You, my good friends, this says the belly, mark me,- r Cit. Ay, sir; well, well.

Though all at once cannot See what I do deliver out to each, Yet I can make my audit up, that all From me do back receive the flour of all, What say you to't? And leave me but the bran. I Cit. It was an answer: how apply you this? Men. The senators of Rome are this good belly, And you the mutinous members: for, examine Their counsels and their cares; digest things rightly

When with his Amazonian chin he drove The bristled lips before him: he bestrid An o'erpress'd Roman, and i' the consul's view Slew three opposers: Tarquin's self he met, And struck him on his knee: in that day's feats, When he might act the woman in the scene. He prov'd best man i' the field, and for his meed Was brow-bound with the oak. His pupil age Man-enter'd thus, he waxed like a sea; And in the brunt of seventeen battles since He lurch'd all swords of the garland. For this last,

Before and in Corioli, let me say, I cannot speak him home: he stopp'd the fliers; And by his rare example made the coward Turn terror into sport: as weeds before A vessel under sail, so men obey'd, And fell below his stem: his sword,-death's stamp, Where it did mark, it took; from face to foot He was a thing of blood, whose every motion Was timed with dying cries: alone he enter'd The mortal gate of the city, which he painted With shunless destiny; aidless came off, And with a sudden re-enforcement struck Corioli like a planet. Now all's his: When, by and by, the din of war 'gan pierce His ready sense then straight his doubled spirit Re-quicken'd what in flesh was fatigate, And to the battle came he; where he did Run reeking o'er the lives of men as if 'Twere a perpetual spoil: and till we call'd Both field and city ours he never stood To ease his breast with panting.

Worthy man! Men. 1 Sen. He cannot but with measure fit the honours

Which we devise him.

Our spoils he kick'd at; Com. And look'd upon things precious as they were The common muck of the world: he covets less Than misery itself would give; rewards His deeds with doing them; and is content To spend the time to end it.

Men. He's right noble: Let him be call'd for. 1 Sen. Call Coriolanus.

Off. He doth appear.

Re-enter CORIOLANUS.

Men. The senate, Coriolanus, are well pleas'd

To make thee consul.

I do owe them still Cor.

My life and services.

Men. It then remains That you do speak to the people.

I do beseech you Cor. Let me o'erleap that custom; for I cannot Put on the gown, stand naked, and entreat them,

For my wounds' sake, to give their suffrage:

please you

That I may pass this doing. Sir, the people Sic. Must have their voices; neither will they bate One jot of ceremony.

Men. Put them not to't:- Take to you, as your predecessors have, Your honour with your form.

Cor. It is a part That I shall blush in acting, and might well Be taken from the people.

Mark you that? Cor. To brag unto them, - thus I did, and Show them the unaching scars which I should

As if I had receiv'd them for the hire Of their breath only!-

Do not stand upon't .-We recommend to you, tribunes of the people, Our purpose to them;—and to our noble consul Wish we all joy and honour.

Sen. To Coriolanus come all joy and honour! Flourish. Exeunt all but Sic. and BRV.

Bru. You see how he intends to use the people.

Sic. May they perceive's intent! He will requite them

As if he did contemn what he requested Should be in them to give.

Come, we'll inform them Of our proceedings here: on the market-place I know they do attend us. Exeunt.

Scene III.—Rome. The Forum. Enter several Citizens."

1 Cit. Once, if he do require our voices, we ought not to deny him.

2 Cit. We may, sir, if we will.

3 Cit. We have power in ourselves to do it, but it is a power that we have no power to do: for if he show us his wounds and tell us his deeds, we are to put our tongues into those wounds, and speak for them; so, if he tell us his noble deeds, we must also tell him our noble acceptance of them. Ingratitude is monstrous: and for the multitude to be ingrateful, were to make a monster of the multitude; of the which we, being members, should bring ourselves to be monstrous members.

1 Cit. And to make us no better thought of, a little help will serve; for once we stood up about the corn, he himself stuck not to call us-the many-headed multitude.

3 Cit. We have been called so of many; not that our heads are some brown, some black, some auburn, some bald, but that our wits are so diversely coloured; and truly I think, if all our wits were to issue out of one skull, they would fly east, west, north, south; and their consent of one direct way should be at once to all the points o' the compass.

Which way do you 2 Cit. Think you so?

judge my wit would fly?

3 Cit. Nay, your wit will not so soon out as another's man's will,—'tis strongly wedged up in a block-head; but if it were at liberty, 'twould sure, southward.

2 Cit. Why that way?

3 Cit. To lose itself in a fog; where being three parts melted away with rotten dews, the fourth would return, for conscience 'sake, to help to get thee a wife.

2 Cit. You are never without your tricks:-

Exeunt.

Scene II .- Corioli. The Senate House. Enter TULLUS AUFIDIUS and certain Senators.

1 Sen. So, your opinion is, Aufidius, That they of Rome are enter'd in our counsels,

And know how we proceed. Auf. Is it not yours? What ever hath been thought on in this state, That could be brought to bodily act ere Rome Had circumvention! 'Tis not four days gone Since I heard thence these are the words: I

I have the letter here; yes here it is: [Reads. They have press'd power, but it is not known than thine and my good Marcius, I had rather

Whether for east or west: the dearth is great: The people mutinous: and it is rumour'd, Cominius, Marcius your old enemy,— Who is of Ron e worse hated than of you,-And Titus Lartius, a most valiant Roman, These three lead on this preparation Whither 'tis bent: most likely 'tis for you: Consider of it.

ı Sen. Our army's in the field: We never yet made doubt but Rome was ready To answer us.

Auf. Nor did you think it folly To keep your great pretences veil'd till when They needs must show themselves; which in the hatching,

It seem'd, appear'd to Rome. By the discovery We shall be shorten'd in our aim; which was, To take in many towns ere, almost, Rome Should know we were afoot

2 Sen. Noble Aufidius, Take your commission; hie you to your bands: Let us alone to guard Corioli: If they set down before's, for the remove Bring up your army; but I think you'll find They've not prepar'd for us.

O, doubt not that; Auf. I speak from certainties. Nay, more, Some parcels of their power are forth already, And only hitherward. I leave your honours. If we and Caius Marcius chance to meet,

'Tis sworn between us we shal ever strike Till one can do no more. All. The gods assist you! .

Auf. And keep your honours safe! ı Sen. Farewell. Farewell.

2 Sen. All. Farewell.

Scene III.—Rome. An Abartment in MARCIUS' House.

Enter Volumnia and Virgilia: they sit. down on two low stools and sew.

Vol. I pray you, daughter, sing, or express yourself in a more comfortable sort: if my son were my husband, I should freelier rejoice in that absence wherein he won honour than in the embracements of his bed where he would show most love. When yet he was but tenderbodied, and the only son of my womb; when youth with comeliness plucked all gaze his . way; when, for a day of king's entreaties, a mother should not sell him an hour from her beholding; I.—considering how honour would become such a person; that it was no better than picture-like to hang by the wall if renown made it not stir,—was pleased to let him seek danger where he was like to find fame. cruel war I sent him; from whence he returned, his brows bound with oak. I tell thee, daughter, I sprang not more in joy at first hearing he was a man-child than now in first seeing he had proved himself a man.

I have no further with you:—was not this mockery?

Sic. Why, either were you ignorant to see't?
Or, seeing it, of such childish friendliness

To yield your voices?

Bru. Could you not have told him,

And his old hate unto you: besides, forget not
With what contempt he wore the humble weed;
How in his suit he scorn'd you: but your loves,
Thinking upon his services, took from you
The apprehension of his present portance,

It gives me an estate of seven years' health; in which time I will make a lip at the physician: the most sovereign prescription in Galen is but empiricutic, and; to this preservative, of no better report than a horse-drench. Is he not wounded? he was wont to come home wounded.

Vir. O, no, no, no. Vol. O, he is wounded, I thank the gods for't. Men. So do I too, if it he not too much .-Brings a victory in his pocket?-The wounds hecome him.

Vol. On's brows: Menenius, he comes the third time home with the oaken garland.

Men. Has he disciplined Aufidius soundly? Vol. Titus Lartius writes,—they fought together, but Aufidins got off.

Men. And 'twas time for him too, I'll warrant him that: an he had stayed by him, I would not have been so fidinged for all the chests in Corioli, and the gold that's in them. Is the senate possessed of this?

Vol. Good ladies, let's go.—Yes, yes, yes; the senate has letters from the general, wherein he gives my son the whole name of the war: he hath in this action outdone his former deeds doubly.

Val. In troth, there's wondrous things spoke

Vir. The gods grant them true!
Vol. True! pow, wow.
Men. True! I'll he sworn they are true.—
Where is he wounded?—[To the Tribunes, trho come forward.) God save your good worships! Marcius is coming home: he has more canse to he proud .- Where is he wounded?

Vol. I' the shoulder and i' the left arm: there will he large cicatrices to show the people when he shall stand for his place. He received in the repulse of Tarquin seven hurts i' the body.

Men. One i' the neck and two i' the thigh,there's nine that I know.

Vol. He had, before this last expedition, twenty-five wounds npon him.

Men. Now it's twenty-seven: every gesh was an enemy's grave. [A shout and flourish.] Hark! the trumpets.

Vol. These are the nshers of Marcius: before He carries noise, and behind him he leaves Death, that dark spirit, in's nervy arm doth lie; die.

Which, being advanc'd, declines, and then men

A sennet. Trumpets sound. Enter COMINIUS and Titus Lartius; between them, Corio-LANUS, crowned with an oaken garland; with Captains, Soldiers, and a Herald.

Who bow'd but in my stirrup, bend like his That hath receiv'd an alms!—I will not do't; Lest I surcease to honour mine own truth, And by my body's action teach my mind A most inherent baseness.

Vol. At thy choice, then: To beg of thee, it is my more dishonour Than thou of them. Come all to ruin: let Thy mother rather feel thy pride than fear Thy dangerous stoutness; for I mock at death With as big heart as thou. Do as thou list. Thy valiantness was mine, thou suck'dst it from me:

But owe thy pride thyself.

Cor. Pray, be content: Mother, I am going to the market-place; Chide me no more. I'll mountebank their

Bru. In this point charge him home, that he affects Tyrannical power: if he evade us there, Enforce him with his envy to the people; And that the spoil got on the Antiates Was ne'er distributed.

Enter an Ædile.

What, will he come?

Æd. He's coming.

Bru. How accompanied? Æd. With old Menenius, and those senators That always favour'd him.

Have you a catalogue Of all the voices that we have procur'd,

Set down by the poil? I have: 'tis ready. Sic. Have you collected them by tribes? Æd. I have.

Sic. Assemble presently the people hither: And when they hear me say, It shall be so I' the right and strength o' the commons, be it [them, either

Cor. Shall I be charg'd no further than this present?

Must all determine here? I do demand, If you submit you to the people's voices, Allow their officers, and are content To suffer lawful censure for such faults. As shall be proved upon you?

I am content. Men. Lo, citizens, he says he is content: The warlike service he has done, consider; think

Upon the wounds his body bears, which show Graves i' the holy churchyard.

Scratches with briefs, Cor. Scars to move laughter only.

Consider further. Men. That when he speaks not like a citizen, You find him like a soldier: do not take His rougher accents for malicious sounds, But, as I say, such as become a soldier, Rather than envy you.

Well, well, no more. Com.

Cor. What is the matter, That being pass'd for consul with full voice, I am so dishonour'd that the very hour You take it off again?

Scene II .- Rome. The Capitol.

Enter two Officers, to lay cushions.

I Off. Come, come; they are almost here, How many stand for consulships?

2 Off. Three, they say: but 'tis thought of every one Coriolanus will carry it.

r Off. That's a brave fellow;

but he's vengeance proud, and loves not the common people.

2 Off. Faith, there have been many great men that have flattered the people, who ne'er loved them; and there be many that they have loved, they know not wherefore: so that, if they love they know not why, they hate upon no better a ground: therefore, for Coriolanus neither to care whether they love or hate him manifests the true knowledge he has in their disposition; and, out of his noble carelessness, lets them plainly see't.

r Off. If he did not care whether he had their love or no, he waved indifferently 'twixt doing them neither good nor harm; but he seeks their hate with greater devotion than they can render it him; and leaves nothing undone that may fully discover him their opposite. Now, to seem to affect the malice and displeasure of the people is as bad as that which he dislikes,—to flatter them for their love.

2 Off. He hath deserved worthily of his country: and his ascent is not by such easy degrees as those who, having been supple and courteous to the people, bonnetted, without any further deed to have them at all into their estimation and report: but he hath so planted his honours in their eyes, and his actions in their hearts, that for their tongues to be silent, and not confess so much, were a kind of ingrateful injury; to report otherwise were a malice that, giving itself the lie, would pluck reproof and rebuke from every ear that heard it.

I Off. No more of him; he is a worthy man: make way, they are coming.

A Sennet. Enter, with Lictors before them, COMINIUS the Consul, MENENIUS, CORIO-LANUS, Senators, SICINIUS, and BRUTUS. The Senators take their places; the Tribunes take theirs also by themselves.

Men. Having determin'd of the Volsces, and To send for Titus Lartius, it remains, As the main point of this our after-meeting, To gratify his noble service that Hath thus stood for his country: therefore please you,

Most reverend and grave elders, to desire The present consul, and last general In our well-found successes, to report A little of that worthy work perform'd By Caius Marcius Coriolanus; whom We meet here, both to thank and to remember With honours like himself. I Sen. Speak, good Cominins:

Leave nothing out for length, and make us think

Rather our state's defective for requital Than we to stretch it out.-Masters o' the people, We do request your kindest ears; and, after,

Your loving motion toward the common body, To yield what passes here. We are convented

Upon a pleasing treaty; and have hearts Inclinable to honour and advance The theme of our assembly.

Bru. Which the rather We shall be bless'd to do, if he remember A kinder value of the people than He hath hereto priz'd them at.

Men. That's off, that's off; I would you rather had been silent. Please you

To hear Cominius speak? Most willingly: But yet my caution was more pertinent

Than the rebuke you give it. He loves your people: But tie him not to be their bedfellow .-Worthy Cominius, speak.

Cor. Why, then, should I be consul? yon clouds.

Let me deserve so ill as you, and make me Your fellow tribune.

You show too much of that Sic. For which the people stir: if you will pass To where you are bound, you must inquire your way,

Which you are out of, with a gentler spirit; Or never be so noble as a consul,

Nor yoke with him for tribune. Let's be calm.

Com. The people are abus'd; set on. This palt'ring Becomes not Rome; not has Coriolanus

Deserv'd this so dishonour'd rub, laid falsely I' the plain way of his merit

Tell me of corn! This was my speech, and I will speak't again,

Men. Not now, not now. I Sen.

Not in this heat, sir, now. Cor. Now, as I live, I will.-My nobler friends.

I crave their pardons:

For the mutable, rank-scented many, let them Regard me as I do not flatter, and Therein behold themselves: I say again, In soothing them we nourish 'gainst our senate Sic. 'Tis he, 'tis he: O, he is grown most kind Of late.

Enter MENENIUS.

Bru. Hail, sir!

Men. Hail to you both!

Sic. Your Coriolanus is not much miss'd But with his friends: the commonwealth doth stand;

And so would do, were he more angry at it.

Men. All's well; and might have been much better if He could have temporiz'd.

Sic. Where is he, hear you?

Men. Nay, I hear nothing: his mother and his wife

Hear nothing from him.

Enter three or four Citizens.

Citizens. The gods preserve you both!
Sic. God-den, our neighbours.
Bru. God-den to you all, God-den to you all.
I Cil. Ourselves, our wives, and children, on our knees,

Are bound to pray for you both.

Sic. Live and thrive!

Bru. Farewell, kind neighbours; we wish'd

Coriolanus

Had lov'd you as we did.

Citizens. Now the gods keep you!

Both Tri. Parewell, farewell.

Sic. This is a happier and more comely time Than when these fellows ran about the streets Crying confusion.

Bri. Caius Marcius was
A worthy officer i' the war; but insolent,
O'ercome with pride, ambitious past all thinking,
Self-loving,—

Sic. And affecting one sole throne,

Without assistance.

Men. I think not so. [tion, Sic. We should by this, to all our lamentalife had gone forth consult, found it so.

Bru. The gods have well prevented it, and Rome

Sits safe and still without him.

Enter an Ædile.

Ed. Worthy tribunes, There is a slave, whom we have put in prison, Reports,—the Volsces with two several powers Are enter'd in the Roman territories; And with the deepest malice of the war Destroy what lies before 'em.

Men. 'Tis Aufidius,
Who, hearing of our Marcius' banishment, Thrusts forth his horns again into the world: Which were insheil'd when Marcius stood for Rome,

And durst not once peep out.

Sic. Come, what talk you

Of Marcius?

Bru. Go see this rumourer whipp'd.—It cannot be

The Volsces dare break with us.

Men. Cannot bel

We have record that very well it can;

And three examples of the like have been Within my age. But reason with the fellow, Before you punish him, where he heard this; Lest you shall chance to whip your information, And beat the messenger who bids beware Of what is to be dreaded.

I know this cannot be.

Bru. Not possible.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. The nobles in great earnestness are

All to the senate-house: some news is come That turns their countenances.

Sic. 'Tis this slave,—
Go whip him 'fore the people's eyes:—his raising;

Nothing but his report.

Mess. Yes, worthy sir, The slave's report is seconded; and more, More fearful, is deliver'd.

Sic. What more fearful?

Mess. It is spoke freely out of many mouths,—
How probable I do not know,—that Marcius,

Join'd with Aufidius, leads a power 'gainst Rome,

And vows revenge as spacious as between The young'st and oldest thing.

Sic. This is most likely!

Bru. Rais'd only, that the weaker sort may wish

God Marcius home again.
Sic. The very trick on't.

Men. This is unlikely: He and Aufidius can no more atone Than violentest contrariety.

Enter a second Messenger.

2 Mess. You are sent for to the senate: A fearful army, led by Caius Marcius Associated with Aufidius, rages Upon our territories; and have already [took O'erborne their way, consum'd with fire, and What lay before them.

Enter COMINIUS.

Com. O, you have made good work!

Men.

What news? what news?

Com. You have holp to ravish your own daughters, and

To melt the city leads upon your pates; To see your wives dishonour'd to your noses,—

Men. What's the news? what's the news? Com. Your temples burned in their cement;

Your franchises, whereon you stood, confin'd Into an auger's bore.

Men. Pray now, your news?—You have made fair work, I fear me.—Pray, your news?

If Marcius should be join'd with Volscians,—

II!

Com.

He is their god: he leads them like a thing Made by some other deity than nature, That shapes man better; and they follow him, Against us brats, with no less confidence Than boys pursuing summer butterflies, Or butchers killing flies.

A foe to the public weal. Obey, I charge thee, And follow to thine answer.

Cor. Hence, old goat! Sen. and Pat. We'll surety him.

Com. Aged sir, hands off.

Cor. Hence, rotten thing! or I shall shake thy bones

Out of thy garments Sic.

Help, ye citizens!

Re-enter BRUTUS, with the Ædiles and a rabble of Citizens.

Men. On both sides more respect. Sic. Here's he that would take from you all your power. Bru. Seize him, aediles.

Citizens. Down with him! down with him! 2 Sen. Weapons, weapons, weapons!
[They all bustle about CORIOLANUS

patricians, citizens!-what, ho!-Sicinius, Brutus, Coriolanus, citizens!

Citizens. Peace, peace, peace; stay, hold, peace!

Men. What is about to be?-I am ont of breath: bnnes Confusion's near; I cannot speak .- You tri-To the people, - Coriolanus, patience: -

Speak, good Sicinius. Hear me, people; peacel Citizens. Let's hear our tribune: peacel-

Speak, speak, speak. Sic. You are at point to lose your liberties: Marcius would have all from you; Marcius, Whom late you have nam'd for consul.

Men. Fie, fie, fie! This is the way to kindle, not to quench.

x Sen. To unbuild the city, and to lay all flat. Sic. What is the city but the people? Citizens. True,

The people are the city. Bru. By the consent of all, we were establish'd

The people's magistrates.

You so remain. Cit. Men. And so are like to do. Cor. That is the way to lay the city flat;

To bring the roof to the foundation, And bury all which yet distinctly ranges, In heaps and piles of ruin.

Sic. This deserves death. Bru. Or let us stand to our anthority, Or let us lose it.-We do here pronounce,

Upon the part o' the people, in whose power We were elected theirs, Marcius is worthy Of present death.

Therefore lay hold of him;

Bear him to the rock Tarpeian, and from thence Into destruction cast him Ædiles, seize him! Bru.

Citizens. Yield, Marcins, yield!

Men. Hear me one word; Beseech you, tribunes, hear me hut a word. [friends,

Æd. Peace, peacel Men. Be that you seem, truly your country And temperately proceed to what you would Thus violently redress

Sir, those cold ways, That seem like prudent helps, are very poisonous

Where the disease is violent.-Lay hands upon him.

And bear him to the rock. Cor. No; I'll die here.

Draws his sword. There's some among you have hebeld me fighting:

Come, try upon yourselves what you have seen me.

Men. Down with that sword!-Trihunes, withdraw awhile.

Bru. Lay hands npon him Men. Help Marcins, help,

You that he noble; help him, young and old! Citizens. Down with him, down with him! [In this mutiny the Tribunes, the Ediles, and the People are beat in.

Men. Go, get you to your honse; be gone, awavi

All will be nanght else.

2 Sen. Get you gone. Cor. Stand fast:

We have as many friends as enemies. Men. Shall it be put to that?

ı Sen. The gods forbid! I pr'ythee, noble friend, home to thy honse; Leave us to cure this canse

For 'tis a sore upon us, Men. You cannot tent yourself: be gone, beseech you. Com. Come, sir, along with us. [are, Cor. I would they were barbarians,—as they

Though in Rome litter'd,-not Romans.-as they are not,
Though calv'd i' the porch o' the Capitol,—

Men. Be gone: Put not your worthy rage into your tongue; One time will owe another.

Cor. On fair ground I could beat forty of them.

Men. I could myself Take up a brace o' the best of them; yea, the two tribunes.

Com. But now 'tis odds beyond arithmetic; And manhood is call'd foolery when it stands Against a falling fahric .- Will you hence, Before the tag return? whose rage doth rend' Like interrupted waters, and o'erbear What they are used to hear.

Men. Pray you, be gone: I'll try whether my old wit be in request With those that have but little: this must be patch'd

With cloth of any colour. Nay, come away. [Exeunt Con., Com., and others.

r Pat. This man has marr'd his fortune. Men. His nature is too noble for the world: He would not firster Neptune for his trident Or Jove for's power to thunder. His heart's his mouth:

What his breast forges, that his tongue must vent;

And, being angry, does forget that ever He heard the name of death. [A noise within. Here's goodly work!

2 Pat. I would they were a-bed! Men. I would they were in Tiberl the vengeance,

Could he not speak 'em fair?

The happy man; whether defect of judgment, To fail in the disposing of those chances Which he was lord of; or whether nature, Not to be other than one thing, not moving From the casque to the cushion, but commanding peace Even with the same austerity and garb As he controll'd the war; but one of these,-As he hath spices of them all, not all, For I dare so far free him,—made him fear'd. So hated; and so banish'd: but he has a merit To choke it in the utterance. So our virtues Lie in the interpretation of the time: And power, unto itself most commendable,

Hath not a tomb so evident as a cheer To extol what it hath done.

One fire drives ont one fire; one nail, one nail; Rights by rights, falter, strengths by strengths do fail.

Come, let's away. When, Caius, Rome is thine, Thou art poor'st of all; then shortly art thou [Exeunt.

ACT V.

Scene I.—Rome. A public Place.

Enter Menenius, Cominius, Sicinius, BRUTUS, and others.

Men. No, I'll not go: you hear what he hath said

Which was sometime his general; who lov'd

In a most dear particular. He call'd me father: But what o' that? Go, you that banish'd him; A mile before his tent fall down, and knee The way into his mercy: nay, if he coy'd To hear Cominius speak, I'll keep at home.

Com. He would not seem to know me. Do you hear? Men. Com. Yet one time he did call me by my name:

I urg'd our old acquaintance, and the drops That we have bled together. Coriolanus He would not answer to: forbad all names; He was a kind of nothing, titleless, Till he had forg'd himself a name o' the fire Of burning Rome.

Men. Why, so, -you have made good work! A pair of tribunes that have rack'd for Rome, To make coals cheap,—a noble memory!

Com. I minded him how royal 'twas to pardon When it was less expected: he replied, It was a bare petition of a state To one whom they had punish'd.

Very well: Men.

Could he say less? Com. I offer'd to awaken his regard For's private friends: his answer to me was, He could not stay to pick them in a pile Of noisome musty chaff: he said 'twas folly For one poor grain or two to leave unburnt, And still to nose the offence.

Men. For one poor grain Or two! I am one of those; his mother, wife, His child, and this brave fellow too, we are the grains: You are the musty chaff; and you are smelt Above the moon: we must be burnt for you. Sic. Nay, pray, be patient: if you refuse your

In this so never-heeded help, yet do not Upbraid's with our distress. But, sure, if you Would be your country's pleader, your good tongue,

More than the instant army we can make, Might stop our countryman.

Men. No; I'll not meddle. Sic. Pray you, go to him

Men. What should I do? Bru. Only make trial what your love can do

For Rome, towards Marcius. Men. Well, and say that Marcius Return me, as Cominius is return'd, Unheard; what then?

But as a discontented friend, grief-shot With his unkindness? Say't be so?

Sic. Yet your good-will Mnst have that thanks from Rome, after the measure

As you intended well.

Men. I'll undertake't: I think he'll hear me. Yet to bite his lip And hum at good Cominins much unhearts me. He was not taken well: he had not din'd: The veins unfill'd, our blood is cold, and then We pout upon the morning, are unapt To give or to forgive; but when we have stuff'd These pipes and these conveyances of our blood With wine and feeding, we have suppler souls

Than in our priest-like fasts: therefore I'll watch him Till he be dieted to my request, And then Pll set upon him.

Bru. You know the very road into his kind-

And cannot lose your way Men.Good faith, I'll prove him, Speed how it will. I shall ere long have knowledge

Of my success. [Exit. He'll never hear him Com.

Sic. Com. I tell you, he does sit in gold, his eye Red as 'twould burn Rome; and his injury The gaoler to his pity. I kneel'd before him; 'Twas very faintly he said Rise; dismiss'd me Thus, with his speechless hand: what he would

He sent in writing after me; what he would Bound with an oath to yield to his conditions:

So that all hope is vain,

Unless in's noble mother and his wife; Who, as I hear, mean to solicit him hence, For mercy to his country. Therefore, let's And with our fair entreaties haste them on. Exeunt.

Scene II.—An advanced Post of the Volscian Campbefore Rome. The Guard at their stations.

Enter to them MENENIUS.

I G. Stay: whence are you? Stand, and go back. 2 G. Men. You guard like men; 'tis well: but, by your leave,

I am an officer of state, and come To speak with Coriolanus.

From whence? ıG. From Rome. Men.

This hut done,

The thwartings of your dispositions if You had not show'd them how ye were dispos'd Ere they lack'd power to cross you. Let them hang.

Cor. Vol. Ay, and hurn too.

Enter MENENIUS and Senators.

Men. Come, come, you have heen too rough, something too rough;

You must return and mend it.

ı Sen. There's no remedy: Unless, hy not so doing, our good city Cleave in the midst, and perish.

Pray, he counsell'd; I have a heart as little apt as yours, But yet a hrain that leads my use of anger To hetter vantage.

Well said, noble woman! Men. Before he should thus stoop to the herd, but that The violent fit o' the time craves it as physic For the whole state, I would put mine armour on,

Which I can scarcely hear.

Cor. What must I do? Men. Return to the tribunes. Cor. Well, what then? what then?

Men. Repent what you have spoke.
Cor. For them?—I cannot do it to the gods;

Must I then do't to them?

You are too absolute: Though therein you can never he too noble But when extremities speak. I have heard you say,

Honour and policy, like unsever'd friends, I' the war do grow together: grant that, and

tell me

In peace what each of them hy th' other lose That they combine not there.

Cor. Tush, tush!

Men. A good demand. Vol. If it he honour in your wars to seem The same you are not,—which for your hest ends You adopt your policy,-how is it less or worse That it shall hold companionship in peace With honour as in war; since that to hoth It stands in like request?

Why force you this? Cor. Vol. Because that now it lies you on to speak To the people; not hy your own instruction, Nor hy the matter which your heart prompts

you.

But with such words that are hut rooted in Your tongue, though hut hastards, and syllahles Of no allowance, to your hosom's truth, Now, this no more dishonours you at all Than to take in a town with gentle words, Which else would put you to your fortune and The hazard of much blood.

I would dissemble with my nature where My fortunes and my friends at stake requir'd I should do so in honour: I am in this Your wife, your son, these senators, the nobles;

And you will rather show our general louts How you can frown, than spend a fawn upon 'em

For the inheritance of their loves and safeguard Of what that want might ruin.

Noble ladyl-Men. Come, go with us; speak fair: you may salve so,

Not what is dangerous present, but the loss Of what is past.

Vol. I pr'ythee now, my son, Go to them with this honnet in thy hand; And thus far having stretch'd it,—here he with them.-Ibusiness ·

Thy knee hussing the stones,-for in such Action is eloquence, and the eyes of the ignorant More learned than the ears,—waving thy head, Which often, thus, correcting thy stout heart, Now humble as the ripest mulberry

That will not hold the handling: or say to them Thou art their soldier, and, heing hred in broils.

Men.

Hast not the soft way which, thou dost confess, Were fit for thee to use, as they do claim, In asking their good loves; hut thou wilt frame Thyself, forsooth, hereafter theirs, so far As thou hast power and person.

Even as she speaks, why, their hearts were yours:

For they have pardons, heing ask'd, as free As words to little purpose.

Vol. Prythee now,

Go, and he rul'd: although I know thou had'st rather Follow thine enemy in a fiery gulf Than flatter him in a hower. Here is Cominius.

Enter COMINIUS.

Com. I have been i' the market-place; and, sir, 'tis fit

You make strong party, or defend yourself By calmness or by absence: all's in anger. Men. Only fair speech.

I think 'twill serve, if he Com. Can thereto frame his spirit.

He must, and will .-Vol.

Prythee now, say you will, and go ahout it.

Cor. Must I go show them my unharh'd sconce? must I,

With my hase tongue, give to my noble heart A lie, that it must hear? Well, I will do't: Yet, were there hut this single plot to lose, This mould of Marcins, they to dust should grind it, And throw't ngainst the wind .- To the market-

You have put me now to such a part which never I shall discharge to the life.

Com. Come, come, we'll prompt you. . Vol. I prythee now, sweet son,-as thou hast said

My praises made thee first a soldier, so, To have my praise for this, perform a part Thou hast not done hefore.

Well, I must do't: Away, my disposition, and possess me Some harlot's spirit! My throat of war he turn'd,

Which guired with my drum, into a pipe Small as an eunnch, or the virgin voice That habies lulls asleepl the smiles of knaves Tent in my cheeks; and school-hoys' tears take up The glasses of my sightle heggar's tongue Make motion through my lips; and my arm'd knees,

The general suit of Rome; never admitted A private whisper, no, not with such friends

That thought them sure of you.

Cor. This last old man, Whom with a crack'd heart I have sent to Rome, Lov'd me above the measure of a father; Nay, godded me, indeed. Their latest refuge Was to send him; for whose old love I have,—Though I show'd sourly to him,—once more offer'd

The first conditions, which they did refuse, And cannot now accept, to grace him only, That thought he could do more, a very little I have yielded to: fresh embassies and suits, Nor from the state nor private friends, hereafter

Will I lend ear to.—Ha! what shout is this? [Shout within.

Shall I be tempted to infringe my vow In the same time 'tis made? I will not.

Enter in mourning habits, Virgilia, Volum-NIA, leading young MARCIUS, VALERIA, and Attendants.

My wife comes foremost; then the honour'd

Wherein this trunk was fram'd, and in her hand The grandfild to her blood. But, out, affection!

All bond and privilege of nature, break!
Let it be virtuous to be obstinate.— [eyes,
What is that curt'sy worth? or those doves'
Which can make gods forsworn?—I melt, and am not [bows,

Of stronger earth than others.—My mother As if Olympus to a molehill should In supplication nod: and my young boy Hath an aspect of intercession which Great nature cries, Deny not.—Let the Volsces Plough Rome and harrow Italy: I'll never Be such a gosling to obey instinct; but stand, As if a man were author of himself, And knew no other kin.

Vir. My lord and husband!
Cor. These eyes are not the same I wore in Rome.

Vir. The sorrow that delivers us thus chang'd

Makes you think so.

Cor.

Like a dull actor now,
I have forgot my part, and I am out,
Even to a full disgrace. Best of my flesh,
Forgive my tyranny; but do not say,
For that, Forgive our Romans.—O, a kiss
Long as my exile, sweet as my revenge;
Now, by the jealous queen of heaven, that kiss
I carried from thee, dear; and my true lip
Hath virgin'd it e'er since.—You gods! I prate,
And the most noble mother of the world
Leave unsaluted: sink, my knee, i' the earth;
[Kneels.

Of thy deep duty more impression show Than that of common sons.

Vol.

Whilst, with no softer cushion than the flint, I kneel before thee; and unproperly Show duty, as mistaken all this while Between the child and parent.

[Kneels.]

Cor. What is this? Your knees to me? to your corrected son?

Then let the pebbles of the hungry beach Fillip the stars; then let the mutinous winds Strike the proud cedars 'gainst the fiery sun; Murdering impossibility, to make What cannot be, slight work.

Vol.

I holp to frame thee. Do you know this lady?

Cor. The noble sister of Publicola,

The moon of Rome; chaste as the icicle
That's curded by the frost from purest snow,
And hangs on Dian's temple:—dear Valeria!

Vol. This is a poor epitome of yours, Which, by the interpretation of full time,

May show like all yourself.

Cor. The god of soldiers,
With the consent of supreme Jove, inform Thy thoughts with nobleness; that thou mayst prove

To shame unvulnerable, and stick i' the wars

Like a great sea-mark, standing every flaw,

And saving those that eye thee!

Vol. Your knee, sirrah
Cor. That's my brave boy. [self

Vol. Even he, your wife, this lady, and my-Are suitors to you.

Cor. I beseech you, peace:
Or, if you'd ask, remember this before,—
The things I have forsworn to grant may never
Be held by you denials. Do not bid me
Dismiss my soldiers, or capitulate
Again with Rome's mechanics.—Tell me not

Again with Rome's mechanics.—Tell me in Wherein I seem unnatural: desire not To allay my rages and revenges with Your colder reasons.

You have said you will not grant us anything;
For we have nothing else to ask but that
Which you deny already: yet we will ask;
That, if you fail in our request, the blame
May hang upon your hardness; therefore hear

Cor. Aufidius, and you Volsces, mark: for Hear naught from Rome in private.—Your request? [raiment

Vol. Should we be silent and not speak, our And state of bodies would bewray what life We have led since thy exile. Think with thy self,

How more unfortunate than all living women Are we come hither: since that thy sight, which should [comforts, Make our eyes flow with joy, hearts dance with Constrains them weep, and shake with fear and

Making the mother, wife, and child to see
The son, the husband, and the father tearing
His country's bowels out. And to poor we,
Thine enmity's most capital: though barr'st us
Our prayers to the gods, which is a comfort
That all but we enjoy; for how can we,
Alas, how can we for our country pray,

Whereto we are bound,—together with thy victory,

Whereto we are bound? alack, or we must lose The country, our dear nurse; or else thy person, Our comfort in the country. We must find An evident calamity, though we had [thou Our wish, which side should win; for either Must, as a foreign recreant, be led With manacles thorough our streets, or else

From Rome all season'd office, and to wind Yourself into a power tyrannical; For which you are a traitor to the people.

Cor. Howl traitorl

Men. Men. Nay, temperately; your promise. Cor. The fires i' the lowest hell fold in the peoplel

Call me their traitor!—Thou injurious tribune! Within thine eyes sat twenty thousand deaths, In thy hands clutch'd as many millions, in Thy lying tongue both numbers, I would say, Thou liest unto thee, with a voice as free As I do pray the gods.

Mark you this, people? Sic. Citizens. To the rock, to the rock with himl

Sic. Peacel We need not put new matter to his charge: What you have seen him do and heard him speak, Beating your officers, cursing yourselves, Opposing laws with strokes, and here defying Those whose great power must try him; even this.

So criminal, and in such capital kind, Deserves the extremest death.

Bru. But since he hath Serv'd well for Rome,

What do you prate of service? Cor. Bru. I talk of that, that know it. (mother?

Men. Is this the promise that you made your Com. Know, I pray you,

I'll know no further: Cor. Let them pronounce the steep Tarpeian death, Vagahond exile, flaying, pent to linger But with a grain a day, I would not buy Their mercy at the price of one fair word, Nor check my courage for what they can give, To have't with saying Good-morrow.

Sic. For that he has,-As much as in him lies,—from time to time Envied against the people, seeking means To pluck away their power; as now at last Given hostile strokes, and that not in the presence Of dreaded justice, but on the ministers That do distribute it; -in the name o' the people,

And in the power of us the tribunes, we, Even from this instant, hanish him our city; In peril of precipitation From off the rock Tarpeian, never more

To enter our Rome gates: i' the people's name, I say it shall he so. him away: Citizens. It shall be so, it shall he so; let He's hanished, and it shall he so.

Com. Hear me, my masters, and my common friends.

Sic. He's sentenc'd; no more hearing. Let me speak: Com. I have been consul, and can show for Rome Her enemies' marks upon me. I do love My country's good with a respect more tender, More holy and profound, than mine own life, If you had heen the wife of Hercules, My dear wife's estimate, her womh's increase, Six of his lahours you'd have done, and sav'd And treasure of my loins; then if I would Speak that,

We know your drift. Speak what? Sic. Bru. There's no more to he said, hut he is hanish'd.

As enemy to the people and his country: It shall he so.

Citizens. It shall he so, it shall he so. Cor. You common cry of curst whose hreath I hate

As reek o' the rotten fens, whose loves I prize As the dead carcasses of unhuried men That do corrupt my air,-I hanish you; And here remain with your uncertainty! Let every feeble rumour shake your hearts! Your enemies, with nodding of their plumes, Fan you into despair! Have the power still To hanish your defenders; till at length Your ignorance,—which finds not till it feels,— Making not reservation of yourselves,-Still your own foes,—deliver you, as most Ahated captives, to some nation That won you without hlows! Despising, For you, the city, thus I turn my hack:

There is a world elsewhere. [Exeunt COR., COM., MEN., Senators.

As he hath follow'd you, with all despite; Give him deserv'd vexation. Let a guard Attend us through the city. gates; come. Citizens. Come, come, let us see him out at The gods preserve our noble tribunes!-Come. Exeunt.

ACT IV.

Scene I .- Rome. Before a Gote of the City.

VOLUMNIA, Enter CORIOLANUS, MENENIUS, COMINIUS, and several young Patricians.

Cor. Como, leave your tears; a brief farewell:--the beast With many heads hutts me away.—Nay, mother, Where is your ancient courage? you were us'd To say extremity was the trier of spirits That common chances common men could bear; That when the sea was calm all hoats alike Show'd mastership in floating; fortune's hlows, When most struck home, heing gentle wounded,

A nohle cunning: you were us'd to load me With precepts that would make invincible. The heart that conn'd them.

Vir. O heavens! O heavens!

Nay, I pr'ythee, woman. Cor. Vol. Now the red pestilence strike all trades in Rome,

And occupations perish! Cor. What, what, what!
I shall he lov'd when I am lack'd. Nay, mother, Resume that spirit when you were wont to say, If you had heen the wife of Hercules, Your hushand so much sweat .- Cominius, Droop not; adieu.-Farewell, my wife,-my mother:

I'll do well yet .- Thou old and true Menenius. Thy tears are salter than a younger man's,

This Marcius is grown from man to dragou: he has wings; he's more than a creeping thing.

Sic. He loved his mother dearly.

Men. So did he me: and he no more remembers his mother now than an eight-yearold horse. The tartness of his face sours ripe grapes: when he walks, he moves like an engine, and the ground shrinks before his treading: he is able to pierce a corslet with his eye; talks like a knell, and his hum is a battery. He sits in his state as a thing made for Alexander. What he bids be done is finished with his bidding. He wants nothing of a god but eternity, and a heaven to throne in.

Sic. Yes, mercy, if you report him truly. Men. I paint him in the character. Mark what mercy his mother shall bring from him: there is no more mercy in him then there is milk in a male tiger; that shall our poor city find: and all this is 'long of you.

Sic. The gods be good unto us!

Men. No, in such a case the gods will not be good unto us. When we banished him we respected not them: and, he returning to break our necks, they respect not us.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Sir. if you'd save your life, fly to your house:

The plebeians have got your fellow-tribune, And hale him up and down; all swearing, if The Roman ledies bring not comfort home, They'll give him death by inches.

Enier a second Messenger.

What's the news? 2 Mess. Good news, good news;—the ladies have prevail'd.

The Volscians are dislode'd and Marcius goue: Most welcome! A merrier day did never yet greet Rome,

No, not the expulsion of the Tarquins. Friend, Sic. Art thou certain this is true? is it most certain? 2 Mess. As certain as I know the sun is fire: Where have you lurk'd, that you make doubt of it? (tide Re'er through an arch so hurried the blown As the recomforted through the gates. Why, hark you! Trumpets and hautboys sounded, drums beaten, and shouting within. The trumpets, sackbuts, psalteries, and fifes, Tabors and cymbals, and the shouting Romans,

Make the sun dance. Hark you! Shouting again.

This is good news. This Volumnia I will go meet the ladies. Is worth of consuls, senators, patricians, [to-day: A city full: of tribunes such as you, You have pray'd well A seg and land full. This morning, for ten thousand of your throats I'd not have given a doit. Hark, how they joy! Shouting and music.

Sic. First, the gods bless you for your tidings; next,

Accept my thankfulness 2 Mess.

Sir, we have all Great cause to give great thanks.

Sic. They are near the city? Mess. Almost at point to enter. We will meet them,

And help the joy. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.-ROME. A Street near the Gate.

Enter Volumnia, Virgilia, Valeria, &c., accompanied by Senators, Patricians, and Citizens.

I Sen. Behold our patroness, the life of Rome!

Call all your tribes together, praise the gods, And make triumphant fires; strew flowers before them:

Unshout the noise that banish'd Marcius, Repeal him with the welcome of his mother; Cry, Welcome, ladies, welcome!-

All. Welcome, ladies, Welcome!

Enter Tullus Aufidius, with Attendants.

Auf. Go tell the lords of the city I am here: Deliver them this paper; having read it, Bid them repair to the market-place: where I, Even in theirs and in the commous' ears, Will vouch the truth of it. Him I accuse The city ports by this hath enter'd, and Intends to appear before the people, hoping ... To purge himself with words: despatch. Exeunt Attendants:

Enter three or four Conspirators of AUFIDIUS'S faction.

1 Con. How is it with our general? Auf. Even so

As with a man by his own alms empoisou'd, And with his charity slain.

Most noble sir, 2 Con. If you do hold the same intent wherein You wish'd us parties, we'll deliver you Of your great danger.

Sir, I cannot tell: We must proceed as we do find the people.

Enter a Roman and a Volsce, meeting,

Rom. I know you well, sir; and you know me; your name, I think, is Adrian.

Vols. It is so, sir: truly, I have forgot you. Rom. I am a Roman; and my services are, as you are, against 'em; know you me yet? Vols. Nicanor? no.

Rom. The same, sir.
Vols. You had more beard when I last saw you; but your favour is well approved by your tongue. What's the news in Rome? I have a note from the Volscian state, to find you out there: you have well saved me a day's journey.

Rom. There hath been in Rome strange insurrection; the people against the senators, patricians, and nobles.

Vols. Hath beent is it ended, then? Our state thinks not so; they are in a most warlike preparation, and hope to come upon them in the heat of their division.

Rom. The main blaze of it is past, but a small thing would make it flame again: for the nobles receive so to heart the banishment of that worthy Coriolanus that they are in a ripe aptness to take all power from the people, and to pluck from them their tribunes for ever. This lies glowing, I can tell you, and is almost mature for the violeut breaking out.

Vols. Coriolanus banished!

Rom. Banished, sir.
Vols. You will be welcome with this intelligence, Nicanor.

Rom. The day serves well for them now. I have heard it said the fittest time to corrupt a man's wife is when she's fallen out with her husband. Your noble Tullus Aufidius will appear well in these wars, his great opposer, Coriolanus, being now in no request of his country.

Vols. He cannot choose. I am most fortunate thus accidentally to encounter you: you have ended my business, and I will merrily accompany you home.

Rom. I shall, between this and supper, tell you most strange things from Rome; all tending to the good of their adversaries. Have you an army ready, say you?

Vols. A most royal one; the centurions and their charges, distinctly billeted, already in the entertainment, and to be on foot at an hour's warning.

Rom. I am joyful to hear of their readiness, and am the man, I think, that shall set them in present action. So, sir, heartily well met, and most glad of your company.

Vols. You take my part from the, sir; I have the most cause to be glad of yours.

Rom. Well, let us go together, Exeunt.

Scene IV.—Antium. Before Aufidius's House.

Enter Coriolanus, in mean opparel, disguised and muffled.

r Serv. Wine, wine, wine! What service is herel I think our fellows are asleep. Exit.

Enter a second Servant.

2 Serv. Where's Cotus? my master calls for Exit. him. - Cotus!

Enter CORIOLANUS.

Cor. A goodly house: the feast smells well; but I Appear not like a guest.

Re-enter the first Servant.

1 Serv. What would you have, frieud? whence are you? Here's no place for you: pray, go to the door.

Cor. I have deserv'd no better entertainment

In being Coriolanus.

Re-enter second Servant.

Music.

2 Cit. Truly, sir, all that I live by is with the awl: I meddle with no tradesman's matters, nor women's matters, but with awl. I am, indead, sir, a surgeon to old shoes; when they are in great danger, I re-cover them. As proper men as ever trod upon neats-leather have gone upon my handiwork.

Flav. But wherefore art not in thy shop today?

Why dost thou lead these men about the streets? 2 Cit. Truly, sir, to wear out their shoes, to get myself into more work. But, indeed, sir, we make holiday to see Cæsar, and to rejoice in his triumph.

Mar. Wherefore rejoice? What conquest brings he home?

What tributaries follow him to Rome, To grace in captive bonds his chariot wheels? You blocks, you stones, you worse than senseless things! O you hard hearts, you cruel men of Rome, Knew you not Pompey? Many a time and oft Have you climb'd up to walls and battlements. To towers and windows, yea, to chimney-tops. Your infants in your arms, and there have sat The live-long day, with patient expectation, To see great Pompey pass the streets of Rome: And when you saw his chariot hut appear, Have you not made an universal shout, That Tiber trembled underneath her banks, To hear the replication of your sounds Made in her concave shores? And do you now put on your best attire? And do you now cull out a holiday? And do you now strew flowers in his way That comes in triumph over Pompey's blood? Be gone! Run to your houses, fall upon your knees, Pray to the gods to intermit the plague

That needs must light on this ingratitude.

Flav. Go, go, good countrymen, and for this fault

Assemble all the poor men of your sort; Draw them to Tiber banks, and weep your tears Into the channel, till the lowest stream Do kiss the most exalted shores of all.

Exeunt Citizens. See, whe'r their basest metal be not mov'd; They vanish tongue-tied in their guiltiness. Go you down that way towards the Capitol: This way will I: disrobe the images If you do find them deck'd with ceremonies.

Mar. May we do so?

You know it is the feast of Lupercal. Flav. It is no matter; let no images Be hung with Cæsar's trophies. I'll about, And drive away the vulgar from the streets: So do you too, where you perceive them thick. These growing feathers pluck'd from Cæsar's wing Will make him fly an ordinary pitch; Who else would soar above the view of men, And keep us all in servile fearfulness.

Cæs. Ha! who calls?

Casca. Bid every noise be still.—Peace yet again. Music ceases. Cæs. Who is it in the press that calls on me? I hear a tongue, shriller than all the music, Cry, Cæsar. Speak; Cæsar is turn'd to hear.

Sooth. Beware the ides of March.

What man is that? Bru. A soothsayer bids you beware the ides of March.

Cæs. Set him before me; let me see his face. Cas. Fellow, come from the throng; look upon Cæsar.

What say'st thou to me now? speak once again.

Citizens. Faith, we hear fearful news.

1 Cit. For mine own part,
When I said banish him, I said 'twas pity.

2 Cit. And so did I.

3 Cit. And so did I; and, to say the truth, so did very many of us. That we did, we did for the best; and though we willingly consented to his banishment, yet it was against our will.

Com. You are goodly things, you voices!

Auf. Do they still fly to the Roman?

Lieu. I do not know what witchoraft's in him, but

Your soldiers use him as the grace 'fore meat, Their talk at table, and their thanks at end; And you are darken'd in this action, sir, Even by our own.

Auf. I cannot help it now, Unless, by using means I lame the foot Of our design. He bears himself more proud-

Even to my person, than I thought he would When first I did embrace him: yet his nature In that's no changeling; and I must excuse What cannot he amended.

Licu. Yet I wish, sir,—
I mean for your particular,—you had not
Join'd in commission with him; hut either
Had borne the action of yourself, or else
To him had left it solely. [sur

Auf. I understand thee well; and be thou When he shall come to his account, he knows

What I can urge against him. Although it seems, And so he thinks, and is no less apparent To the vulgar eye, that he hears all things fairly, And shows good husbandry for the Volscian state, Fights dragon-like, and does achieve as soon As draw his sword; yet he hath left undone That which shall hreak his neck or hazard mine Whene'er we come to our account. [Rome?

Lieu. Sir, I heseech you, think you he'll carry Auf. All places yield to him ere he sits down; And the nobility of Rome are his:
The senators and patricians love him too:
The tribunes are no soldiers; and their people Will be as rash in the repeal as hasty
To expel him thence. I think he'll he to Rome As is the osprey to the fish, who takes it

Re-enter CÆSAR and his Train.

Bru. I will do so.—But, look you, Cassius, The angry spot doth glow on Cæsar's brow, And all the rest look like a chidden train: Calphurnia's cheek is pale; and Cicero Looks with such ferret and such fiery eyes As we have seen him in the Capitol, Being cross'd in conference by some senators.

Cas. Casca will tell us what the matter is. Cæs. Antonius.

Ant. Cæsar?

Cæs. Let me have men ahout me that are fat; Sleek-headed men, and such as sleep o' nights: Yond Cassius has a lean and hungry look; He thinks too much: such men are dangerous. Ant. Fear him not, Cæsar, he's not danger-

He is a noble Roman, and well given.

Cæs. Would he were fatter!-But I fear him

Yet if my name were liable to fear. I do not know the man I should avoid So soon as that spare Cassius. He reads much; He is a great observer, and he looks Quite through the deeds of men: he loves no plays,

As thou dost, Antony; he hears no music: Seldom he smiles; and smiles in such a sort As if he mock'd himself, and scorn'd his spirit That could be mov'd to smile at anything Such men as he be never at heart's ease Whiles they hehold a greater than themselves; And therefore are they very dangerous. I rather tell thee what is to he fear'd Than what I fear,—for always I am Cæsar. Come on my right hand, for this ear is deaf, And tell me truly what thou think'st of him.

[Exeunt CESAR and his TRAIN. CASCA slays behind.

Casca. You pull'd me hy the cloak; would

Bru. Ay, Casca; tell us what hath chanc'd That Casca Why record in the chanc'd Inot?

Casca. Why, you were with him, were you Bru. I should not then ask Casca what had chanc'd.

Casca. Why, there was a crown offered him: and heing offered him, he put it hy with the hack of his hand, thus; and then the people fell a-shouting.

Bru. What was the second noise for? [cry.for? Casca. Why, for that too. Cas. They shouted thrice: what was the last Casca. Why, for that too.

Bry. Was the crown offer'd him thrice? Casca. Ay, marry, was't, and he put it hy thrice, every time gentler than other; and at every putting hy mine honest neighbours shouted.

Cas. Who offered him the crown? Casca. Why, Antony. Bru. Tell us the manner of it, gentle Casca.

Casca. I can as well be hanged as tell the manner of it: it was mere foolery; I did not mark it. I saw Mark Antony offer him a crown: -yet 'twas not a crown neither, 'twas one of these coronets;—and, as I told you, he put it by once: hut, for all that, to my thinking, he would fain have had it. Then he offered it to him again; then he put it by again: but, to my thinking, he was very loth to lay his fingers off it. And then he offered it the third time; he put it the third time by: and still, as he refused it, the rabblement hooted, and clapped their chapped hands, and threw up their sweaty night-caps, and uttered such a deal of stinking breath because Cæsar refused the crown, that it had almost choked Cæsar; for he swooned. and fell down at it: and for mine own part I durst not laugh, for fear of opening my lips and receiving the bad air.

Cas. But, soft, I pray you; what, did Cæsar swoon?

Casca. He fell down in the market-place, and foamed at mouth, and was speechless. Bru. 'Tis very like,-he hath the falling sickness.

Cas. No, Cæsar hath it not; but you, and I, And honest Casca, we have the falling sickness. Casca. I know not what you mean by that; hut I am sure Cæsar fell down. If the tag-rag people did not clap him and hiss him, according as he pleased and displeased them, as they use to do the players in the theatre, I am no true man. Bru. What said he when he came unto him-

Casca. Marry, hefore he fell down, when he perceived the common herd was glad he refused the crown, he plucked me ope his doublet, and offered them his throat to cut.—An I had been a man of any occupation, if I would not have taken him at a word, I would I might go to hell among the rogues. And so he fell. came to himself again, he said, If he had done or said anything amiss, he desired their worships Three or four to think it was his infirmity. Three or four wenches, where I stood, cried, Alas, good soul! and forgave him with all their hearts: but there's no heed to he taken of them; if Cæsar had stabbed their mothers they would have done no less.

Bru. And after that he came, thus sad, away?

Casca. Ay:

Cas. Did Cicero say anything? Casca. Ay, he spoke Greek.

Cas. To what effect?

Casca. Nay, an I tell you that, I'll ne'er look you i' the face again: hut those that understood him smiled at one another, and shook their heads; hut, for mine own part, it I could tell you more news was Greek to me. too: Marullus and Flavius, for pulling scarfs off Cæsar's images, are put to silence. Fare you well. There was more foolery yet, if I could rememher it.

Cas. Will you sup with me to-night, Casca?

Casca. No, I am promised forth.

Cas. Will you dine with me to-morrow? Casca. Ay, if I he alive, and your mind hold, and your dinner worth the eating. Cas. Good; I will expect you.

I must have leave to pass.

r G. Faith, sir, if you had told as many lies in his behalf as you have utter'd words in your own, you should not pass here: no, though it were as virtuons to lie as to live chastely.

Therefore, go back.

Men. Prythee, fellow, remember my name is Menenius, always factionary on the party of your general.

2 G. Howsoever you have been his liar,—as you say you have, -I am one that, telling true under him, must say, you cannot pass.

fore, go back.

Men. Has he dined, caust thou tell? for I would not speak with him till after dinner.

I G. You are a Roman, are you?

Men. I am as thy general is. I Gen. Then you should hate Rome, as he Can you, when you have pushed out your gates the very defender of them, and, in a violent popular ignorance, given your enemy your shield, think to front his revenges with the easy groans of old women, the virginal palms of your daughters, or with the palsied intercession of such a decayed dotant as you seem to be? Can you think to blow out the intended fire your city is ready to flame in, with such weak breath as this? No, you are deceived; therefore, back to Rome, and prepare for your execution: you are condemned; our general has sworn you out of reprieve and pardon.

Men. Sirrah, if thy captain knew I were here

he would use me with estimation.

2 G. Come, my captain knows you not.

Men. I mean thy general.

I G. My general cares not for you. Back,

O my son! my son! thou art preparing fire for us; look thee, here's water to quench it. I was hardly moved to come to thee; but being assured none but myself could move thee, I have been blown out of your gates with sighs; and conjure thee to pardon Rome and thy petitionary countrymen. I G. Now, sir, is your name Menenius?
2 G. 'Tis a spell, you see, of much power: you know the way home again.

I G. Do you hear how we are shent for keeping your greatness back?

2 G. What cause, do you think, I have to swoom? Men. I neither care for the world nor your general: for such things as yon, I can scarce think there's any, ye're so slight. He that hath a will to die by himself fears it not from another. Let your general do his worst. you, be that you are, long; and your misery increase with your age! I say to you, as I was said to, awayl

I G. A noble fellow, I warrant him. 2 G. The worthy fellow is our general: he is the rock, the oak not to be wind-shaken.

Scene III .- The Tent of Coriolanus.

Enter Coriolanus, Aufidius, and others.

Cor. We will before the walls of Rome tomorrow

Set down our host.-My pariner in this action, You must report to the Volscian lords how plainly

I have borne this business.

Auſ. Only their ends Casca. Indeed they say the senators tomorrow

Mean to establish Cæsar as a king; And he shall wear his crown by sea and land, In every place, save here in Italy.

Cas. I know where I will wear this dagger then;

Cassius from bondage will deliver Cassius: Therein, ye gods, you make the weak most strong; Therein, ye gods, you tyrants do defeat: Nor stony tower, nor walls of beaten brass, Nor airless dungeon, nor strong links of iron, Can be retentive to the strength of spirit; But life, being weary of these worldly bars, Never lacks power to dismiss itself. If I know this, know all the world besides, That part of tyranny that I do bear, I can shake off at pleasure. Thunder still.

Casca. So can I: So every bondman in his own hand bears The power to cancel his captivity.

Cas. And why should Casar be a tyrant, then? Poor man! I know he would not be a wolf, But that he sees the Romans are but sheep: He were no lion, were not Romans hinds. Those that with haste will make a mighty fire Begin it with weak straws: what trash is Rome, What rubbish, and what offal, when it serves For the base matter to illuminate So vile a thing as Cæsar! But, O grief, Where hast thou led me? I perhaps speak this Before a willing bondman; then I know My answer must be made: but I am arm'd, And dangers are to me indifferent. man Casca. You speak to Casca; and to such a That is no fleering tell-tale. Hold, my hand: Be factious for redress of all these griefs; And I will set this foot of mine as far

As who goes farthest.

There's a bargain made. Now know you, Casca, I have mov'd already Some certain of the noblest-minded Romans To undergo with me an enterprise Of honourable-dangerous consequence; And I do know by this they stay for me In Pompey's porch: for now, this fearful night, There is no stir or walking in the streets; And the complexion of the element In favour's like the work we have in hand, Most bloody, fiery, and most terrible.

Casca. Stand close awhile, for here comes one in haste. Cas. 'Tis Cinna,-I do know him by his gait;

He is a friend.

Enter CINNA.

Cinna, where haste you so? Cin. To find out you. Who's that? Metellus Cimber?

Cas. No, it is Casca; one incorporate To our attempts. Am I not stay'd for, Cinna? Cin. I am glad on't. What a fearful night is this!

There's two or three of us have seen strange Cas. Am I not stay'd for? Tell me.

Yes, you are. Cin_ O Cassius, if you could/ But win the noble Brutus to our party,-

Cas. Be you content: good Cinns, take this

And look you lay it in the prætor's chair, Where Brutus may but find it; and throw this In at his window; set this up with wax Upon old Brutus' statue: all this done, Repair to Pompey's porch, where you shall find Is Decius Brutus and Trebonius there?

Cin. All but Metellus Cimber; and he's gone To seek you at your house. Well, I will hie, And so bestow these papers as you bade me. Cas. That done, repair to Pompey's theatre.

Exit Cinna. Come, Casca, you and I will yet, ere day See Brutus at his house: three parts of him. Is ours already; and the man entire, Upon the next encounter, yields him ours.

Casca. O, he sits high in all the people's hearts: And that which would appear offence in us,

His countenance, like richest alchemy, Will change to virtue and to worthiness. Cas. Him, and his worth, and our great need of him,

You have right well conceited. Let us go, For it is after midnight; and ere day We will awake him, and be sure of him.

Exeunt.

ACT II.

Scene L.-Rome. Brutus's Orchard.

Enter BRUTUS.

Bru. What, Lucius, ho!— I cannot, by the progress of the stars, Give guess how near to day .- Lucius, I sayl-I would it were my fault to sleep so soundly.-When, Lucius, when? awake, I sayl what, Lucius Enter Lucius.

Luc. Call'd you, my lord? Bru. Get me a taper in my study, Lucius: When it is lighted, come and call me here.

Luc. I will, my lord. Exit. Bru. It must be by his death: and, for my part,

I know no personal cause to spurn at him, But for the general. He would be crown'd: How that might change his nature, there's the guestion:

It is the bright day that brings forth the adder; And that craves wary walking. Crown him?that-

And then, I grant, we put a sting in him, That at his will he may do danger with. The abuse of greatness is, when it disjoins Remorse from power: and, to speak truth of Cæser,

I have not known when his affections sway'd More than his reason. But 'tis a common proof That lowliness is young ambition's ladder, Whereto the climber-upward turns his face; But when he once attains the utmost round, He then unto the ladder turns his back, Looks in the clouds, scorning the base degrees By which he did ascend. So Casar may; Then, lest he may, prevent. And, since the quarrel -

Triumphantly tread on thy country's ruin, And bear the palm for having bravely shed Thy wife and children's blood. For myself, son, I purpose not to wait on fortune till [thee These wars determine: if I cannot persuade Rather to show a noble grace to both parts Than seek the end of one, thou shalt no sooner March to assault thy country than to tread,-Trust to't, thou shalt not, on thy mother's womb,

That brought thee to this world.

Vir. Ay, and mine. That brought you forth this boy, to keep your name

Living to time

'A shall not tread on me; Boy.I'll run away till I am bigger; but then I'll fight.

Cor. Not of a woman's tenderness to be. Requires nor child nor woman's face to see. I have sat too long. [Rising. Nar, go not from us thus. Vol. If it were so that our request did tend To save the Romans, thereby to destroy

The Volsces whom you serve, you might condemn us,

As poisonous of your honour: no; our suit Is, that you reconcile them: while the Volsces May say, This mercy we have show'd; the Romans,

This we deceiv'd; and each in either side Give thee all-hail to thee, and cry, Be bless'd For making up this peace! Thou know'st great son, The end of war's uncertain; but this certain, That, if thou conquer Rome, the benefit Which thou shalt thereby reap is such a name, Whose repetition will be dogg'd with curses; Whose chronicle thus writ,—The man was noble,

But with his last attempt he wiped it out; Destroy'd his country; and his name remains To the ensuing age abhorr'd. Speak to me, son: Thou hast affected the fine strains of honour, To imitate the graces of the gods, To tear with thunder the wide cheeks o' the air, And yet to charge thy sulphur with a bolt That should but rive an oak. Why dos Why dost not speak? Think'st thou it honourable for a noble man Still to remember wrongs?-Daughter, speak yon: [boy: He cares not for your weeping.—Speak thon, Perhaps thy childishness will move him more Than can our reasons.-There is no man in the world More bound to his mother; yet here he lets me Like one i' the stocks. Thou hast never in thy life

Show'd thy dear mother any courtesy; When she,-poor hen,-fond of no second brood,

Has cluck'd thee to the wars, and safely home, Loaden with honour. Say my request's unjust, And spurn me back: but if it be not so Thou art not honest; and the gods will plague

thee,

That thou restrain'st from me the duty which To a mother's part belongs.—He turns away: Down, ladies; let us shame him with our knees. | a butterfly; yet your butterfly was a grub.

To his surname Coriolanus 'longs more pride Than pity to our prayers. Down: an end; Than pity to our prayers. Down: an end; This is the last.—So we will home to Rome, And die among our neighbours.-Nay, behold's:

This boy, that cannot tell what he would have, But kneels and holds up hands for fellowship Does reason our petition with more strength Than thou hast to deny't.-Come, let us go: This fellow had a Volscian to his mother; His wife is in Corioli, and his child Like him by chance.—Yet give us our despatch:

I am hush'd until our city be afire, And then I'll speak a little.

Cor. [After holding VOLUMNIA by the hands in silence.] O mother, mother! What have you done? Behold, the heavens do ope, The gods look down, and this unnatural scene They laugh at. O my mother, mother! O! You have won a happy victory to Rome; But for your son,—believe it, O, believe it, Most dangerously you have with him prevail'd, If not most mortal to him. But let it come,-Aufidins, though I cannot make true wars, I'll frame convenient peace. Now, good

Aufidius. If you were in my stead, would you have heard

A mother less? or granted less, Aufidius?

Auf. I was mov'd withal. Cor. I dare be sworn you were:

And, sir, it is no little thing to make Mine eyes to sweat compassion. But, good sir, What peace you'll make, advise me: for my part,

I'll not to Rome, I'll back with you; and, pray

Stand to me in this canse.—O mother! wife! Auf. I am glad thou hast set thy mercy and thy honour

At difference in thee: ont of that I'll work Myself a former fortune. Aside. [The ladies make signs to CORIOLANUS.

Ay, by and by; [To Volumnia, Virgilia, &c. Cor. But we'll drink together; and you shall bear A better witness back than words, which we, On like conditions, will have counter-seal'd. Come, enter with us. Ladies, you deserve To have a temple built you: all the swords In Italy, and her confederate arms, Exeunt. Could not have made this peace.

Scene IV.—Rome. A public Place.

Enter Menenius and Sicinius.

Men. See you youd coigne o' the Capitol,yond corner-stone?

Sic. Why, what of that?

Men. If it be possible for you to displace it with your little finger, there is some hope the ladies of Rome, especially his mother, may prevail with him. But I say there is no hope in't: our throats are sentenced, and stay upon execution.

Sic. Is't possible that so short a time can alter the condition of a man?

Men. There is differency between a grub and

Such creatures as men doubt: but do not stain The even virtue of our enterprise, Nor the insuppressive mettle of our spirits, To think that or our cause or our performance Did need an oath; when every drop of blood That every Roman hears, and nohly bears, Is guilty of a several hastardy If he do hreak the smallest particle Of any promise that hath pass'd from him.

Cas. But what of Cicero? shall we sound him?

I think he will stand very strong with us. Casca. Let us not leave him out.

No, hy no means. Met. O, let us have him; for his silver hairs Will purchase us a good opinion, And huy men's voices to commend our deeds: It shall he said his judgment rul'd our hands; Our youths and wildness shall no whit appear, -But all he buried in his gravity.

Bru. O, name him not: let us not hreak with him;

For he will never follow anything

That other men begin. Then leave him out. Cas.

Casca. Indeed he is not fit. Dec. Shall no man else he touch'd hut only Cæsar?

Cas. Decius, well urg'd.—I think it is not

Mark Antony, so well belov'd of Cæsar, Should outlive Cæsar: we shall find of him A shrewd contriver; and, you know, his means, If he improve them, may well stretch so far As to annoy us all: which to prevent, Let Antony and Cæsar fall together.

Bru. Our course will seem too bloody, Caius Cassius.

To cut the head off and then hack the limbs,-Like wrath in death and envy afterwards; For Antony is but a limb of Cæsar: Let's he sacrificers, but not hutchers, Caius. We all stand up against the spirit of Cæsar; And in the spirit of men there is no blood: O that we, then, could come by Cæsar's spirit, And not dismemher Cæsar! But, alas, Cæsar must bleed for it! And, gentle friends, Let's kill him holdly, hut not wrathfully; Let's carve him as a dish fit for the gods, Not hew him as a carcase fit for hounds: And let our hearts, as subtle masters do, Stir up their servants to an act of rage, And after seem to chide 'em. This shall make Our purpose necessary, and not envious: Which so appearing to the common eyes, We shall he call'd purgers, not murderers. And for Mark Antony, think not of him; For he can do no more than Cæsar's arm When Cæsar's head is off.

Cas. Yet I fear him: For in the engrafted love he bears to Cæsar, Bru. Alas, good Cassius, do not think of him: If he love Cæsar, all that he can do Is to himself,—take thought and die for Cæsar: And that were much he should; for he is given To sports, to wildness, and much company. - Treb. There is no fear in him; let him not

For he will live, and laugh at this hereafter. Clock strikes. Bru. Peace, count the clock. The clock hath stricken three. Cas Treb 'Tis time to part.

Cas. But it is doubtful yet Whether Cæsar will come forth to-day or no: For he is superstitious grown of late; Quite from the main opinion he held once Of fantasy, of dreams, and ceremonies: It may he these apparent prodigies, The unaccustom'd terror of this night, And the persuasion of his augurers, May hold him from the Capitol to-day.

Dec. Never fear that: if he be so resolv'd I can o'ersway him; for he loves to hear That unicorns may he hetray'd with trees. And hears with glasses, elephants with holes. Lions with toils, and men with flatterers: But when I tell him he hates flatterers, He says he does,—heing then most flatter'd. Let me work;

For I can give his humour the true bent. And I will bring him to the Capitol.

Cas. Nay, we will all of us be there to fetch him. Bru. By the eighth hour: is that the utter-Cin. Be that the uttermost, and fail not then.

Met. Caius Ligarius doth hear Cæsar hard, Who rated him for speaking well of Pompey: I wonder none of you have thought of him.

Bru. Now, good Metellus, go along by him: He loves me well, and I have given him reasons:

Send him but hither, and I'll fashion him. Cas. The morning comes upon's: we'll leave you, Brutus: member

And, friends, disperse yourselves: but all re-What you have said, and show yourselves true Romans.

Bru. Good gentlemen, look fresh and merrily; Let not our looks put on our purposes; But hear it as our Roman actors do, With untir'd spirits and formal constancy; And so, good-morrow to you every one.

Exeunt all but BRUTUS. Boy! Lucius!—Fast asleep? it is no matter; Enjoy the heavy honey-dew of slumher: Thou hast no figures nor no fantasies Which busy care draws in the brains of men; Therefore thou sleep'st so sound.

Enter Portia.

Brutus, my lordl Por. Bru. Portia, what mean you? wherefore rise you now?

It is not for your health thus to commit Your weak condition to the raw cold morning. Por. Nor for yours neither. You have un-gently, Brutus, Stole from my bed: and yesternight, at supper, You suddenly arose, and walk'd about, Musing and sighing, with your arms across; And when I ask'd you what the matter was, You star'd upon me with ungentle looks: I urg'd you further; then you scratch'd your head, And too impatiently stamp'd with your foot: Yet I insisted, yet you answer'd not; But with an angry wafture of your hand Gave sign for me to leave you: so I did; Fearing to strengthen that impatience

Made him joint-servant with me; gave him way In all his own desires; nay, let him choose Out of my files, his projects to accomplish, My best and freshest men; serv'd his design-

In mine own person; holp to reap the fame Which he made all his; and took some pride To do myself this wrong: till, at the last, I seem'd his follower, not partner; and He was'd me with his countenance as if I had been mercenary.

r Con. So he did, my lord: The army marvell'd at it; and, in the last. When he had carried Rome, and that we look'd

For no less spoil than glory,-

Auf. There was it;—

for which my sinews shall be stretch'd upon At a few drops of women's rheum, which are As cheap as lies, he sold the blood and labour Of our great action: therefore shall he die, And I'll renew me in his fall. But, hark!

Drums and trumpets sound, with great shouts of the people.

I Con. Your native town you enter'd like a post,

And had no welcomes home; but he returns
Splitting the air with noise.

2 Con.
And patient fools,
Whose children he hath slain, their base throats

With giving him glory.

3 Con. Therefore, at your vantage, Ere he express himself, or move the people With what he would say, let him feel your sword, Which we will second. When he lies along, After your way his tale pronounc'd shall bury His reasons with his body.

_Auf. Say no more:

Here come the lords.

Enter the Lords of the City.

Lords. You are most welcome home. Auf. I have not deserved it. But, worthy lords, have you with heed perus'd What I have written to you?

Lords. We have.

I Lord. And grieve to hear't.

What faults he made before the last, I think Might have found easy fines: but there to end Where he was to begin, and give away. The benefit of our levies, answering us With our own charge: making a treaty where There was a yielding. This admits no excuse.

Auf. He approaches: you shall hear him.

Enter CORIOLANUS, with drums and colours; a crowd of Citizens with him.

Cor. Hail, lords! I am return'd your soldier; No more infected with my country's love Than when I parted hence, but still subsisting Under your great command. You are to know That prosperously I have attempted, and With bloody passage led your wars even to The gates of Rome. Our spoils we have brought home

Do more than counterpoise a full third part. The charges of the action. We have made peace With no less honour to the Antietes Than shame to the Romans: and we here deliver.

Subscribed by the consuls and patricians. Together with the seal o' the senate, what We have compounded on.

Auf. Reed it not, noble lords; But tell the traitor, in the highest degree He hath abus'd your powers.

Cor. Traitor!—How now!
Auf.
Av. traitor. Ma

Auf. Ay, traitor, Marcius.
Cor. Marcius!
Auf. Ay, Marcius, Caius Marcius. Dost

thou think
I'll grace thee with that robbery, thy stol'n

Coriolanus in Corioli?-

You lords and heads o' the state, perfidiously He has betray'd your business, and given up, For certain drops of salt, your city Rome,—I say your city,—to his wife and mother; Breeking his oath and resolution, like A twist of rotten silk; never admitting Counsel o' the war; but at his nurse's tears He whin'd and roar'd away your victory;

That pages blush'd at him, and men of heart Look'd wondering each at other.

Cor. Hear'st thou, Mars?

Auf. Name not the god, thou boy of tears,—

Cor. Ha!

Auf. No more.

Cor. Measureless liar, thou hast made my heart [slave]

Too great for what contains it. Boyl O Pardon me, lords, 'tis the first time that ever I was forc'd to scold. Your judgments, my grave lords,

Must give this cur the lie: and his own notion,— Who wears my stripes impress'd upon him;

that must bear My beating to his grave,—shell join to thrust

The lie unto him.

1 Lord. Pesce, both, and hear me speak.

Cor. Cut me to pieces, Volsces; men and hids,

Stain all -your edges on me.—Boy! False

Stain all-your edges on me.—Boy! Fals hound!

If you have writ your annals true, 'tis there,

That, like an eagle in a dove-cote, I
Flatter'd your Volscians in Corioli:
Alone I did it.—Boy!

Auf. Why, noble lords,

Will you be put in mind of his blind fortune, Which was your shame, by this unholy braggart, 'Fore your own eyes and ears?

Constitutors.

Let him die for't.

Constitutors. Let him die for't.

Citizens. Tear him to pieces, do it presently:— he killed my son;—my daughter;—he killed my cousin Marcus;—he killed my father,— z Lord. Pesce, ho!—no outrage;—pesce! The man is noble, and his fame folds in This orb o' the earth. His last offences to us Shall have judicious hearing.—Stand, Aufidius.

And trouble not the peace.

Cor. O that I had him, With six Aufidiuses, or more, his tribe, To use my lawful sword!

 Fierce fiery warriors fight upon the clouds, In ranks and squadrons and right form of war, Which drizzled blood upon the Capitol; The noise of battle hurtled in the air, Horses did neigh, and dying men did groan: And ghosts did shrick and squeal about the streets.

O Cæsar, these things are beyond all use, And I do fear them!

What can be avoided, Whose end is purpos'd by the mighty gods? Yet Cæsar shall go forth; for these predictions Are to the world in general as to Cæsar.

Cal. When beggars die there are no comets seen; of princes. The heavens themselves blaze forth the death Cæs. Cowards die many times before their deaths: The valiant never taste of death but once. Of all the wonders that I yet have heard. It seems to me most strange that men should fear:

Seeing that death, a necessary end, Will come when it will come.

Re-enter Servant.

What say the augurers? Serv. They would not have you to stir forth to-day.

Plucking the entrails of an offering forth, They could not find a heart within the beast. The gods do this in shame of cowardice: Cæsar should be a beast without a heart If he should stay at home to-day for fear. No, Cæsar shall not: danger knows full well That Cæsar is more dangerous than he: We are two lions litter'd in one day, And I the elder and more terrible:-And Cæser shall go forth.

Alas, my lord, Your wisdom is consum'd in confidence. to not go forth to-day; call it my fear That keeps you in the house, and not your own We'll send Mark Antony to the senate-house; And he shall say you are not well to-day: Let me, upon my knee, prevail in this. Cæs. Mark Antony shall say I am not well;

And for thy humour I will stay at home.

Enter DECIUS.

Here's Decius Brutus, he shall tell them so. Dec. Cæsar, all haill Good-morrow, worthy Cæsar:

I come to fetch you to the senate-house. Cæs. And you are come in very happy time, To bear my greeting to the senators, And tell them that I will not come to-day: Cannot, is false; and that I dare not, falser: I will not come to-day, -tell them so, Decius. Cal. Say he is sick.

Shall Cæsar send a lie? Have I in conquest stretch'd mine arm so far, To be afeard to tell graybeards the truth? Decius, go tell them Cæsar will not come. Dec. Most mighty Cæsar, let me know some Lest I be laugh'd at wnen I tell them so.

Cæs. The cause is in my will, -I will no

That is enough to satisfy the senate. But for your private satisfaction. Because I love you, I will let you know. Calphurnia here, my wife, stays me at home: She dreamt to-night she saw my statua, Which, like a fountain with a hundred spouts, Did run pure blood; and many lusty Romans Came smiling and did bathe their hands in it: And these does she apply for warnings and portents.

And evils imminent; and on her knee Hath begg'd that I will stay at home to-day. Dec. This dream is all amiss interpreted;

It was a vision fair and fortunate: Your statue spouting blood in many pipes, In which so many smiling Romans bath'd, Signifies that from you great Rome shall suck Reviving blood; and that great men shall press For tinctures, stains, relics, and cognizance. This by Calphurnia's dream is signified. lit.

Cas. And this way have you well expounded Dec. I have, when you have heard what I can say: And know it now,—the senate have concluded To give this day a crown to mighty Cæsar. If you shall send them word you will not come, Their minds may change. Besides, it were a mock.

Apt to be render'd, for some one to say, Break up the senate till another time, When Cæsar's wife shall meet with better dreams.

If Casar hide himself, shall they not whisper, Lo, Casar is afraid? Pardon me, Cæsar; for my dear dear love To your proceeding bids me tell you this; And reason to my love is liable.

Cæs. How foolish do your fears seem now,

Calphurnial I am ashamed I did yield to them. Give me my robe for I will go:

Enter Publius, Brutus, Ligarius, Me-TELLUS, CASCA, TREBONIUS, and CINNA.

And look where Publius is come to fetch me.

Pub. Good-morrow, Cæsar. Welcome, Publius.— What, Brutus, are you stirred so early too?-Good-morrow, Casca.—Caius Ligarius, Casar was ne'er so much your enemy As that same ague which hath made you lean.-What is't o'clock?

Cæsar, 'tis strucken eight. Bru. Cæs. Ithank you for your pains and courtesy.

Enter ANTONY.

Seel Antony, that revels long o' nights Is notwithstanding up.-Good-morrow, Antony.

So to most noble Cæsar. Ant.

Cæs. Bid them prepare within. I am to blame to be thus waited for.— Now Cinna;—now Metellus:—what, Treboniusi

I have an hour's talk in store for you; Remember that you call on me to-day: Be near me, that I may remember you.

ACT I.

Scene I .- Rome. A Street.

Enter FLAVIUS, MARULLUS, and a rabble of Citizens.

Flav. Hence! home, you idle creatures, get you home:
Is this a holiday? What! know you not,
Being mechanical, you ought not walk

Upon a labouring day without the sign Of your profession?—Speak, what trade art thou?

I Cit. Why, sir, a carpenter. [rule? Mar. Where is thy leather apron and thy What dost thou with thy best apparel on?—You, sir, what trade are you?

2 Cit. Truly, sir, in respect of a fine workman,

I am but, as you would say, a cobbler.

Mar. But what trade art thou? answer me old of the directly.

2 Cit. A trade, sir, that I hope I may use with a safe conscience; which is indeed, sir, a mender of bad soles.

Mar. What trade, thou knave, thou naughty knave, what trade?

2 Cit. Nay, I beseech you, sir, be not out with me: yet, if you be ont, sir, I can mend you.

Mar. What meanest thou by that? mend me, thou saucy fellow!

2 Cit. Why, sir, cobble you.
Flav. Thou art a cobbler, art thou?

Cas. What enterprise, Popilius?
Pop. Fare you well.
[Advances to CÆSAR.

Bru. What said Popilius Lena?

Cas. He wish'd to-day our enterprise might thrive.

I fear our purpose is discovered.

Bru. Look how he makes to Cæsar: mark him. [tion.—

Cas. Casca, be sudden, for we fear preven-Brutus, what shall be done? If this be known, Cassius or Cæsar never shall turn back, For I will slay myself.

Bru. Cassius, be constant: Popilius Lena speaks not of our purposes; For, look, he smiles, and Cæsar doth not change.

Cas. Trebonius knows his time; for, look you, Brutus,

He draws Mark Antony out of the way.

[Exeunt ANT. and TREB. CESAR and the Senators take their seats.

Dec. Where is Metellus Cimber? Let him

And presently prefer his suit to Cæsar.

Bru. He is address'd: press near and second him.

Cin. Casca, you are the first that rears your hand.

Casca. Are we all ready? Caes. What is now amiss

That Casar and his senate must redress?

Met. Most high, most mighty, and most puissant Cæsar,

Metellus Cimber throws before thy seat An humble heart,— [Kneeling.

Cæs. I must prevent thee, Cimber. These couchings and these lowly courtesies turn pre-ordinance and first decree the law of children. Be not fond To think that Cæsar bears such rebel blood That will be thaw'd from the true quality With that which melteth fools; I mean, sweet words,

Low crooked curt'sies, and base spaniel fawning. Thy brother by decree is banished: If thou dost bend, and pray, and fawn for him, I spurn thee like a cur out of my way. Know, Cæsar doth not wrong; nor without

Will he be satisfied.

Met. Is there no voice more worthy than my

To sound more sweetly in great Cæsar's ear For the repealing of my banish'd brother? Bru. I kiss thy hand, but not in flattery, Cæsar.

Desiring thee that Publius Cimber may Have an immediate freedom of repeal.

Cæs. What, Brutus!

Cas. Pardon, Cæsar; Cæsar, pardon: As low as to thy foot doth Cassius fall, To beg enfranchisement for Publius Cimber.

Cæs. I could be well mov'd if I were as you; it I could pray to move, prayers would move me:

But I am constant as the northern star,
If whose true-fix'd and resting quality
There is no fellow in the firmament.

The skies are painted with unnumber'd sparks,—
They are all fire, and every one doth shine;
But there's but one in all doth hold his place:
So in the world,—'tis furnish'd well with men,
And men are flesh and blood, and apprehensive;
Yet in the number I do know but one
That unassailable holds on his rank,
Unshak'd of motion: and that I am he,
Let me a little show it even in this,—
That I was constant Cimber should be banish'd,
And constant do remain to keep him so.

Cin. O Cæsar,— Cæs. Hence! wilt thou lift up Olympus?

Dec. Great Cæsar,-

Cæs. Doth not Brutus bootless kneel? Casca. Speak, hands, for me!

[CASCA stabs CÆSAR in the neck. CÆSAR catches hold of his arm. He is then stabbed by several other Conspirators, and at last by MARCUS BRUTUS.

Cæs. Et tu, Brute?—Then fall, Cæsar!
[Dies. The Senators and People retire in confusion.

Cin. Liberty! Freedom! Tyranny is dead!— Run hence, proclaim, cry it about the streets, Cas. Some to the common pulpits, and cry out, Liberty, freedom, and enfranchisement!

Bru. People and senators! be not affrighted,
Fly not; stand still: ambition's debt is paid.

Casca. Go to the pulpit, Brutus.

Dec.

And Cassius too.

Bru. Where's Publius? [mutiny, Cin. Here, quite confounded with this Met. Stand fast together, lest some friend of

Cmsar's
Should chance,—
Bru. Talk not of standing.—Publius, good
There is no harm intended to your person,
Nor to no Roman else: so tell them, Publius.

Cas. And leave us, Publius; lest that the people, Rushing on us, should do your age some mischief.

Bru. Do so: and let no man abide this deed,
But we the doers.

Re-enter TREBONIUS.

Cas. Where is Antony?
Tre.
Fled to his house amaz'd:
Men, wives, and children stare, cry out, and run,

As it were doomsday.

Bru. Fates! we will know your pleasures.—
That we shall die, we know; 'tis but the time,
And drawing days out, that men stand upon.
Cas. Why, he that cuts off twenty years of life, Cuts off so many years of fearing death.

Bru. Grant that, and then is death a benefit: So are we Cæsar's friends, that have abridg'd His time of fearing death.—Stoop, Romans, stoop,

And let us bathe our hands in Cæsar's blood Up to the elbows, and besmear our swords: Then walk we forth even to the market-place, And, waving our red weapons o'er our heads, Let's all cry, Peace! freedom! and liberty!

Cas. Stoop then, and wash.—How many ages hence

Cas. 'Tis just:
And it is very much lamented, Brutus,
That you bave no such mirrors as will turn
Your hidden worthiness into your eye,
That you might see your shadow. I bave heard,
Where many of the best respect in Rome,—
Except immortal Cæsar,—speaking of Brutus,
And groaning nnderneath this age's yoke,
Have wisb'd that noble Brutus had his eyes.
Bru. Into what dangers would you lead me,

Cassius,
That you would have me seek into myself
For that which is not in me? | | | |

Cas. Therefore, good Brutus, be prepar'd to And, since you know you cannot see yourself So well as by reflection, I, your glass, Will modestly discover to yourself That of yourself which you yet know not of. And be not jealous on me, gentle Brutus: Were I a common langher, or did use To stale with ordinary oaths my love To every new protester; if you know That I do fawn on men, and hug them bard, And after scandal them; or if you know That I profess myself in hanqueting To all the rout, then hold me dangerous.

[Flourish and shout.

Bru. What means this shouting? I do fear the people

Choose Casar for their king.

Cas.

Ay, do you fear it?
Then must I think you would not have it so.

Bru. I would not, Cassius; yet I love him

well.—
But wherefore do you hold me here so long?
What is it that yon would impart to me?
If it be aught toward the general good,
Set honour in one eye and death i' the other,
And I will look on both indifferently;
For, let the gods so speed me as I love

The name of honour more than I fear death. Cas. I know that virtue to be in you, Brutus, As well as I do know your outward favour. Well, honour is the subject of my story. I cannot tell what you and other men Think of this life; but, for my single self, I had as lief not be as live to be In awe of such a thing as I myself. I was born free as Cæsar; so were you: We both have fed as well: and we can both Endure the winter's cold as well as he. For once, upon a raw and gusty day, The troubled Tiber chafing with her shores, Cæsar said to me, Dar'st thou, Cassius, now Leap in with me into this angry flood, And swim to yonder point?—Upon the word, Accourted as I was, I plunged in, And bade him follow: so indeed he did. The torrent roar'd; and we did buffet it With lusty sinews, throwing it aside And stemming it with hearts of controversy: But ere we could arrive the point propos'd, Cassar cried, Help me, Cassius, or I sink! I, as Eneas, our great ancestor, Did from the flames of Troy upon his shoulder The old Anchises bear, so from the waves of Tiber

Did I the tired Cæsar: and this man

If Cæsar carelessly but nod on him.
He bad a fever when he was in Spain,
And, when the fit was on him, I did mark
How be did shake: 'fis true, this god did shake:
His coward lips did from their colour fiy;
And that same eye, whose hend doth awe the world,

Did lose his lustre: I did hear him groan: Ay, and that tongue of his, that bade the Romans

Mark him, and write his speeches in their books, Alas! it cried, Give me some drink, Titimus. As a sick girl. Ye gods, it doth amaze me, A man of such a feeble temper should So get the start of the majestic world, And bear the palm alone. [Shout: flourish.

Bru. Another general shout!
I do believe that these applanses are Forsome new honours that are heap'd on Cesar.
Cas. Why, man, he doth hestride the narrow

world

Like a Colossus; and we petty men
Walk under his hnge legs, and peep about
To find ourselves dishonourable graves.
Men at some time are masters of their fates:
The fault, dear Brutus, is not in our stars,
But in ourselves, that we are underlings.
Brutus and Cæsar: wbat should be in that Cæsar? Iyours? Why should that name be sounded more than Write them together, yours is as fair a name; Sound them, it doth become the mouth as well; Weigh them, it is as heavy; conjure with 'em, Brutuswillstart aspiritas soon as Cæsar. [Shout. Now, in the names of all the gods at once, Upon what meat doth this our Cæsar feed, That he has grown so great? Age, thon art sham'd!

Rome, thou hast lost the breed of noble bloods!
When went there by an age, since the great flood, But it was fam'd with more than with one man? When could they say, till now, that talk'd of

Rome,
That her wide walls encompass'd but one man?
Now is it Rome indeed, and room enough,
When there is in it but one only man.
O! you and I have heard our fathers say,
There was a Brutus once that would have brook'd The eternal devil to keep his state in Rome As easily as a king.

Bru. That you do love me, I am nothing jealous;

What you would work me to, I have some zim:
How I have thought of this, and of these times,
I shall recount hereafter; for this present,
I would not, so with love I might entreat you,
Be any further mov'd. What yon have said
I will consider; what yon have to say
I will with patience hear: and find a time
Both meet to hear and answer such high things.
Till then, my noble friend, chew npon this;
Brutus had rather be a villager
Than to repute himnel! a son of Rome

Under these hard conditions as this time
Is like to lay upon us.
Ccs. I am glad that my weak words fire from

That were you, Antony, the son of Cæsar, You should be satisfied.

That's all I seek: And am moreover suitor that I may Produce his body to the market-place; And in the pulpit, as becomes a friend, Speak in the order of his funeral.

Bru. You shall, Mark Antony. Cas. Brutus, a word with you. You know not what you do: do not consent That Antony speak in his funeral: Know you how much the people may be moved By that which he will utter?

(Aside to BRUTUS. Bru. By your pardon;-I will myself into the pulpit first, And show the reason of our Cæsar's death: What Antony shall speak, I will protest He speaks by leave and by permission; And that we are contented Cæsar shall Have all true rites and lawful ceremonies. . It shall advantage more than do us wrong.

Cas. I know not what may fall; I like it not. Bru. Mark Antony, here, take you Cæsar's body. You shall not in your funeral speech blame us, But speak all good you can devise of Cæsar; And say you do't by our permission; Else shall you not have any hand at all About his funeral: and you shall speak In the same pulpit whereto I am going, After my speech is ended.

Ant. Be it so; I do desire no more.

Bru. Prepare the body then, and follow us. Exeunt all but ANTONY.

Ant. O, pardon me, thou bleeding piece of earth,

That I am meek and gentle with these butchers! Thou art the ruins of the noblest man That ever lived in the tide of times Woe to the hand that shed this costly blood! Over thy wounds now do I prophesy, Which like dumb mouths do ope their ruby lips, To beg the voice and utterance of my tongue,-A curse shall light upon the limbs of men; Domestic fury and fierce civil strife Shall cumber all the parts of Italy; Blood and destruction shall be so in use, And dreadful objects so familiar, That mothers shall but smile when they behold Their infants quarter'd with the hands of war; All pity chok'd with custom of fell deeds: And Cæsar's spirit, ranging for revenge, With Ate by his side come hot from hell, Shall in these confines with a monarch's voice Cry Havoc, and let slip the dogs of war; That this foul deed shall smell above the earth With carrion men, groaning for burial.

. Enter a Servant.

You serve Octavius Cæsar, do you not? Serv. I do, Mark Antony. Ant. Cæsar did write for him to come to Rome. Serv. He did receive his letters, and is com- If any, speak; for him have I offended. And bid me say to you by word of mouth, [Seeing the body. Ant. Thy heart is big, get thee apart and weep.

Passion, I see, is catching; for mine eyes, Seeing those beads of sorrow stand in thine, Began to water. Is thy master coming?

Serv. He lies to-night within seven leagues of Rome.

Ant. Post back with speed, and tell him what hath chanc'd:

Here is a mourning Rome, a dangerous Rome, No Rome of safety for Octavius yet; Hie hence and tell him so. Yet, stay awhile; Thou shalt not back till I have borne this corse Into the market-place: there shall I try, In my oration, how the people take

The cruel issue of these bloody men; According to the which thou shalt discourse To young Octavius of the state of things. Lend me your hand.

Exeunt with CESAR's bodu.

Scene II .- Rome. The Forum.

Enter BRUTUS and CASSIUS, and a throng of Citizens.

Citizens. We will be satisfied; let us be friends .satisfied. Bru. Then follow me, and give me audience, Cassius, go you into the other street,

And part the numbers.-Those that will hear me speak, let 'em stay here; Those that will follow Cassius, go with him; And public reasons shall be rendered Of Cæsar's death.

I will hear Brutus speak.

2 Cit. I will hear Cassius; and compare their reasons,

When severally we hear them rendered. [Exit CASSIUS, with some of the Citizens. Brutus goes into the Rostrum.

3 Cit. The noble Brutus is ascended: silence!

Bru. Be patient till the last. Romans, countrymen, and lovers! hear me for my cause; and be silent, that you may hear: believe me for mine honour; and have respect to mine honour, that you may believe: censure me in your wisdom; and awake your senses, that you may the better judge. If there be any in this assembly, any dear friend of Casar's, to him I say that Brutus' love to Casar was no less than his. If, then, that friend demand why Brutus rose against Cæsar, this is my answer,-Not that I loved Casar less, but that I loved Rome more. Had you rather Cesar were living, and die all slaves, than that Cæsar were dead, to live all free men? As Casar loved me, I weep for him; as he was fortunate, I rejoice at it; as he was valiant, I honour him: but, as he was ambitious, I slew him: there is tears for his love; joy for his fortune; honour for his valour; and death for his ambition. Who is here so base that would be a bondman? If any, speak; for him have I offended. is here so rude that would not be a Roman? If any, speak; for him have I offended. [ing; is here so vile that will not love his country? pause for a reply.

Citizens. None, Brutus, none. Bru. Then none have I offended. I have done no more to Cæsar than you shall do to

Bru. What a blunt fellow is this grown to be! He was quick mettle when he went to school. Cos. So he is now, in execution

Of any bold or noble enterprise, However he puts on this tardy form. This rudeness is a sauce to his good wit, Which gives men stomach to digest his words With better appetite.

Bru. And so it is. For this time I will leave To-morrow, if you please to speak with me, I will come home to you; or, if you will, Come home to me, and I will wait for you.

Cas. I will do so: till then, think of the world. Exit BRUTUS. Well, Brutus thou art noble; yet, I see, Thy honourable metal may be wrought From that it is dispos'd: therefore it is meet That noble minds keep ever with their likes; For who so firm that cannot be seduc'd? Cæsar doth bear me hard; but he loves Brutus: If I were Brutus now, and he were Cassins, He should not humour me. I will this night, In several hands, in at his windows throw, As if they came from several citizens, Writings, all tending to the great opinion That Rome holds of his name; wherein ob-scurely Cæsar's ambition shall be glanced at: And, after this, let Cæsar seat him sure; For we will shake him, or worse days endure. Exit.

Scene III .- Rome. A Street.

Thunder and Lightning. Enter, from opposite sides, CASCA, with his sword drawn, and CICERO.

Cic. Good-even, Casca: brought you Cæsar home? Why are you breathless? and why stare you so? Casca. Are not you mov'd, when all the sway of earth

Shakes like a thing unfirm? O Cicero. I have seen tempests, when the scolding winds Have riv'd the knotty oaks; and I have seen The ambitions ocean swell, and rage, and foam, To be exalted with the threat'ning clonds: But never till to-night, never till now, Did I go through a tempest dropping fire. Either there is a civil strife in heaven; Or else the world, too sancy with the gods, Incenses them to send destruction.

Cic. Why, saw you anything more wonderful? Casca. A common slave, --you know him well by sight, --

Held up his left hand, which did flame and burn Like twenty torches join'd; and yet his hand, Not sensible of fire, remain'd unscorch'd. Besides,—I ha' not since put up my sword,-Against the Capitol I met a lion, Who glar'd upon me, and went surly by, Without annoying me: and there were drawn Upon a heap a hundred ghastly women, Transformed with their fear; who swore they SAW Men, all in fire, walk up and down the streets. And vesterday the bird of night did sit, Even at noon-day, upon the market-place, Hooting and shrieking. When these prodigies Do so conjointly meet, let not men say,

These are their reasons,—they are noturol; For I believe they are portentons things Unto the climate that they point upon.

Cic. Indeed, it is a strange-disposed time: But men may construe things after their fashion, Clean from the purpose of the things themselves. Comes Cæsar to the Capitol to-morrow?

Casca. He doth; for he did bid Antonius Send word to you he would be there to-morrow. Cic. Good-night, then, Casca: this disturbed sky Is not to walk in.

Casca. Farewell, Cicero.

Exit CICERO.

Enter CASSIUS.

Cas. Who's there? Casca. A Roman.

Cas. Casca, by your voice. Casca. Your ear is good. Cassins, what night is this!

Cas. A very pleasing night to honest men. Casca. Who ever knew the heavens menace of faults. so?

Cas. Those that have known the earth so full For my part, I have walk'd about the streets, Submitting me unto the perilous night; And, thus unbraced, Casca, as you see, Have bar'd my bosom to the thunder-stone: And when the cross-blue lightning seem'd to open

The breast of heaven, I did present myself Even in the aim and very flash of it.

Casca. But wherefore did you so much tempt . the heavens?

It is the part of men to fear and tremble When the most mighty gods, by tokens, send Such dreadful heralds to astonish us.

Cas. You are dull, Casca; and those sparks of life

That should be in a Roman you do want, Or else you use not. You look pale, and gaze, And put on fear, and cast yourself in wonder, To see the strange impatience of the heavens: But if you would consider the true cause Why all these fires, why all these gliding ghosts, Why birds and beasts, from quality and kind; Why old men fools, and children calculate; Why all these things change, from their ordinance,

Their natures, and pre-formed faculties, To monstrons quality;—why, you shall find That heaven hath infus'd them with these spirits.

To make them instruments of fear and warning Unto some monstrons state. Now could I, Casca, name to thee a man Most like this dreadful night

That thunders, lightens, opens graves, and

As doth the lion in the Capitol,-A man no mightier than thyself or me In personal action; yet prodigions grown, And fearful, as these strange eruptions are.

Casca. 'Tis Cæsar that you mean; is it not,

Cassins?

Cas. Let it be who it is: for Romans now Have thews and limbs like to their ancestors; But, woe the while our fathers' minds are dead, And we are govern'd with our mothers' spirits; Our yoke and sufferance show us womanish.

I have o'ershot myself to tell you of it: I fear I wrong the honourable men Whose daggers have stabb'd Cæsar; I do fear

4 Cit. They were traitors: honourable men! Citizens. The will the testament!

2 Cit. They were villains, murderers: the will! read the will! [will?

Ant. You will compel me, then, to read the Then make a ring about the corse of Cæsar, And let me show you him that made the will. Shall I descend? and will you give me leave?

Citizens. Come down. 2 Cit. Descend. [ANTONY comes down.

3 Cit. You shall have leave.

4 Cit. A ring; stand round.

i Cit. Stand from the hearse, stand from the body.

2 Cit. Room for Antony,-most Antonyl foff.

Ant. Nay, press not so upon me; stand far Citizens. Stand back; room; bear back! Ant. If you have tears, prepare to shed them now.

You all do know this mantle: I remember The first time ever Cæsar put it on; 'Twas on a summer's evening, in his tent, That day he overcame the Nervii:-Look! in this place ran Cassius' dagger through: See what a rent the envious Casca made: Through this the well-beloved Brutus stabb'd; And, as he pluck'd his cursed steel away, Mark how the blood of Cæsar follow'd it, As rushing out of doors, to be resolv'd If Brutus so unkindly knock'd or no; For Brutus, as you know, was Cæsar's angel: Judge, O you gods, how dearly Cæsar loved him1

This was the most unkindest cut of all; For when the noble Cesar saw him stab, Ingratitude, more strong than traitors' arms, Quite vanquish'd him: then burst his mighty heart; And, in his mantle muffling up his face, Even at the base of Pompey's statua, Which all the while ran blood, great Cæsar fell. O, what a fall was there, my countrymen! Then I, and you, and all of us fell down, Whilst bloody treason flourish'd over us. O, now you weep; and I perceive you feel The dint of pity: these are gracious drops. Kind souls, what, weep you when you but behold

Our Cæsar's vesture wounded? Lookyouhere, Here is himself, marr'd, as you see, with traitors.

I Cit. O piteous spectacle!

2 Cit. O noble Cæsarl

3 Cit. O woeful day! 4 Cit. O traitors, villains!

I Cit. O most bloody sight!

2 Cit. We will be revenged: revenge, about, -seek, -burn, -fire, -kill, -slay, -let not a traitor live!

Ant. Stay, countrymen.

I Cit. Peace therel hear the noble Antony. 2 Cit. We'll hear him, we'll follow him, we'll die with him. Ant. Good friends, sweet friends, let me not stir you up

To such a sudden flood of mutiny. They that have done this deed are honourable;--

well

What private griefs they have, alas, I know not, That made them do it;—they are wise and honourable, And will, no doubt, with reasons answer you. I come not, friends, to steal away your hearts: I am no orator, as Brutus is:

But, as you know me all, a plain blunt man, That love my friend; and that they know full

That gave me public leave to speak of him: For I have neither wit, nor words, nor worth, Action, nor utterance, nor the power of speech, To stir men's blood: I only speak right on: I tell you that which you yourselves do know: Show you sweet Cæsar's wounds, poor poor dumb mouths,

And bid them speak for me: but were I Brutus. And Brutus Antony, there were an Antony Would ruffle up your spirits, and put a tongue In every wound of Cæsar, that should move The stones of Rome to rise and mutiny. Citizens. We'll mutiny.

I Cit. We'll burn the house of Brutus.

3 Cit. Away, thenl come seek the conspirators.

Ant. Yet hear me, countrymen; yet hear me speak.

Citizens. Peace, hol hear Antony, most noble Antony.

Ant. Why, friends, you go to do you know not what: Wherein hath Cæsar thus deserv'd your loves? Alas, you know not,-I must tell you, then.-

You have forgot the will I told you of. Citizens. Most true;—the will:—let's stay and hear the will. Ant. Here is the will and under Cæsar's seal To every Roman citizen he gives,

To every several man, seventy-five drachmas. 2 Cit. Most noble Cæsar!-we'll revenge his death. 3 Cit. O royal Cæsarl

Ant. Hear me with patience. Citizens. Peace, hol

Ant. Moreover, he hath left you all his walks, His private arbours, and new-planted orchards On this side Tiber; he hath left them you, And to your heirs for ever,—common pleasures, To walk abroad and recreate yourselves. Here was a Cæsarl when comes such another?

I Cit. Never, never.—Come away, awayl We'll burn his body in the holy place, And with the brands fire the traitors' houses.

Take up the body.

2 Cit. Go, fetch fire.
3 Cit. Pluck down benches.
4 Cit. Pluck down forms, windows, anything. Exeunt Citizens with the body. Ant. Now let it work: mischief, thou art afoot. Take thou what course thou wilti

Enter a Servant.

How now, fellow! Serv. Sir, Octavius is already come to Rome. Ant. Where is he?

Serv. He and Lepidus are at Cæsar's house.

Will bear no colour for the thing he is. Fashion it thus; that what he is, augmented, Would run to these and these extremities: And therefore think him as a serpeut's egg, Which, hatch'd, would as his kind grow mischievous;

And kill him in the shell.

Re-enter Lucius.

Luc. The taper burneth in your closet, sir. Searching the window for a fliut, I found [Giving him a letter.

This paper, thus seal'd up; and I am sure It did not lie there when I went to bed. Bru. Get you to bed again, it is not day

Is not to-morrow, boy, the ides of March? Luc. I know not, sir. [word. Bru. Look in the calendar, and bring me

Luc. I will, sir. [Exit. Bru. The exhalations, whirzing in the air, Give so much light that I may read by them. [Opens the letter and reads.

Brutus, thou sleep'st: awake, and see thyself. Shall Rome, &c. Speak, strike, recress! Brutus, thou sleep'st: awake. Such instigations have been often dropp'd Where I have took them up. Shall Rome, &c. Thus must I piece it out, Shall Rome, &c. Shall Rome stand under one man's awe? What, Rome?

My ancestors did from the streets of Rome The Tarquin drive, when he was call'd a king. Speak, strike, redress! - Am I entreated then To speak and strike! O Rome! I make thee oromise.

If the redress will follow, thou receivest Thy full petition at the hand of Brutus?

Re-enter LUCIUS.

Luc. Sir, March is wasted fourteen days. (Knocking within. Bru. 'Tis good. Go to the gate; somebody Exit Lucius. knocks. Since Cassius first did whet me against Casar, I have not slept. Between the acting of a dreadful thing And the first motion, all the interim is Like a phantasma or a hideous dream: The genins and the mortal instruments Are then in council; and the state of man, Like to a little kingdom, suffers then The nature of an insurrection.

Re-enter Lucius.

Luc. Sir, 'tis your brother Cassius at the door Who doth desire to see you

Is he alone? Bru. Luc. No, sir, there are more with him. Do you know them? Bru. Luc. No, sir; their hats are plack'd about their ears,

And half their faces buried in their cloaks, That by no means I may discover them By any mark of favour. Let 'em enter.

Exit Lucius. [night, They are the faction. O conspiracy,

When evils are most free? O, then, by day Where wilt thou find a cavern dark enough To mask thy monstrous visage? Seek none, conspiracy;

Hide it in smiles and affability: For if thou hath thy native semblance on. Not Erebus itself were dim enough To hide thee from prevention.

Enter Cassius, Casca, Decius, Cinna, METELLUS CIMBER, and TREBONIUS.

Cas. I think we are too bold upon your rest: Good-morrow, Brutus; do we trouble goul?

Bru. I have been up this hour; awake all night. Know I these men that come along with you? Cas. Yes, every man of them; and no man here But honours you; and every one doth wish You had but that opinion of yourself Which every noble Roman bears of von.

This is Trebonius. Bru. He is welcome hither.

Cas. This, Decius Brutus. He is welcome too. Cas. This, Casca; this, Cinna;

And this, Metellus Cimber.

They are all welcome. What watchful cares do interpose themselves Betwixt your eyes and night?

Cas. Shall I entreat a word?

[BRUTUS and CASSIUS whister. Dec. Here lies the east; doth not the day break here?

Casca. No.

Cin. O, pardon, sir, it doth; and you grey That fret the clouds are messengers of day.

Casca. You shall confess that you are both deceiv'd.

Here, as I point my sword, the sun arises; Which is a great way growing on the south, Weighing the youthful season of the year. Some two months hence up higher toward the north

He first presents his fire; and the high east Stands, as the Capitol, directly here.

Bru. Give me your hands all over, one by one.

Cas. And let us swear our resolution. Bru. No, not an oath: if not the face of men, The sufferance of our souls, the time's abuse. If these be motives weak, break off betimes, And every man hence to his idle bed: So let high-sighted tyranny range on, Till each man drop by lottery. But if these, As I am sure they do, bear fire enough To kindle cowards, and to steel with valour The melting spirits of women; then, countrymen. What need we any spur, but our own cause, To prick us to redress? what other bond Than secret Romans, that have spoke the word And will not palter? and what other oath Than honesty to honesty eugag'd That this shall be, or we will fall for it? Swear priests, and cowards, and men cautelous, Old feeble carrious, and such suffering souls Sham'st thon to show thy dangerous brow by That welcome wrongs; and bad causes swear Bru. He greets me well.—Your master, Pindarus,

In his own change, or by ill officers, Hath given me some worthy cause to wish Things done undone: but if he be at hand I sball be satisfied.

I do not doubt But that my noble master will appear Such as be is, full of regard and honour.

Bru. He is not doubted .- A word, Lucilius; How he receiv'd you let me be resolv'd.

Lucil. With courtesy and with respect enough;

But not with such familiar instances Nor with such free and friendly conference As he hath us'd of old.

Bru. Thou hast describ'd A hot friend cooling: ever note, Lucilius, When love begins to sicken and decay, It useth enforced ceremony.

There are no tricks in plain and simple faith: But hollow men, like horses hot at hand, Make gallant show and promise of their mettle; But when they should endure the bloody spur, They fall their crests, and like deceitful jades, Sink in the trial. Comes his army on?

Lucil. They mean this night in Sardis to be quarter'd;

The greater part, the horse in general, Are come with Cassins. [March within. Bru. Hark! he is arriv'd: March gently on to meet him.

Enter CASSIUS and Soldiers.

Cas. Stand, ho!

Bru. Stand, ho! speak the word along.

Within, Stand!. Within, Stand!

[wrong. Within. Standl Cas. Most noble brother, you have done me Bru. Judge' me, you gods! wrong I mine enemies? And, if not so, how should I wrong a hrother? Cas. Brutus, this sober form of yours hides wrongs; And when you do them,

Cassius, be content; Speak your griefs softly,—I do know you well:-Before the eyes of both our armies here, Which should perceive nothing but love from

Let us not wrangle: bid them move away; Then in my tent, Cassius, enlarge your griefs, And I will give you audience.

Cas. Pindarus, Bid our commanders lead their charges off A little from this ground.

Bru. Lucilius, do you the like; and let no Come to our tent till we have done our conference.

Let Lucius and Titinius guard our door. Exeunt.

SCENE III .- Within the Tent of BRUTUS.

Enter BRUTUS and CASSIUS.

Cas. That you hath wrong'd me doth appear I said an elder soldier, not a better: in this,-

You have condemn'd and noted Lucius Pelia

For taking bribes here of the Sardians: Wherein my letters, praying on his side, Because I knew the man, were slighted off. Bru. You wrong'd yourself, to write in such a case.

Cas. In such a time as this it is not meet That every nice offence should bear his comment.

Bru. Let me tell you, Cassius, you yourself Are much condemn'd to have an itching palm; To sell and mart your offices for gold To underservers.

I an itching palm! Cas.

You know that you are Brutus that speak this, Or, by the gods, this speech were else your last. Bru. The name of Cassius honours this corruption,

And chastisement doth therefore hide his head. Cas. Chastisement!

Bru. Remember March, the ides of March rememberl

Did not great Julius bleed for justice' sake? What villain touch'd his body, that did stab, And not for justice? What, shall one of us, That struck the foremost man of all this world But for supporting robbers, shall we now Contaminate our fingers with base bribes. And sell the mighty space of our large honours For so much trash as may he grasped thus?— I had rather he a dog, and bay the moon, Than such a Roman.

Cas. Brutus, bay not me, I'll not endure it: you forget yourself To hedge me in; I am a soldier, I, Older in practice, abler than yourself To make conditions.

Go to; you are not, Cassius. Bru.

Cas. I am.

Bru. I say you are not.

Cas. Urge me no more, I shall forget myself; Have mind upon your health, tempt me no further.

Bru. Away, slight man! Cas. Is't possible?

Hear me, for I will speak. Must I give way and room to your rash choler? Shall I he frighted when a madman stares?

Cas. O ye gods, ye gods! must I endure all this?

Bru. All this! ay, more: fret till your proud heart hreak;

Go, show your slaves how choleric you are, And make your bondmen tremble. Must I budge? Must I observe you? Must I stand and crouch Under your testy humour? By the gods, You shall digest the venom of your spleen Though it do split you; for from this day forth I'll use you for my mirth, yea, for my langhter, When you are waspisb.

Is it come to this? Cas. Bru. You say you are a hetter soldier: Let it appear so; make your vaunting true, And it shall please me well: for mine own part, I shall be glad to learn of noble men. Cas. You wrong me every way; you wrong me, Brutus;

Did I say better?

If you did, I care not. Bru.

Which seem'd too much enkindled; and withal Hoping it was but an effect of humour, Which sometime hath his hour with every man. It will not let you eat, nor talk, nor sleep; And, could it work so much upon your shape As it hath much prevail'd on your condition, I should not know you, Brutus. Dear my lord, Make me acquainted with your cause of grief. Bru. I am not well in health, and that is all. Por. Brutus is wise, and were he uot in health.

health. He would embrace the means to come by it. Bru. Why, so I do.—Good Portia, go to bed. Por. Is Brutus sick? and is it physical To walk unbraced, and suck up the humours Of the dank morning? What, is Brutus sick, And will he steal out of his wholesome bed, To dare the vile contagion of the night, And tempt the rheumy and unpurg'd air To add unto his sickness? No, my Brutus; You have some sick offence within your mind, Which by the right and virtue of my place I ought to know of: and upon my knees I charm you, by my once-commended beauty, By all your vows of love, and that great vow Which did incorporate and make us one, That you unfold to me, yourself, your half, Why you are heavy; and what men to-night Have had resort to you,—for here have been Some six or seven, who did hide their faces Even from darkness.

Bru. Kneel not, gentle Portia.
Por. I should not need if you were gentle

Brutus,
Within the bond of marriage, tell me, Brutus,
Is it excepted I should know no secrets
That appertain to you? Am I yourself
But as it were in sort or limitation,—
To keep with you at meals, comfort your bed,
And talk to you sometimes? Dwell I but in the suburbs

Of your good pleasure? If it be no more, Portia is Brutus' harlot, not his wife.

Portia is Brutus' harlot, not his wife.

Bru. You are my true and honourable wife;

As dear to me as are the ruddy drops

That visit my sad heart.

Por. If this were true, then should I know this secret.

I grant I am a woman; but withal
A woman that Lord Brutus took to wife:
I grant I am a woman; but withal
A woman well-reputed,—Cato's daughter.
Think you I am no stronger than my sex,
Being so father'd and so husbanded?
Tell me your counsels, I will not disclose 'em:
I have made strong proof of my constancy,
Giving myself a voluntary wound
Here in the thigh: can I bear that with patience,
And not my husband's secrets?

Bru.

O ye gods,

Render me worthy of this noble wife! [Knocking within.

Hark, hark! one knocks: Portia, go in awhile; And by and by thy bosom shall partake
The secrets of my heart:
All my engagements I will construe to thee,
All the charactery of my sad brows.
Leave me with haste.

[Exit PORTIA.

Lucius, who's that knocks?

Enter Lucius with Ligarius.

Luc. Here is a sick man that would speak with you.

Bru. Caius Ligarius, that Metellus spake of.—

Boy, stand aside.—Caius Ligarius,—howl Lig. Vouchsafe good-morrow from a feeble tougue.

Bru. O, what a time have you chose out,

brave Caius,
To wear a kerchief! Would you were not sick!
Lig. I am not sick if Brutus have in hand

Any exploit worthy the name of honour.

Bru. Such an exploit have I in hand, Ligarius,

Had you a healthful ear to hear of it.

Lig. By all the gods that Romans bow before, I here discard my sickness? Soul of Romel Brave son, deriv'd from honourable loins! Thou, like an exorcist, hast conjur'd up My mortified spirit. Now bid me run, And I will strive with things impossible;

Yea, get the better of them. What's to do?

Bru. A piece of work that will make sick men whole.

Lig. But are not some whole that we must make sick? [Caius, Bru. That must we also. What it is, my

I shall unfold to thee, as we are going
To whom it must be done.

Lig. Set on your foot;
And with a heart new food I follow your

And with a heart new fir'd I follow you To do I know not what: but it sufficeth That Brutus leads me on. Bru. Follow me, then

Scene II.—Rome. A Room in Casar's Poloce.

Thunder and lightning. Enter CESAR in his night-gown.

Cas. Nor heaven nor earth have been at peace to-night:
Thrice hath Calphurnia in her sleep cried out, Help, ho! They murder Cæsar!—Who's within?

Enter a Servant.

Serv. My lord?
Cæs. Go bid the priests do present sacrifice,
And bring me their opinions of success.
Serv. I will, my lord.
[Exit.

Enter CALPHURNIA.

Cal. What mean you, Casar? Think you to walk forth?

You shall not stir out of your house to-day.

Czs. Czsar shall forth: the things that threaten'd me [see

Ne'er look'd but on my back; when they shall The face of Cæsar they are vanished.

Cal. Cæsar, I never stood on ceremonies, Yet now they fright me. There is one within, Besides the things that we have heard and seen, Recounts most horrid sights seen by the watch. A lioness hath whelped in the streets; And graves have yawn'd and yielded up their

dead:

Enter Lucius with wine and tapers.

Bru. Speak no more of her.—Give me a bowl of wine.—

In this I bury all unkindness, Cassius.

Cas. My heart is thirsty for that noble pledge.—

Fill, Lucius, till the wine o'erswell the cup; I cannot drink too much of Brutus' love.

[Drinks.

Bru. Come in, Titinius!

Re-enter TITINIUS, with MESSALA.

Welcome, good Messalal— Now sit we close about this taper here, And call in question our necessities.

Cas. Portia, art thou gone?

Bru. No more, I pray you.—
Messala, I have here received letters,
That young Octavius and Mark Antony
Come down upon us with a mighty power,
Bending their expedition toward Philippi.

Mes. Myself have letters of the self-same tenor.

Bru. With what addition?

Mess. That, by proscription and bills of out-

Octavius, Antony, and Lepidus

Have put to death an hundred senators.

Bru. Therein our letters do not well agree;

Mine speak of seventy senators that died

By their proscriptions, Cicero being one. Cas. Cicero one!

Mes. Cicero is dead,
And by that order of proscription.—
Had you your letters from your wife, my lord?
Bru. No, Messala.

Mes. Nor nothing in your letters writ of her?

Bru. Nothing, Messala.

Mes. That, methinks, is strange.
Bru. Why ask you? hear you aught of her in yours?

Mes. No, my lord.

Bru. Now, as you are a Roman, tell me true. Mes. Then like a Roman bear the truth I tell: For certain she is dead, and by strange manner. Bru. Why, farewell, Portia.—We must die, Messala:

With meditating that she must die once, I have the patience to endure it now.

Mes. Even so great men great losses should endure.

Cas. I have as much of this in art as you,
But yet my nature could not bear it so.

Bru. Well, to our work alive. What do you think

Of marching to Philippi presently? Cas. I do not think it good.

Bru. Your reason?
Cas. This it is:

'Tis better that the enemy seek us: So shall he waste his means, weary his soldiers, Doing himself offence; whilst we, lying still, Are full of rest, defence, and nimbleness.

Bru. Good reasons must, of force, give place to better.

The people 'twixt Philippi and this ground Do stand but in a forc'd affection For they have grudg'd us contribution:

The enemy, marching along by them, By them shall make a fuller number up, Come on refresh'd, new-aided, and encourag'd; From which advantage shall we cut him off If at Philippi we do face him there, These people at our back.

Cas. Hear me, good brother. Bru. Under your pardon.—You must note beside,

That we have tried the utmost of our friends,
Our legions are brimful, our cause is ripe:
That enemy increaseth every day;
We, at the height, are ready to decline.
There is a tide in the affairs of men
Which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune;
Omitted, all the voyage of their life
Is bound in shallows and in miseries.
On such a full sea are we now afloat;

And we must take the current when it serve Or lose our ventures.

Cas. Then, with your will, go on;

We'll along ourselves, and meet them at Philippi.
Bru. The deep of night is crept upon our

And nature must obey necessity; Which we will niggard with a little rest.

There is no more to say?

Cas.

No more. Good-night:

Early to-morrow will we rise, and hence.

Bru. Lucius, my gown. [Exit Lucius,
Farewell good Messala:—

Good-night, Titinius;—noble, noble Cassius, Good-night, and good repose.

Cas. O my dear brother!
This was an ill beginning of the night:
Never some such division 'tween our souls!

Let it not, Brutus.

Bru. Everything is well.

Cas. Good-night, my lord.

Bru. Good-night, good brother.
Tit. and Mes. Good-night, Lord Brutus.
Bru. Farewell, every one.

[Exeunt Cas., Tit., and Mes.

Re-enter Lucius with the gown.

Give me the gown. Where is thy instrument? Luc. Here in the tent.

Bru. What, thou speak'st drowsily!
Poor knave, I blame thee not; thou art o'erwatch'd.

Call Claudius and some other of my men;
I'll have them sleep on cushions in my tent.
Luc. Varro and Claudius!

Enter VARRO and CLAUDIUS.

Var. Calls my lord? [sleep;
Bru. I pray you, sirs, lie in my tent and
It may be I shall raise you by and by
On business to my brother Cassius.

Var. So please you we will stand and watch your pleasure. [sirs;

Bru. I will not have it so: lie down, good It may be I shall otherwise bethink me.—
Look, Lucius, here's the book I sought for so; I put it in the pocket of my gown.

[VAR. and CLAUD. lie down. Luc. I was sure your lordship did not give it me.

Treb. Cæsar, I will:-and so near will I [Aside. That your best friends shall wish I had been further.

Cas. Good friends, go in and taste some wine with me;

And we, like friends, will straightway go together.

Bru. That every like is not the same, O Cæsar.

The heart of Brutus yearns to think upon! Exeunt.

SCENE III.—ROME. A Street near the Capitol.
